THEATERS throughout New South Wales are affected by a strike of railway and tramway employees, coal miners and engineers, which has nearly paralyzed all traffic. Picture houses in the metropolitan area are very badly hit, as they depend almost wholly on the suburbs for their patronage. As there are no trams or trains after six o'clock each evening the public are staying at home, and as a consequence the attendance during the past week at all continuou houses have been very low indeed. Many country showmen are unable to get their films on time, and have had to show the same program twice.

The position is made more acute by the official announcement that restrictions will probably be imposed on the use of electric light and gas. Although many shows installed private plants during the coal strike of a few months ago, others did not, and the prospect is not at all bright.

Rumors have been current in Sydney during the past few weeks that an amalgamation was pending between the two big firms of Australasian Films, Ltd. (Union Theaters, Ltd.), and Waddington's Pictures, Ltd. It is hard to gauge just how much truth there is in the statement, as both firms concerned will not make any announcement. Australasian Films, Ltd., includes the smaller companies, West's, Ltd., Spencer's, Ltd., and The Greater J. D. Williams Amusement Company, these three concerns being known as Union Theaters, Ltd. Under their control are four of the largest continuous picture theaters in Sydney—Spencer's, the Lyric, Empress and Crystal Palace. Australasian Films, Ltd., are also the biggest importers of film in Australia, holding rights for Triangle, Vitagraph, World, Pathe and Chaplin productions, all of which are released at the company's city theaters. Waddinton's, Ltd., comprises a circuit of five shows, four of which are in the city proper, viz.: the Strand, Globe, Grand and Majestic. Its suburban house, the King's Cross, is of recent construction, and is one of the largest and most elaborate picture theaters in the state. Waddington's, Ltd., does not import any films, but Paramount features are always given first release at its houses.

"The Barrier" is having a tremendous success in the suburban theaters of Sydney, after a similar reception in the city, where it ran for three weeks.

Union Theaters, Ltd., has taken a long lease of the Theater Royal (Sydney), and will turn it permanently into a picture house, showing full program or special features. The first subject under the new regime is "The Whip," though owing to the strike this feature is not getting the crowds it undoubtedly would draw under normal conditions. Other subjects for early release at this theater are "The Manxman" and "The Deemster" "God's Man" and "Mothers of France."

Paramount's open booking policy has been very favorably commented upon by many exhibitors here, and the addition of William S. Hart and Enid Bennett to the Paramount roster of stars is also widely commented upon. Undoubtedly "Bill" is the best male drawing card in the picture business in this part of the world. The first Arbuckle-Paramount comedy, "The Butcher Boy," is a current release.

The Progressive Film Service, distributing Mutual productions in Australia, is living up to its name. Since the firm was started a few months ago the staff has been trebled, and other additions are likely to be made shortly. The firm has also built a very comfortable projection room for the service of exhibitors, and trade shows are given every week on Mondays and Thursdays. The projection room seats close on a hundred. A Power's 6B machine has been installed.

Some time ago the Police Censor Board prohibited the screening of the Metro film "Vanity" on the grounds that it showed a police inspector as a crook. This picture has now been passed, and is being screened under the title "A Slave to Fashion," the censors having insisted upon the change of name for reasons best known to themselves.

A film adaption of the well-known play "The Monk and the Woman" is being made by Rock Phillips for J. C. Williamson, Ltd. The role of "the woman" is taken by Maud Fane a very popular musical comedy star.

A two-part burlesque comedy entitled "An Interrupted Divorce" featuring Fred Bluett, the vaudeville artist, was released this month. This picture was directed by John F. Gavin and is very amusing.

Indian Notes

By S. B. Banerjea.

IT will be news to the readers of this paper that the majority of educated Indians look upon Rudyard Kipling, the well-known British writer, as a second rate author. Some days ago the proprietor of the Elphinstone Picture Palace screened Kipling's "The Light That Failed." In spite of alluring advertisements the attendance was not up to the Elphinstone mark. Several persons who sat by me openly declared that their money had been wasted. The moral is obvious.

"Prahtad Charitra," a Hindu mythological play dear to all Hindus, was screened at the New Cornwallis theater of J. F. Madan, lately. I regret to say that the film was pure rubbish. The acting and posing of the various actors and actresses were disappointing, while the film itself was hazy. Messrs. Patankar & Co., of Bombay, who have produced the film, can not be congratulated upon it. Phadka, who is responsible for "Sabitni Sat Yaban," a Hindu mythological play, was successful so far as produition was concerned. Madan should have sat among his "audience" to hear the unparliamentary language to which expression was being given when "Prahtad Charitra" was being screened.

Madan has lately, in competition with the Bioscope theater people, been showing "The Master Key" and "The Black Box." He has also screened "Peg of the Ring" in Meday to big crowds, as may be expected.

Madan is to be thanked for screening the following: "The Book Weekly," shown for the first time in India; "Blindness of Virtue"; "Migonette"; "America Prepared" (I regret to say this film was screened for a day only. It should have been screened for at least one week); "An American's Home," an excellent film for recruiting purposes; and Chaplin's "Shanghaied."

"Luke," "Heine and Louie," "Fatty," and certain other comic actors have become Calcutta's favorites. Chaplin is not liked. His "Recreation" (shown at New Cornwallis) pleased very few. Picture house proprietors have come to understand this, and I am not surprised to find that a Luke, or a Heine, or a Fatty film always figures on a program nowadays.

Madan has been showing an all-comic program every Friday during the last three weeks with success. Comics appeal to Indians. I have heard regular theatergoers express the wish to have a 30,000 feet comic film. It is not easy to produce a film of this character; but if some bold producer were to tackle the job he would not regret his act.

Cannot Messrs. Pathe or some other house arrange to produce a "Frenchman's Home" on the lines of "An American's Home?" Such a film will help to secure recruits, and incidentally reform the pacifists.

The Bijou Grand opera house has proved an instantaneous success. Amongst others it has shown "The Victory of Virtue," a moral play; "God's Witness," and several British successes. It has also shown "A Wife in a Hurry," one of the best comic films ever screened in India.

Darjeeling, the summer capital of the Bengal Government, has a bioscope theater, owned by Madan. Here one can see the latest Calcutta successes. There is room for two more bioscope theaters at Darjeeling. Some day an enterprising Britisher will open an up-to-date show and coin big money. Here is a tip for an enterprising American capitalist.

At the New Alexandra (Bombay) "The Circus of Death" has been screened. Arrangements have been made to show the serial, "The Purple Mask," shortly. The Royal opera house has shown "The Devil's Bondswoman."

At the Empire "The Pearl of the Army" will be screened very shortly. The exhibition of "Who's Guilty" series has been completed.

The Globe Cinema Co., of Rangoon, has shown "Second in Command," "The Dumb Girl of Portici," and "New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford." I wonder why Wallingford's adventures have not yet been shown in Calcutta. The Bioscope theater authorities should try to steal a march on Madan for once.

Hyderabad boasts a bioscope theater known as the New Aledandra cinema. Its management has shown "Peg o' the Ring," "The Prisoner of Abyss," "Between Fire and Sword," and several other films—very successfully.

M. D. Puri has opened a cinema show at Lahore under the name of the New Gaiety theater. The opening ceremony was presided over by a high government official. This is, perhaps, the first occasion on which a government official has opened a bioscope theater in India. Mr. Puri has arranged to screen the best films produced in England and America.

The Rangoon film censors are rather strict. It is not surprising, therefore, to learn that they have panned the following films: "The Crimson Stain Mystery," "Undine," and "Midnight at Maxim's." The Calcutta film censors have not objected to the exhibition of the latter film here, while "Undine" has been shown in Calcutta, Bombay and elsewhere without objection on anybody's part. This shows that a central board of film censors will have to be created one of these days to secure a uniformity in film screening orders.

A bill providing for the licensing of cinematograph theaters and the censorship of films will be introduced into the Imperial Legislative Council shortly. In view of the fact that bioscope theaters are being opened frequently in this country, an act regulating their conduct has been found necessary. In due course, as soon as possible, I will publish the text of the bill for the information of film manufacturers and others interested in the trade.

Opportunities in Alaska

What the Fans Like and What They Get in the Territory Where There is Neither Censorship nor Theater Tax.

By Arnold Marsh.

IN SPITE of the opinions of motion-picture producers it has always seemed to me that the people of Alaska are a decent and peaceable race. They may fight and murder each other and drink hootch by the gallon after I have gone to bed, but they don't show the effects of it the next day. They must be tough. If the motion-picture people hadn't let the cat out of the bag I'd have thought the favorite evening pastime in Alaska was going to the show.

Take this little town of Juneau for example. Its population is possibly five thousand. There are mining camps and other small towns near by, including Douglas, just across the narrow Gastineau Channel, but the total population of the district is probably not over ten thousand. This population is served by six motion-picture theaters. Five of them remain open during the summer, when the days are long and the population is reduced by the annual exodus of prospectors, cannery workers and fishermen and others who live in the towns during the winter. Of these six the largest, and indeed the largest in Alaska, is the Coliseum, with a seating capacity of over a thousand. Its nearest rival is the Palace, the only concrete fireproof theater in Alaska, which seats eight hundred, and both of these show houses are well worthy of any large city in the United States. The Palace, managed by John T. Spickett, who also owns the smaller Orpheum theaters of Juneau and Douglas, specializes in Fox and Vitagraph productions; while the Coliseum has recently adopted the policy of spreading its choice over a wide variety of films, and is now bringing more new special features north than any other. Artcraft, Metro, Triangle and Mutual are shown here, and state rights pictures also come from time to time. Recent showings have included "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," "Hell Morgan's Girl," "Ramona," "The Eyes of the World" "Purity," "Romeo and Juliet," "The Pride of the Clan," and "Joan the Woman" and "The Birth of a Nation" are coming. Pictures in which the leading ladies have appeared in Mother Eve costumes have been popular with the male population, but it is a matter of opinion whether they have added much to the theater's permanent popularity. Artcrafts and Chaplins draw the biggest crowds of any. One particularly pleasant feature of the Coliseum is the distance between the seats. People six feet long can sprawl in them comfortably. Paramount Pictures are shown at the Dream Theater of Juneau and the Lyric of Douglas. Prices of admission in Juneau and Douglas theaters run from ten cents for children to 15, 25 and 35 cents for adults, with special prices for special features, and sometimes free admission for children accompanied by parents.

W. D. Gross, owner of the Coliseum, also operates the Alaska Film Exchange. In the Southern Alaska coast towns the leading moving-picture magnate is Captain Lathrop who controls a chain of theaters in Cordova, Valdez, Seward and Anchorage. He generally sticks to the programs, showing Paramount, and not indulging much in features. The interior and northern portions of Alaska are not well supplied with shows. Fairbanks, on the Tanana River, and Nome, on the Bering Sea, are the only towns of any consequence. Fairbanks has a population of 3,500 and Nome has 4,000 in summer and half that in winter. They have their shows but they are too isolated to be able to afford the most up-to-date productions and the other towns of the north are so small that if they were in the thickly populated states of the East they would scarcely be marked on the maps as villages. There is no reason, however, why they should not have their shows. If manufacturers would release good films at low prices for these small and very isolated communities they might not make much, but they would make something where now they make nothing. What can be done even now was shown by the letter in the Moving Picture World not long ago from the manager of the theater at Candle, near the Bering Sea, a place with a population of slightly over a hundred. He could charge admissions of from twenty-five cents to a dollar for films that were not by any means the best. Entertainment of any kind is at a premium. The moving-picture show could be the social center of the community, but the industry seems scarcely to have realized its possibilities in this direction. An example of how it might be used came to my notice not long ago at Smither, B. C., Canada, a settlement about eight hundred miles from Vancouver and six hundred from Edmonton. The manager, a genial, friendly fellow, lit a roaring fire in the stove at about seven. There was a box office at the theater entrance, but he didn't generally use it. Chairs were drawn up, and as people dropped in they sat or stood around the stove and talked over the latest news. At eight o'clock it was time to start. The people handed over their quarters, the lights were put out and the show began. When it was over most went home, while some lingered for further gossip, treating the little theater as a kind of village club. The latest war bulletins were posted on the walls, and newspapers lay about for any one to read.

There is an opening for many similar shows in Alaska. Among the South Eastern Alaskan islands there should be a good chance for operators to make money by taking films to the one or two night stands, provided by canneries, mines and Indian villages that are too small to maintain nightly shows of their own. A gas-boat would do the trick. But the films should be good. People living face to face with reality are not so interested as they might be in little fluffy girlies trapseing around with big, beautiful millionaires. They want true to life acting, probable characters and plots, and a minimum of superfluous posing. They like comedies, provided that the comedies are funny. I have seen audiences in Alaska taking comedies as though they were tragedies. So they were in a way. But there is one kind of picture that should be carefully avoided. People may ask for Alaskan films, but don't let them have them. You can fool people in the States with this Alaska-made-in-California stuff, but if you bring it here you'll fool yourself.

Finally, apart from the scantiness and scatteredness of the population, Alaska is a movie paradise. There is no censorship and no tax. If any one wants to incur unpopularity let him suggest a motion-picture tax. The territorial government would probably be inclined to sudsidize motion-pictures rather than tax them, and it would be doing a good many isolated people a real service if it did. In the meantime the producers might come forward with special prints at low rates for little places.

BRABIN STRONGLY REPRESENTED IN FRANCE.

Charles J. Brabin, Metro director, who has recently completed his first production under the Metro banner, "The Adopted Son," has in the ranks of the English army twenty-six relatives named Brabin who are or have been combatants in the present war.

Three of Mr. Brabin's brothers are included in this number. A. E. Brabin, a member of the Fifth Liverpool Riflemen, was killed in action at Givenchy on the Marne. His brother Jack is driving a British tank across the wastes of "No Man's Land," and Edward is in charge of a fifteen-inch gun.

Hawaii Promotion Committee Protests.

Asks That Hawaii Be Truthfully Represented on Screen—Gives List of "Donts."

INFORMATION for the writers and producers of Hawaiian pictures is contained in a letter to the Inter-Ocean Film Company from the Hawaii Promotion Committee. The letter is at the same time a plea and a protest. It states that the natives of the Hawaiian Islands are as civilized as those of New York, and that there are no "wild women" on the beach at Waikiki or anywhere else. The letter asks that producers of motion pictures give Hawaii a square deal and contains a list of informative paragraphs about Hawaii, which follows:

"Hawaii, now a de facto territory of the United States, was formerly a monarchy ruled by Hawaiian Kings and Queens until 1893, when a republic was established until 1898.

"Hawaii is in the Pacific Ocean, 2,000 miles west of San Francisco. The Islands are a part of Polynesia.

"Hawaii is distinctly not any part or parcel of the Orient and has absolutely no savor of Orientalism, except that brought to its shores by the cosmopolitan population.

"Hawaii, in every part of the group, is modern. Education has been compulsory in the Islands for sixty years.

"As to dress, the Hawaiians of today and for the past forty years have dressed exactly as do the civilized people of any colonial country. When one walks through the streets of Honolulu it is practically the same as walking through the streets of Chicago. No primitive life in Hawaii. No people in the Hawaiian Islands wear grass skirts. In ancient times women wore skirts of tapa cloth, made from the fibre of trees and prepared like papyrus.

"Honolulu Harbor is as up-to-date as that of New York or San Francisco and is equipped with wharves the equal of those great cities. Eight miles away is a $20,000,000 naval station and along the coast are magnificent fortifications, established by the United States War Department. All the streets of Honolulu are paved and soon all will have permanent pavements of bitulithic or like material. Electric trolley lines traverse every part of the city and suburbs. Automatic telephones connect every part of the Island of Oahu and manual telephones connect every part of each of the other Islands. Hotels in Honolulu range from $2,000,000 structures to boarding houses. Honolulu has always had its opera house and lesser theaters, while no part of the Islands is without its motion picture theaters.

"Hawaiians today, as for the last fifty years, dress exactly like all the American residents here. In the Islands are no wild beasts. Therefore, it is ridiculous to show in photoplays elephants, lions, tigers, buffalos, giraffes, or any other creatures of tropical countries.

"The volcanoes of Hawaii are tame and are not feared. Only once in a lifetime have any of our volcanoes overflowed their banks. Remember this, that Hawaiian volcanoes are not shaped like Vesuvius—not cone-shaped. Kilauea, the greatest active volcano in the world, and which is reached by motor car to its very rim, occupies a caldron-like area on a level part of Hawaii, and the pit of Halemaumau sets like a thimble in the bottom of this great caldron. Our volcanoes do not shoot out scoria and rocks like Vesuvius and there are no explosions. Kilauea merely rises as a lake of heavy molten lava and never overflows its upper banks. Mauna Loa occasionally, or once in seven years, emits lava which flows down the mountain slowly and never scares anybody.

"'On the Beach at Waikiki' swimmers are seen just exactly as you find them at Long Beach, California, or Atlantic City, or Palm Beach, Florida, for that is the fashionable hotel district. People do not wander around the streets or the beach or meet travelers on incoming vessels wearing grass skirts, or generally appearing in so-called primitive dress. People one finds at the harbor front or 'On the Beach at Waikiki' or elsewhere, are just as you find them on any other harbor front or beach.

"The one thing preeminent about Hawaii is its superb climate, for each month is practically the month of May, with more sunshine and clear days throughout the year than almost any other part of the world; with gorgeous scenery from shore to mountain peak, in deep canyons and gorges, in semi-tropical foliage; wonderful automobile roads which belt every Island. Even the hula which is danced in motion pictures is wrong, for most of the 'artists' who essay to dance the hula for motion picture purposes give a coon version, instead of the rhythmic movements which may be seen in the Islands.

"Every scenario writer makes a mistake which does not meet with the approval of these very hospitable Hawaiian people. Every writer uses the word 'Kanaka' or 'Kanakas' in referring to the Hawaiians. This is wrong. If you should use in your subtitles the expression of 'Dagos' when you mean Italians, or 'Chinks' when you mean Chinese, or 'frog eaters' when you mean Frenchmen, or 'niggers' when you mean Negroes, then, of course, use 'kanakas' when you refer to Hawaiians. Down here the use of the word 'kanakas' to classify Hawaiians is considered insulting. It has been used generally in referring to the peoples of the South Seas, and Hawaii is not in the South Seas. By the bucko methods of old time trading vessels and of story writers it has become a more or less common phrase, but particularly for the people below the equator."

Myrtle Stedman Making Hit in Tour

Myrtle Stedman, who has been touring the United States and Canada, visiting the various picture theaters and appearing in person, has met with success wherever she has appeared during her trip. Starting in at San Diego, Cal., Miss Stedman worked the theaters on the Pacific Coast and then went on her way across the continent. She is expected soon to arrive in the East, where she will continue her personal appearances.

Myrtle Stedman.

Her way of making her appearance on the stage of the different theaters is entirely unlike anything that has ever been done by other players and is making her more popular with the thousands of those she addresses every week. Instead of the cut and dried short speeches she entertains her admirers with a song recital, after which she says a few words and takes her leave. Miss Stedman was educated for and sang on the operatic stage long before she thought of entering motion picture work. She possesses a splendid dramatic soprano voice and sings with a clarity of note and a depth of expression that brushes away any thought that she was forced into pictures because she lost her voice.

Miss Stedman's appearances in many theaters have had to be extended to permit disappointed patrons who were unable to get into the theater to have a chance to see their favorite. Miss Stedman expects to finish her tour in six weeks and return directly to work before the camera after a two weeks' vacation in the Catskills.

ASHLEY-FRASE.

Charles E. Ashley, Essanay director, is in New York on his honeymoon. He was married September 24 to Miss Gretchen Frase, daughter of Mrs. B. M. Frase, of 1259 Victor avenue, Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Ashley will be at home at 3100 Leland avenue upon their return to the Windy City.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

A TYPICAL Washburn picture was "The Golden Idiot," satisfactory in every detail. Some critics did not like the opening scene, but the house did, as evidenced in the laughter and smacking of lips when Bryant mixed that cocktail and the expression on Charlie Stine's face as he drank it. There was a good twist at the end, and all through it had the right combination of nonsense and romance. Fortunate indeed were the players in having the use of pretentious estates at Lake Geneva, Wis.

"Down to Earth" was simply great and one of the cleverest satires yet seen on hypochondriacs who were rounded up at a fake doctor's sanitarium and led forth to "bite the earth" on a supposed desert isle, in reality only a stone's throw from the city. Of course we expect much from Doug. Fairbanks, whose book "Laugh and Live" I recommend to all in the least inclined to pessimism. "Clever girl that Anita Loos is to write such a play," was the sybillant utterance from across the aisle.

"The Marriage Market" proved a good vehicle for June Elvidge and the well balanced company. One thing jarred. When the heroine is taken to the home of the man she really loved she was simply gowned, but suddenly she reappeared wearing an elaborate toilet when she was far from home and had not been out of doors. Why do the villains always close their hand and gaze on their finger nails—a silly habit too often seen.

Well, Alfred Vosburgh is some acquisition for the Greater Vitagraph company and his work is flawless in "The Divorcees" as a red blooded young minister planted in a Western country with scenery to burn. I had long admired his work, but here we find him in an atmosphere where ability counts. The play had novel features and some stunts.

"The Law of the Land" was the very best thing Petrova had done this season and the Paramount settings were great, also the photography, the star being given some dandy close-ups. J. D. Harrigan and T. Vivian deserve special mention, but the house went wild over the inspector and the glimpses of his family—twins and all. It was a big human touch. Wyndham Standing was some villain and Mahlon Hamilton, together with the child—a wonder—made up a cast hard to beat. This ought to go well, as it is full of thrills and a good version of the Broadhurst play.

"Skinner's Baby" is unique. Bryant Washburn is clean cut, good to look at and dependable on the human nature touches. It is easy to understand his pride in fatherhood and his joy in Bryant, Jr. Hazel Daly's Honey, too, is beyond criticism. These are the pictures the public wants as I size up the houses and hear the comments as we leave the theaters. Slapstick pleases, true, but the wholesome comedy element in the live pictures count for far more. Straight comedy such as the Drews, George Ade and a few others give us, fill the bill and leave no bad taste.

"The Kingdom of Hope" in the "Do Children Count" series is a gem and very timely—good for "repeats" anywhere, as it tells a big story of pacifists converted by kiddies who try to enlist and thus put to shame the loafing slackers. The line-up of these men at the recruiting station is one big stroke on the part of the director for Essanay. On the same program we had a new George Ade fable, based on the new rich. Words are needless in indorsing these clever comedies, for the titles alone carry them. Does Frankie Raymond never rest? We get her playing the slacker mother in "The Man Who Was Afraid," the homespun one in the Ade fable and in many of the best pictures put out b Essanay.

What a fine picture David Harum is for reissue? Have seen it three times and realize that the splendid acting of William H. Crane is thus immortalized on the screen. Here, too, we see Jack Pickford in one of his early pictures and Harold Lockwood and May Allison playing opposite, all these with the Famous Players.

"The Hidden Spring" suggests water, but turns out to be rebellion over abuse of a faithful dog, illustrating the love of dumb beasts versus hatred of them. The man's soul is aroused over the villain's kick and he suddenly awakes with good results. Harold Lockwood is one of the young leads. Herbert Standing was the proper sort of bad man, but the best work was done by H. F. Crane as the idiot who had been beaten into that state by the bad bold man. Lester Cuneo for a change has a "goody goody" part and Vera Sisson takes a close-up beautifully.

"By Right of Possession" went well here according to the pleased look upon faces round me. "Tony" Moreno is rightly a favorite. In this play we got a lot of Western atmosphere and I have never seen a coal mine pictured so naturally as this one. Director Wolbert knows his business, for this went over as the real stuff. Otto Lederer had a sympathetic part, but it seemed a bit overemphasized. Little Anderson was girlish and did her stunts in fine style. On the program were some weekly reels put out by Hearst-Pathe, which are nothing if not up to date. When "T. R." was shown at Oyster Bay, entertaining the Japs, there was prolonged applause illustrating his great popularity. The Sidney Drews have scored with "Her First Game," a scream, and one that all understand. Essanay's "Long Green Trail," a Black Cat feature, was a big hit, and we wonder how it is to end in the next chapter. Clever these were and greatly appreciated in these days of doubt and gloom over the war.

I saw two good pictures last night, "Master of His Home," with William Desmond, and "The Mysterious Miss Terry," featuring Billie Burke. Of the former much can be said in its favor all through, with its effete Eastern and rough Western atmosphere, a combination which dovetailed nicely. There was splendid mining stuff, including a flood which trapped the hero and heroine—all done plausibly. Eleanor Hancock as the snobbish mother was some beauty and took a close-up well, showing that she is a youngish woman in real life. What a good line Desmond has here—"I want a wife and a home, not a house with a woman in it"—some meaning in this, and well put over. The ending was splendid and caught the house with that dear baby in evidence. Then, too, the old man partner and the real Indian squaw were more than worth while.

Billie Burke gave us a good sort of picture, but Tom Meighan had little to do as the hero; in fact the rotund Walter Hiers seemed the favorite with the house. This was a comedy all through and we liked it—every bit. We get here some fine interiors of palatial residences, and the Fifth avenue bus scenes were realistic and well done. Certainly we will not forget the closing scene in a beautiful garden, the pair in silhouette reflected in the artificial lake.

Tony Moreno and Edith Storey were seen here last week in "The Captain of the Grey Horse Troop," and it was some picture. So was "A Roadside Impresario," with the inimitable George Beban, a trained bear, some bees in action, and atmosphere in plenty. Harrison Ford did effective work in a quiet way. Moreno in "A Son of the Hills" had an odd role, with pathos, humor and heroics thrown in. It was finely photographed.

The Henry Ford company is giving excellent travel pictures at the Fenway, taking us into unfamiliar places and along the highways by auto, though nowhere is his brand of car advertised. Last week we went out to Honolulu with him and saw how the ukeleles are made from start to the players manipulating the strings. It was most interesting and so are other industries shown on the screen.

Burton Holmes took us to Palm Beach the other night right among the millionaires in the automobiles on the promenade and down the jungle trail. He told how many millions were represented in a bathing scene, but we did not see many really happy faces, as maybe the water was cold and millions cannot warm the Atlantic unless it is harnessed. Anyhow the picture was well made, and everyone had a good laugh when Holmes turned on his speedo camera.

In "Paws of the Bear" we do not see Clara Williams often enough and here she has fine opportunity to register something worth while. There were stirring scenes having to do with bombs from airplanes. William Desmond has a compelling personality and at no time does he impress one that he is doing anything out of order in aiding a spy, and as it turns out he was "not guilty." We all like the suspense mystery stuff. A feature of this was the close-ups of Miss Williams, but why such big ornamental beds in staterooms of an ordinary liner? They got a laugh around me.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Home Made Layouts.

SEVERAL inquiries have been made as to the layout cuts reproduced in this department, particularly those of Ruffner, Fullerton and McCormick. Generally the inquiry requests information as to the address of the company supplying these. There is no such company, and, in the very nature of things, it is not likely that there can exist such a company, for many good reasons. In the first place, no two managers are apt to agree upon proportions. One manager may like three tens and another prefer four sevens. The same layout cannot accommodate both. Then, too, where two managers are in agreement as to space, they are apt to differ as to the phrasing, and the man who takes the trouble to get up a layout takes the trouble to so word his advertising as to bring the best results to his house. He knows how to deal with his particular clientele. He knows what will attract them. And what will bring them to him may keep people away from another house. Each manager must work for himself on the wording, and so each must do his own copy and prepare his own layout.

A layout, it should be understood, is the arrangement of material for the engraver; the combination of picture and hand lettering that goes to form the advertisement. It may be all layout, or the cut may be mortised to let in type. If you will turn to the issue of August 25, page 1215, you will notice a cut of the Modern, Boston. This is all hand lettered. The advertisement is drawn up and sent the engraver. When the cut comes back, it is sent the papers. On the next page the Park advertisement is all layout, but the Scollay Square Olympia has a combination. The house name is one cut and the play title is another. In between and below are sections of type. Here it would not pay to mortise the cut, for then the entire surface of the cut would be charged for, where something less than half the area is cut. The Orpheum advertisement in the next column is a mortise, the O being part of the cut, and the space where the type is being cut away. As all cut matter is charged by the square, the house has to pay the price of the full square for the cut and an extra charge for the mortise. The cut is made as an oblong as wide as the measure and as deep as the O. All that space is the cut. Then the cut is sawed away to get an L-shaped block and is used repeatedly in connection with the type announcement. A better example of mortising is found in the issue for August 11, page 927, the advertisement for "The Easiest Way." Here, at the top of the two advertisements shown, are bits of text that show whiter than the rest, because here an oblong opening was sawed in the cut, into which type slugs can be dropped.

All of this is probably stale information to the majority of the readers of this department, but the minority is invited to sit in. It should be remembered that the cut layout differs from the advertising layout. A cut layout is the matter you want made into a cut. An advertising layout may be merely this, or it may be cut and copy. In either case, the layout is merely the matter laid out as it is to be made. We are talking now of cut layouts and how to make them, since that is what we started to explain.

The simplest form of a layout is a frame. This is not part of a special advertisement as a rule, but merely the enclosure designed to hold the advertisement apart from the rest of the paper. This is often made up of stock border material, obtained from the type foundry, the usual rule work of a job office or rule and ornament in combination. You can find plenty of material for frames in magazines, particularly those making a specialty of printing page portraits of theatrical or photoplay stars. Be careful, in using these, that the magazine is not copyright, for then the copyrights protects all the material, and it is barely possible that the owner of the copyright might make trouble—it's not probable, but it is best to play safe.

In selecting frames choose as a rule those with a few bold lines rather than those with a mass of intricate shading. You want something that will throw into prominence your announcement, not something that will overshadow it. If the frame is tinted or filled in, you can have a bromide enlargement made by your local photographer. Ink in with drawing ink the lines you wish to retain. Then have the print bleached. The chemicals will take out the color from the photograph but will not affect your inked lines. Now you have the cut copy ready and all that is necessary is to size it and send it to the engraver.

But sizing is not such a simple matter as it seems. In the first place, remember that you mark the exact size of the cut. You do not say, as a rule, to make it one column wide, nor two, nor three. Tell just how wide, for there are two standard column widths—thirteen ems and thirteen and a half. Measure your space. If your local papers use both measurements, then size to the narrow column and waste the twelfth of an inch on each column of the other. But if you order a cut made twenty-six ems wide and they make it just twenty-six ems, it will not fit the column space, for you must allow a slight margin for column rules. You do not mark the cut 4⅓ inches wide, but rather a flat four inches. Look at the cuts on these pages. They look well because they are slightly undersized. The column width is 3½ inches, but the cuts are marked 3¼ inches. You can mark only one measurement unless you are expert at figuring. You cannot indicate both measurements. You cannot say that a cut must be four inches wide and three deep, unless your drawing is precisely in this proportion. You can, however, mark both measurements if you do not mind sacrificing a portion of the copy.

For original work the best way is to draw to scale. Suppose you have in mind a cut to be four inches wide and six deep. You can have a layout eight inches wide and twelve inches deep, or sixteen wide and twenty-four deep, and it will come out right. But suppose that the foundation of your layout is a strip of illustrative matter 13 11/32 inches wide, and you want it to be just the width of the finished cut. Take a sheet of cardboard and mark on it the square 16 by 24. Now run a line diagonally from the lower left-hand corner to the upper right-hand corner, being very exact. Put the strip of material against the left-hand edge just where the upper right-hand corner will cut that diagonal line. Be certain that the strip is all square with the work, and if you draw a line from the intersection to the lower edge, fill in as you like and mark your cut four inches wide with the assurance it will also be six inches deep. Or you can work it another way. Mark the exact size of the cut, extending the lower and the left-hand lines along the paper. Now run your diagonal through from the left-hand corner through the upper right-hand corner and as far beyond as you like. Draw in the upper and right-hand lines to cut this diagonal, and you cannot possibly go wrong as to size.

Now, just a word as to cuts. There are two kinds of cuts—line and half tone. Line cuts reproduce the lines. Half tones cut all lines into tiny dots. The closer the dots together the cleaner the work, if the proper sort of paper is used, but with quick work on newspapers it is not practicable to have these dots closer than 65 to the inch and more often 50. This is the 50 or 65 screen of the manufacturers' announcements, or the "coarse" or "newspaper" screens. In planning your own work it is better to stick to line cuts, since many offices ruin cuts with poor ink and bad presswork, and, with the cost of ink and paper going up, we are not going to get better ink or paper in our newspapers for some time to come. With a line cut you can get a straight black or a straight white. If you want any shade of gray, you must cross-hatch or use stipple, which is tiny dots. The larger the dots or the closer together they are, the darker the gray. Most of this stippling is done with a benday machine, but a benday means careful handling, and the machine is expensive; so it is better to plan to get your results with straight black and white.

The foundation can be a cut from the advertising pages of this paper, if the advertisement is printed on white stock, but the most attractive drawings are generally on colored paper, and you will not get good results unless the color is a light blue. Any shade of red or green or yellow stock will not work well. If you are particularly desirous of getting hold of such a cut, you can do it with orthochromatic plates, but this will increase the cost materially, since it necessitates making a plate and an enlargement from the plate and using a costly plate and extreme care in the dark room. Black and whites may be more easily enlarged, and you can learn to do this at home or encourage some enthusiastic amateur to do it for you. Whatever you decide upon as the feature of your layout should govern the general size of the layout. Scale as described and paste down your main illustration, using glue or a stiff library paste. Often you can get lines of type from the paper or from the company advertising to serve as lettering for the main title. You can, if you wish, have the smaller banks (or sets of lines) set up and printed and paste these in their proper places in the layout. The pasted edge will not show in a line cut. They will in a half tone. The special house lettering can be printed up for you in various sizes and pasted on, just as you see in the example for "The Easiest Way," already referred to. Evidently all of these Circle theater spaces are pasted in on the drawing, instead of being painted in. It is quicker and better. If you can connect with some fancy letterer who is willing to do plain block lettering instead of showing how fancy he can get, you can have an all hand-made layout, but unless you can get plain, legible letters, it is better to trust to the pasted sheets. They look better and are as cheap as mortising. If you can turn back to page 1777 of the June 16 issue, you will see in the Triangle program cut how pasted slips differ in half-tone work. Here the cast was printed and pasted on, and you will note the difference in tone. Line cut does not matter. If you prefer the mortise, have these mortises made to em measurements. It makes it easier for the printer to get the type in, since he will not have to cut special leads.

You are not confined to the printing of the manufacturers for layout material. Often small-design wall paper will give good results, and book illustrations or anything in line can be used. You can get a good border for a "heart" title by buying a couple of boxes of the heart-shaped stickers sold for progressive euchre score cards. Get the red in preference to the gold ones and paste these on the border or scatter through the layout. Make a practice of cutting out all sorts of material wherever you see it. In time you will have a fine collection of stuff, and with a little brush work you can turn out some really artistic work. As an example, the Powers and Simplex advertisements will give you small motion-picture machines. The Duhem ad. has a still better cut along these lines. In the August 11 issue is shown a Metro page with an oval in black and yellow border. The oval reads "A riot wherever shown." This aptly refers to the Slacker, but you can cut it out and use it for any attraction you may happen to be running that will stand the endorsement.

You don't have to do the work yourself. Get some clever boy or girl to show how. Point out that this will be good experience and may lead to a regular job some time, and you'll have the youngster working hard to make good for himself and you. But guard against over elaboration. Remember that the best advertisement consists of one striking attractor, one striking argument, the house name, the date, and the title of the picture. If you play these up properly, you'll have no room for anything else. If you have more room, you are either crowding the material portion of the advertisement, or you are wasting space.

Get a nicely proportioned layout. Three nines seems to be a favorite, but unless you are taking a half or quarter page, the safe rule is to have the space three deep to two wide—which is why three nines (6½ by 9 inches) works so well.

If you want to use a small half tone in a large cut, have the half tone made separately and tacked to the cut and allow room for a margin of metal by which the cut may be tacked down. Then you pay half-tone price for the screen cut and line price for the rest of the layout. It saves money and at the same time looks better.

This is merely a suggestion of the lines along which to work and by no means intended to exhaust the subject, but from this the small-town exhibitor can work to get layout advertising that is as good as the costly work of the expert artist, since much of it is the work of the big men pasted onto the home-made layout. If you try the scheme, send in the results.

Booming Skinner's Baby.

About as neat and complete a scheme as can be asked was worked by E. C. Bostic, of the Merrill, Milwaukee, for Skinner's Baby. The lobby display was charming, inexpensive, and striking. A two-side backing was built and covered with nursery wall paper, a small window adding to the effect, though this was not really necessary. On the wall was a placard announcing—

A Joyful Message
William Manning Skinner
Bryant Washburne and Honey Skinner
Hazel Daly wish to announce the arrival of
William Manning Skinner, Jr.
SKINNER'S BABY
They will all appear in the latest
Skinner Photoplay
Skinner's Baby
One week Commencing Sunday, Aug. 5th.

This, as can be seen, was illuminated and neatly framed, and framed pictures of Mr. Washburn and Miss Daly are found on the wall. In a cradle a large doll was placed, with a card reading, "I am Skinner's Baby," and by the basket on the table was an announcement that the furnishings were supplied by a certain store. Just "Courtesy of Ed. Schuester Co.," but probably it paid the rental of the stuff. Note the bird cage at one side and the flower basket at the other. These are not alone for ornament but to define the limits of the set. All of the newspaper advertising followed the same lines of announcing the approach of the kiddie, and ten thousand cards were sent out. These were a good quality postcard, specially printed for announcing births—a floral design with a sleeping infant and a watchful cupid, done in imitaton of water color and properly printed up. With the house additions, the entire card reads:

"To announce
'SKINNER'S BABY'
Name, William Manning Skinner, Jr.
Date, August, 1917.
Weight, 8 pounds.

Mr. Skinner (Bryant Washburn) and Mrs. Skinner (Hazel Daly) and Baby Skinner will be seen in the photoplay 'Skinner's Baby' at the Merrill Theater, week commencing Sunday, August 5th."

On the address side, in a good imitation of handwriting, were the words "It's a boy." It is all comparatively simple and all decidedly effective. It does not take much money, comparatively speaking, but it does take brains.

Where Are They?

What has become of
Walter H. Brooks,
S. E. Wall,
Frank Montgomery,
George Bleich,
Tom North?

A Calorific Moon.

Lately we ran quite a string of Ralph Ruffner's cut-outs, with one of Douglas Fairbanks. Now Ruff has been at it again to make business for the Liberty, Spokane, and the cut shows a Fairbanks cut-out before and after being Ruffed up. They might have mussed his hair up a little, at that. This bears out what we said lately: that the releasing company must suit the entire crowd and not the specialists. Not many exhibitors who already had a straight cut-out of Fairbanks would buy a special for Wild and Woolly, and we think that this home made fix-up will attract far more attention from patrons than would the lithograph. Next time Ruff wants to fix up Fairbanks he might get some crepe hair or some oakum and put on a practical beard. It would be funnier still. Then with some "real" chaps he would make still more talk. Ruff also sends in three advertisements and this comment:

THIS FROM MAT FURNISHED BY ARTCRAFT. THE TWO NINES AND TWO TENS ARE OURN. GUESS WHICH BANGS ONE IN THE EYE QUICKEST.

BUSINESS? LET US BRAG. YESTERDAY 100 IN THE SHADE AT FOUR O'CLOCK. AT NINE P. M. 300 IN THE MOONLIGHT TRYING TO GET IN. ORDINARILY WE COULDN'T FILL THE HOUSE WITH SMOKE, MUCH LESS TAXPAYERS, THIS KIND OF WEATHER. IT'S A SHAME WHAT ADVERTISING WILL DO, TO SAY NOTHING OF THE STAR ONE BACKS IT UP WITH.

The example on the left is done from engraver's proof and stands out better because the cut copy was better than the others. Clearly the sketch here is better than one supplied by Artcraft (that in the middle), but the Artcraft cut will be more generally useful to the exhibitors. The "Giggle Roundup" as a catchline for a Western is more than good. The black ground throws up the lettering well. Spokane surely must have some warm moons if it is a hundred in the shade in the afternoon and three hundred in the moonlight. But Ruff hits a gigantic truth when he speaks of what advertising of the right sort will do.

All But.

Jay Emanuel, in advertising The Easiest Way in his Philadelphia houses, announces it as

The Play that pleased the entire country—both on stage and screen, with the exception of The State Board of Censors.

Also he explains that the dark cards of which we spoke lately are merely proofs and not the stuff sent out. He intended to explain that in a letter he was going to write next day, but Jay is busy now. His wife is at the shore and technically he is commuting to Atlantic City, but actually he spends half of the time inventing reasons why he could not get down the night before, and Jay is too newly married to be good at that sort of thing offhand—though he is getting a lot of practice. He sends a clipping from the London papers from which it appears that the Kid Matinee is running over there with a matron in charge of the kiddies, who sit by themselves. "Crimes and horrors" must not be shown on these occasions under penalty of having the license revoked.

Famous Dancer Announced.

using for the head type a full face the same size as the Roman body type. This will work better and will permit the use of more house stuff. The program does not work to its full capacity unless it does more than advertise film. It is more important by far to advertise the house. Mr. Ziegler gets a neat layout and the program looks real, but his letter shows he knows more is needed.

Art-craftiness.

Here are a couple of squibs from Artcraft Advance that are worth thinking over:

> Walk past your own lobby some evening, Mr. Theater Owner, and decide whether you would go in, if you were John Smith instead of yourself. And if not, why not? You may get some good hunches.
> There was once a reporter on a small-town paper who didn't turn in a story on a big fire because, he said, everybody in town was there. But the paper printed two columns. Everybody in town may have seen your picture theater, Mr. Exhibitor, not once, but many times—still you'd better use the newspaper to tell them more about it.

All of this has been said before, but it cannot be said too often. If you live in a three thousand town, the chances are that a thousand possible patrons have never been in your house. They know it's there; they may know what you have, but they do not go. Don't be content that they know you have a theater. Do not rest until they are as familiar with the inside as they are with the outside. If you are hungry, you do not eat two-thirds of your dinner. You want it all. Be the same way about your patronage. Get it all—all there is in town and within auto distance in the country. These two items are more closely connected than is apparent on the surface. Tell everyone where you are and what you have, and if some do not come, try and look at your house with the eyes of an outsider and find out why some do not come. Forget your pride of possession for the time being and try and find intelligent fault.

Bagging the Business.

A friend of the department sends in a paper bag he met up with in Sayville, L. I. It is a small bag of the sort they use in fruit stores, and it is printed up:

Don't Forget to See
vs.
JOHN DOE
NOVELTY THEATER
Wed., Aug. 29th
George Poulakis
High-Grade Peanuts

The scheme of putting advertising on grocer's bags is by no means a new one, but look at the new angles of this. In the first place, probably a comparatively small number are printed up with the title of a forthcoming production. The bag was used the first week in August for an attraction at the end of that month. Sayville has a large vacation population. A vacation population has time to eat peanuts and go to picture shows. Put the picture advertising on the peanut bags and it reaches just the class of persons who are most likely to have the time and the money for the picture. Put the same advertising on the grocery bags and not one-tenth of this list would be reached. This scheme is by no means new, but this particular application is. It reaches a select list of patronage at no greater cost. The old idea, plus brains, becomes worth ten times as much as it was before and at no greater cost. And note that the idea was so good as to impress a summer visitor to the point of sending it in, showing that it worked.

Picking Out Nights.

From many angles we like the idea advanced by A. L. Middleton, of The Queen, De Queen, Ark., in his program. The copy will serve others who like the same thing:

YOU MUST BE SERVED

> If you want comedies, we have them, three nights a week.
> If you like serials, we have two a week—on Tuesday and Thursday—and the very best ones produced.
> If you like features, we have three each week—"Queen Theater Specials." Each one selected and each one with an appealing story and a famous star.
> There is a night or two, or three nights, each week—remember that we run the Queen for you and the other people that like the same thing you like in the way of entertainment.
> We want you to read the Herald carefully and pick the particular programs that you like best and come on those nights.
> We want you to be pleased.
> The divided time basis on which we run the Queen enables everyone to see just the kind of program they want to see, and on the same night each week. Whatever kind of picture you like.

This is a good scheme for encouraging regularity of habit, and if well worked will result in a rough division of the patronage by nights, but, on the other hand, there is danger, if this schedule is too heavily emphasized, of suggesting that on certain nights certain patrons will not care for the bill at the Queen. It will be well to temper the notice to suggest that while the bill is always good, those seeking a particular form of entertainment are most likely to be suited on particular nights. In the same program Mr. Middleton offers his specials for the ensuing four weeks. He has Fox on Monday, Paramount on Wednesday and Vitagraph on Fridays. Instead of making a chronological schedule, he runs the four Mondays, then the four Wednesdays and lastly the four Fridays. Working from the booking sheets, it is easier this way than to orient the calendar, but it will slightly confuse and is not as good a scheme. All calendars should be chronological to be effective.

N. B.

This clipping from Charles Decker's Movie Fan, the organ of the Majestic, Grand Junction, Colo., can be handled even better as a public announcement with a huge "Take Notice" in a two-inch letter and the rest in eighteen or twenty-four-point, set without display. The stuff should be posted and not used as a throwaway, if possible getting it on the recognized bulletin boards for such material.

TAKE NOTICE.

> City officials from the Mayor down to the Police Department, the Fire Department with the trucks and ladders and hose, all the Doctors in the City—if you are interested in saving the lives of our citizens, Manager Decker urgently requests your presence at the Majestic theater on Thursday evening, August 9th, when "Fatty" Arbuckle makes his appearance in "The Rough House."
> Many of our patrons are going to laugh so hard—so much—so continuously, that they are going to shake the seats loose from the floor—the plaster from the walls and the beams from the ceiling. There is going to be a Rough House at the Majestic.
> All city officials must come prepared to quell the riot. Chief Hynes, with all the volunteers, will be needed to rescue the Movie Fans. Doctors, come prepared to take care of "laugheritis" cases. The full force of hospital nurses will be on duty to receive the patients. Ambulances, express wagons and fire trucks will rush the patients to the hospital. There will be no need of undertakers or laughing gas.
> "Fatty" Arbuckle in "The Rough House" is his best—better than his best. There's not a quiet minute from the moment his beaming countenance first flashes before you until you get it—sad but true—"The End." This forewarning frees the theater management from all claims of damage.
> There's going to be a riot of fun and laughs at the Majestic Thursday, August 9th.
> Forewarned means to be forearmed. SO COME PREPARED TO QUELL THE DISTURBANCE AND SAVE LIVES.

This should be given a two-line signature, the name of the manager with "Manager Majestic Theater" below to suggest an official signature until the curious come close enough to read. It will work well in towns and the smaller the place the better. Even the cities can swing the idea. It can, of course, be used for any other comedian. The idea is good and well handled.

Another Maine Live One.

Joseph Emery sends in a program of the Star, Bar Harbor, to show that not all Maine exhibitors are dead. It is an attractive card in black on grey stock 3½ by 6 with dated days and all the other marks of real knowledge, and the pictures are only six or eight months old—which is pretty recent for the eastern part of the state, apparently, though they did have "The Crisis" at Winthrop the other day, though they kept it a town secret. They billed the town well, but they did not send word up and down the line. And they did so much business with the picture that it should encourage them to try it again.

Where's Mr. Wall?

Please page Mr. S. E. Wall, of Plane City, Ohio. He's been silent much longer than we like to have him. And what about J. W. Llewellyn, of the one-piece coat-and-suit hanger?

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. By mail, postpaid, $2.00. Order from nearest office.

Moving Picture World, 17 Madison Ave., New York

Schiller Building, Chicago, Ill. — Wright and Callender Building, Los Angeles, Cal.

The Photoplaywright

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

That Brain Polisher.

COMPARATIVELY few tackled the last brain polisher. Several regular correspondents admitted that they had not tried because they did not know the story of the play, and others felt they could not make a farce-comedy out of a tragedy, the basis of which was a murder. Several did not read the paragraph correctly and sought to make a travesty of the original play instead of a farce derived from the elements of the story.

It was not for a moment supposed that a bona-fide murder could figure in a farce, which was why it was required that a farce-comedy be selected. The object of the polisher was to show that a farce could be made from any material, even though it be tragedy in the original. But two correspondents got this idea and sent in stories that were really worthy of consideration. One was later sold and we hope to hear a similar report from the other. Both of these stories were modern. Neither made any effort to adhere rigidly to the original, neither used paraphrases of the original names, and the two stories were as unlike each other as they were unlike Othello, and yet each was the result of trying to get a farce-comedy out of Othello.

It is scarcely possible to suggest Othello and a farce-comedy at the same time. Those who stuck to Othello were wrong. Most farces done in costume become travesty, even where an effort is made to write farce. Farce should be intimately modern and not dressed in the costumes of an earlier period. Comedy lends itself better to costuming and there are some few good farces in old-style dress, but the most successful average farce is of today and here, since farce is a stressing of comedy and depends for its appeal largely upon a knowledge of the conditions stressed.

But one thing is even more noticeable than a failure to grasp the idea. This is the general lack of ability shown in the synopses. Today most plays sell on the synopsis only. Continuities are not read, even where they are sent. The synopsis must do all of the work. In reading the replies it was our habit first to read the story rapidly, giving it the same consideration an editor would. Put to this test there was but one of the stories that was so clearly framed that we could grasp the idea, and so well told that we were interested to the point of a second reading. Some of the others were so confused that it was not possible to follow them even after a second reading. Perhaps the worst was a sketchy affair that told little or nothing of the story. It was a series of disjointed lines telling that something had been done rather than explaining what had been done. And the author wrote that the synopsis was an endeavor to supply the story in snappy lines that would be useful for leader material. We asked for a synopsis, not for clever leaders. We wanted to know how the author reframed the story rather than the leaders he would use for the new version. The synopsis read more like a weak attempt to imitate George Ade than an effort to sell a story. If you can, now and then, suggest a clever line than can be lifted for a leader, by all means write it in, but first of all tell your story—fully. Tell the editor that John puts a fire-cracker under Henry's chair. Don't merely write "John plants a mine" without telling whether a cannon cracker or dynamite is used. The editor may appreciate clever lines, but what he is buying is story and not subtitle. The next brain polisher is going to be along the lines of a synopsis contest. It will be announced later.

We are distinctly disappointed in the result of this contest. Perhaps it was not a fair test to select a play like Othello, but the average writer should know the story of Othello as part of his general training, and should know that Othello, as it stands, cannot be made into farce, but that the elements of the suspicious husband, the crafty rival and the innocent heroine can be worked in a thousand ways.

Because the two that did show cleverness are so clever that it would be unfair to print them, no winner will be reproduced, since that might spoil a sale. It is easy to suggest, however, a number of points that might be incorporated into a story. Suppose that Iago sees Desdemona buying a pair of stockings in a department store and rouses Othello by describing these, or perhaps he sneaks upon the family wash on the line in the back yard and tells how Desdemona has her initials worked in blue silk on her undies. We tread close upon the heels of Cymbeline, but we get the jealousy motive. Perhaps Desdemona drops her garter and Iago picks it up. Perhaps we switch the story. Othello finds a garter and slips it in his pocket. Iago sees him, knows to whom the garter belongs, knows that Desdemona knows too, and tells her that Othello is carrying a mark of his lady's favor. The possibilities are vast, but most writers followed a form of Otheilo as it might have been played by Ham and Bud or at the Keystone studios, and either form is the farce required.

A thousand stories might be written from Othello. But three were written, the two original ones and a number of paraphrases. It is a poor record.

Suppose that Othello gave Desdemona a handkerchief and that she later found and purchased a number like them. We make this the basis of a story and get:

Otto, a jealous husband, gives Dessie, his wife, a handkerchief for a farewell present as she is about to start for the shore on her summer vacation. He pleads with her not to flirt with anyone at the beach, and she promises, but Dessie is good looking and a sight for sore eyes in a bathing suit, and soon she has made the limited number of young men at the beach her victims. She gets all of the attention and the other women sit on the porch and knit and talk about Dessie. One of them learns her husband's address from a letter she sends, and writes Otto that Dessie is behaving scandalously. Otto comes to the shore with blood in his eye. Meanwhile, a local store-keeper has admired the handkerchief Dessie wears over her bathing cap, and has the design duplicated with the idea that the women will all buy them. The women scorn them, but the young men all ouy the handkerchiefs in compliment to Dessie. Otto lands at the shore and almost the first thing he sees is a young man wearing Dessie's handkerchief. He violently assaults him, but gets knocked down. The man passes on, and when he comes to Otto starts out for his man, and runs into another handkerchief-carrier. Once more he gets knocked down, and the third man gives him a black eye. Otto is a bit groggy by now, and when he sees two men, each carrying Dessie's handkerchief, he charges them both and gets badly beaten up. He manages to get to Dessie's boarding house, where the piazza hens all assure him that the half has not been told. He hurries off to the beach and the first thing he sees is Dessie, coming out of the water and the handkerchief is bound around her head. Artfully, she gets around Otto, assures him that she has been true, and that the jealous cats are the cause of his being beaten up, so Otto slips back to the hotel and spies the sprinkler on the lawn. Detaching it, he wets down the row of jealous women while Dessie looks on and applauds, and while the half-drowned scandal-mongers are changing to dry clothes Otto and Dessie move on to a new summer resort.

That's not the best that can be done, but it is a sample of what can be done, and polished up later.

Names.

Be careful in selecting your names. Do not let them sound too much alike, or confusion will arise. Often a story will be sent back that might be regarded more carefully were the characters more individually named, and perhaps were fewer of them named. Too many names are apt to be confounded with each other. Names too much alike or not possessed of individual sound are apt to be confusing. In either case your story is not readily understood on a first reading and never passes to a second perusal. Take pains with your literary baptisms.

Doing It Wrong.

Lately a young woman wrote a play for a certain star. She sent it to the star. The assistant editor sent it back. Now she indignantly wants to know by what "right" the assistant editor opened the star's mail. She did think, after all the pains she took, that the star might write her himself, or at least have his secretary do so, "as the play was much better than the stuff in which he is generally seen."

In the first place she had no business bothering the star. If you want to sell a play sell it to the people employed to select and purchase plays. The star is too busy acting to be able to also serve as script editor, and he is probably pretty thoroughly sick of the man-crazy girls who are using their poor little plays as an opening for a flirtation. If a more intelligent girl sends in a better play, she gets classed with the rest, and her play is sent to the proper department for handling. Even if you pay a quarter to your local management each time Bill Hart or Douglas Fairbanks is screened, you are not entitled to five dollars' worth of time from either of those gentlemen, and you cannot imagine how it cheers them to have you explain that your play is better than the junk they have been appearing in. That helps a lot to sell a play; particularly when the letter and script come to the men who really pick out the plays.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost, will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

A Little Trouble.

J. M. Lenney, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, agitates his typewriter in setting forth the following:

> I have all the editions of your handbook, but cannot seem to find any solution of the trouble I have with my one machine. Neither can the union operator I have employed. The trouble lies in my Powers Six mechanism. It was running all right until I took it apart to put in a new cross and spindle. Since putting it together the letters at the extreme right and left of the screen (not top, bottom or center) are shaded, or in other words, seem to have shadows on their sides. If you can tell me the cause and remedy I will certainly deem it a very great favor, and if you will accept anything for your trouble, please send bill and I will remit.

There is no charge for anything which may be legitimately answered through this department, up to the possible capacity of the department, but for prompt reply there should be two two-cent stamps enclosed for carbon copy of the department answer. This two two-cent stamp demand may seem a rather small matter for me to sputter about, but the items of postage, paper, stenographer service, etc., is borne by yours truly, personally, and in the course of a year it amounts to more ten dollar bills than you would even begin to imagine. A dollar's worth of stamps, for instance, lasts about as long as the proverbial snowball in His Satanic Majesty's dominions, and, all told, four cents does not quite cover actual cost of a carbon copy. And now as to your trouble. It sounds to me as if you had done something which is causing the film to buckle as it passes the aperture, thus throwing the title out of focus at its sides. But this can hardly be, else you could focus the sides by throwing the center out; also it would affect the picture the same as the titles. But I cannot even imagine anything in connection with the intermittent which could or would produce the effect you describe on the screen. I have given this particular thing considerable thought, and am stuck. The thing seems impossible, unless you have done something to your lens. Two faint finger marks, or oil smears at just the right places, would do the trick, but this, too, seems impossible, in that you would have found them. Can any of our department friends offer suggestions? Meanwhile, let Neighbor Lenney go carefully over things and see if he has not omitted some seemingly unimportant thing from his letter, which really is the germ of the whole matter.

Well I'll Be ————!

Joseph Fisher, Missouri, writes as follows:

> Here are a few questions I would like answered, but do not want them published in the department. I have a funny manager. He does not want me to correspond with any one not connected with the operating game; not that he does not want me to learn, for he does. I am inclosing four cents for carbon copy of letter. The questions are, first: Where is there an operators' local I can join? Second: I have an old type General Electric Mercury Arc Rectifier which is located in a room adjoining one side of the operating room. I would like to have some control over it from operating position. Could I join wires one and three? (see drawing). Third: Is there a speedometer made for moving picture machines? Could an automobile speedometer be connected to a projector, and if so, where?

In the first place, Missouri, four cents for a carbon copy of a personal letter I might write you means nothing in my infantile life. When my secretary writes an article for the department she can, with slight additional trouble and expense, make a carbon, thus killing one stone with two birds. If I write you a personal letter, without charging the regular fee, then it is up to me to write every one of the many thousands of operators and managers who may want a personal reply, and where would I get off at, huh? As to your manager objecting to your writing to any one not connected with the operating game, why I was under the apparently mistaken notion that I was very muchly connected therewith. However, I would like to humbly inquire as to what the devil business it is of your manager whom you write to or don't write to? Better look out or he'll be wanting to install himself as your wet nurse next. Does he spank you when you stay out late nights, or pick out your girl friends for you? Well, well, well! Does he look over the newspapers and censor them before he lets you read them? Well, well, well!

First: You are eligible to the local which is nearest to you in distance. Write headquarters I. A. T. S. E., 107 West 46th street, New York City, as to what union that is. Second: No. If you join the two wires in question (if I understand your sketch rightly) you will cut your regulating reactance. You might extend all the regulating reactance contact wires to similar contacts placed on suitable base on wall of operating room in front of you when in operating position, but that would be a big job, and one you would most likely have trouble with. Third: No. Also there is no need for one. Your speed may only be rightly judged by watching the screen and causing the actors thereon to move in the most natural, lifelike manner possible. The screen is your best speedometer. A marine tachometer might easily be attached to a projector, and would give you the number of revolutions per minute. I omitted the third question you asked because it could not be intelligently replied to without examining the article in question.

Insufficient Adjustment.

A. T. Olson, Garfield, Kansas, is having difficulty with his lamp, concerning which he writes as follows:

> I show in a very small town, but as a subscriber to the Moving Picture World take it I have license to butt into the department and air my troubles. My theater seats 250 and I show twice a week. Have a Power's Six projector and Minsua screen. Get very good results. Am now running Art Dramas.
> My trouble lies in the lamp and does not really amount to much, but I am unable to fix it. When setting carbons I have to be very careful and get them just right, else cannot get proper spot adjustment, as the entire lamp can only be moved up and down a short distance. I do not know whether or not all Power's lamps are made the same, but it seems the adjustment which regulates the up and down movement should have greater range. I wish to again say that I am a regular subscriber to the World; also have the last two editions of the Handbook and Hawkins' Electrical Library. If my inquiry is not answerable in the department, just heave it into friend waste basket and I'll not get sore. In closing I wish you the best of all that's good, and congratulate you on your most efficient department.

Right in the beginning, Neighbor Olson, let me tell you this department is just exactly as much, or even more, for the small-town man as for the city chap. The city fellow has, to some extent, other sources of information. He can meet fellow theater men and swap experiences. He can visit other theaters and observe. But the small-town man must depend almost entirely on such agencies as the department and Handbook for his knowledge. And his trouble, no matter how simple, will have just as careful attention as though it came from the Rialto or Strand of New York City.

You have erred in not giving me necessary data. To say the lamp has too little up and down movement is not enough, since that might be a matter of opinion, and you may be demanding too much. You should have measured the exact distance the lamp moves. I would then know exactly what is what, instead of having to guess at it. However, the Power's Six lamp should have an up and down movement of at least an inch and a half. If it has less, then there is something wrong. It is sticking, or the lamp is mounted on a post not designed for it. Better take the lamp off the post, take the parts having to do with the adjustment in question apart and examine them, cleaning and oiling them thoroughly, using powdered graphite for final lubrication. If you cannot get graphite in your town, buy a good leadpencil, strip off the wood and pulverize the "lead," which is, in fact, graphite. It is a most excellent lubricant, and one which will not be affected by heat.

An Enterprising Operator.

Learning that Franklin H. Avers, operator Home theater, Portage, Wisconsin, has a remarkable projection plant, we wrote asking details for publication. Here is the result:

> Replying to yours of August 24, requesting outline and description of the various automatic appliances which I have contrived, and now have in use in my operating room, I am glad to set forth description as follows:
> In the first place, we have an Edengraph machine (which you probably have never heard of), with double lamphouse and dissolving stereopticon, and will say that, notwithstanding the fact that there are few of these machines now in use, a picture projected with the Edengraph equipped with some improvements made by Yours Truly, is as bright and steady as that projected by a stereopticon.

With regard to my inventions, I have an automatic drop light, which lights when pulled down, and is extinguished when shoved up and wound on a drum; an automatic chair, with arms and footrest, which closes up out of the way, merely by operating a small lever; an automatic and electrically operated rewind, so arranged that during the process of rewinding, if for any reason the film breaks, the reels are immediately stopped by an automatic control and brake, thus obviating any possible damage to the film. The reels are also automatically stopped when the process of re-winding is complete. This apparatus was contrived by myself four years ago, and was, I think, the only one of its kind at that time.

There is also an automatic self-lighting gas arc, which lights automatically at any time the "juice" fails us, thus insuring against the house being plunged into darkness. This is important, since the juice does fail frequently during electrical storms. We get our current from Kilbourn City, at which point the Wisconsin river has been harnessed. I am also inventor of a film indicating device, sold outright to one of the projection machine manufacturers. This article indicates approximately the amount of film left in the upper magazine at all times, thus making it unnecessary for friend operator to open his upper magazine door, and expose the film to fire danger. It not only indicates on a dial, but also rings a bell or buzzer sixty feet from end of film. It also indicates, both in operating room and theater, by means of small red lights, how much of the film still remains to be projected.

In my operating room the following happens at the end of each show: The pushing of a single small lever cuts off the picture, by dissolving, and throws in a clutch on the motor which drives the machine. As this clutch is thrown in the motor pulls over the lamp house to the stero lens. On the way over the lamp house strikes a trip, which shoves the slide, already placed in the carrier, over into position in front of the condenser. When the lamphouse strikes the stop it breaks a contact which stops the motor, at the same time making another one which starts a small motor operating the dissolving apparatus, causing the lens to slowly open, projecting the slide to the screen. As the lens opens two more contacts are automatically made, one of which lights the house lights and starts the automatic Wurlitzer, or theater orchestra, the other opening the magazine doors (both upper and lower) and the door of the film cabinet. The opening of these doors lights a small light. (I can imagine operator readers beginning to sit up and take notice at about this point in the proceedings. Ed.) thrown on the aperture so that I can see to thread in frame, which same is extinguished when the magazine doors are again closed. A cord is pulled, operating a release allowing the black drapes to close in front of the screen, and by the same operation the drop curtain falls in front of these.

In short, the following happens when one small lever is pushed: Lamphouse slides over, slide moves into place, machine stops, stereopticon lens opens, magazine doors both open, lights for threading in frame light, redlight over film cabinet lights and film cabinet doors open, house lights light, Wurlitzer starts, drapes fall before screen and then drop curtain comes down. When the lamphouse door is opened the lamphouse interior is automatically lighted for carbon trimming. All the above happens after every reel, except the drapes and curtain and house lights. These "perform" at close of each show only.

The Home theater has been a subscriber to the Moving Picture World for six years past and the writer has gained considerable knowledge from your (our, brother Avers) department, which he enjoys very much. If there is any part of the apparatus I mention interesting to you, I will be glad to describe it in detail. If you are ever in this vicinity would like you to give us a call.

As to the Edengraph machine, brother Avers, I saw the first one displayed by its inventor, Frank Cannock, also inventor of the Simplex, something like seven years ago. It was a splendid piece of work, viewed purely as a mechanism; also it was made of very high grade materials. It gave a good picture. Its fault lay in its lightness of construction. Not heavy enough for the abuse that projection machines receive in all too many theaters. The editor projected the Paul Rainey Polar films in the executive mansion in Albany, in several of the millionaire clubs and before President Taft in the then new Players Club in Washington some years ago, using an Edengraph. This he did to accommodate Jack Hemment, who had general charge of the showing of the films for Mr. Rainey. He received twenty dollars a day and all expenses, which is perhaps the highest price ever paid an operator for an engagement lasting about two weeks. At least I know of no equal sum being paid.

As to the automatic devices named, I take it friend Avers has but one machine, though he does not say so. I may be in error in my surmise. I guess this from the fact that he seems to pull a single slide into place and project it at the end of every reel. The installation is decidedly interesting; also I am told by those who have seen it, that it is really wonderful. Therefore, as a matter of interest to myself and to operators in general, please give us a detailed, and, if possible, illustrated description of how the various stunts are pulled off. Suppose with your next article you send close-up photographs of your machine from different angles, provided you can show in this way just how things are arranged.

Attention General Film Company.

From California, comes a letter severely criticising a certain projection machine, and winding up with the following:

> And now I have a kick against our old friend, the General Film Company. Today we received a film DIRECT from the San Francisco exchange, where it was presumed to have been inspected. In it I found FIVE SPLICES CLEAR IN TWO, and seven which broke in going over our brand new projector sprockets. Moreover, if I attempted to notch all the split sprocket holes, the edge of the film would look like a side elevation of the business part of a washboard. The film was a comedy, "Bull and Bullets." The enclosed splice was fine, as compared to the rest. Some of them were apparently made with tobacco juice, and the man must have chewed poor tobacco at that.

I am publishing this because I happen to know the General Film Company does not approve of its films being sent out in any other than first-class condition. It is therefore up to the San Francisco exchange, and there is and can be no legitimate excuse it can offer. The exchange which sends out film in any such wretched condition is an enemy to the industry and to the company it is presumed to represent. It is not good business. Nor will it suffice the exchange to plead that "we did not know it." To know such things is precisely one of the things they are there for. It is one of their most important duties. That the theater takes cheap service (if it does) is no excuse either; absolutely none whatever. When film gets so old that it cannot be rented at a figure which will enable the exchange to keep it in first-class physical condition, it is too old to be used at all. The audiences who patronize the small, cheaper theaters are paying an admission on the assumption that they will see a show. They have some rights in the matter, and no exchange has the moral right to outrage those audiences by sending out film in such condition that it cannot be properly displayed on the screen. To try to force the operator to inspect and repair the films is, as I have repeatedly pointed out, a pretty small, and very nasty piece of business.

Please understand that this is not aimed at the General Film Company. As I said in the beginning, that corporation does not countenance such crude work. If this were the first complaint I have received concerning this particular exchange I would not have published the matter. It is not, however, and in justice to California operators and the industry in that state, as well as to the General Film Company itself, I am setting the thing forth.

As to the projector matter, I cannot agree with the brother's contention, except in part. He complains of the weight and poor material in the intermittent. I happen to know positively that the very finest material obtainable is used, that the parts are made with all possible accuracy, and in my judgment they are no heavier than is necessary.

New York Operators' Notice.

Don't overlook the fact that Local Union No. 306 has temporarily reduced its initiation fee. This only lasts until the first of the year, so it is up to you to get very busy if you want to take advantage of the reduction. Sooner or later you'll be joining. Better do it now and save a wad of coin in the process.

International Projection Association, Inc.

The editor recently received a most pressing invitation to attend a lecture to be given by Frank S. Piecher, E. E. and B. S. (Electrical Engineer and Bachelor in Surgery), who is an operator and a member of the above named organization, coupled with the request that we agree to deliver a lecture to the body at a future date. The meeting and lecture was to be held at midnight, in the rooms of the society, 652 Bergen avenue, The Bronx, New York City, and midnight meetings are no joke to this quill pusher, especially when the place of congregation lies full twenty miles from his domicile. But the organization itself was a "new one" on the editor, therefore, he decided, it was up to him to see what was doing.

The society is quite young, yet it has, I find, seventy-seven members in good standing, with more in sight. It has comfortable quarters on the ground floor at above named address, the same consisting of an apartment transformed into club rooms. Just what ultimate object the society expects to accomplish we are not informed, but its present move is most excellent. Its first lecture, the one I attended, was given to S. R. O. More than fifty operators were present, and they certainly evinced lively interest in the lecture by Brother Piecher on elementary optics. This is all the more surprising, in that the lecture was decidedly technical, yet the men sat there until two A. M. and drank it in, asking really intelligent questions from time to time. Incidentally it is to be noted that Brother Piecher, who is an expert in optics, made several statements directly backing up the conclusions this department has reached in matters optical.

Will C. Smith, acting General Manager Nicholas Power Company, was present, and spoke briefly, as did also the editor, after the lecture. Brother Ira Sherman also was there, and addressed the assemblage. The meeting lasted until three A. M., and it is distinctly encouraging to know that a body of operators will stay up until almost daylight in an effort to improve their knowledge of the technical end of their profession. Lectures from the following gentlemen are scheduled for the future: Will C. Smith, on the Power's machine; Frank Piecher, on electrics and optics (several lectures); F. H. Richardson, on practical projection; Ira Sherman, on the benefits of organization; J. H. Hallberg, on transformers and motor generators; George Robbins, subject not given, and a representative of the Precision Machine Company on the Simplex projector. The following are officers of the organization: Al Polin, President; Harry Scherl, Vice-President; Morris J. Rotker, Recording Secretary; M. Rattiner, Secretary-Treasurer; Sergeant at Arms, George C. Johnson; Trustees, E. T. Stewart, R. C. Weiss, J. F. Clark.

He Don't Understand.

Donald F. Sink, Greenville, Ohio, fails to understand or comprehend the following eminently puzzling circumstance, to which he desires that I promulgate an elucidation, having comprehensibleness and compacted understandableness. In other words, he is desirous that I elucidate to him somewhat intricate problem, and co-articulate its scattered items of puzzlement into a consistent whole. Y-o-o-o-w! R-r-r-r! Scat! Just like that!

> Am writing for explanation of one thing I do not understand, viz.: My lower carbon burns away faster than the upper one. Use 40 amperes A. C. through Ft. Wayne compensarc, with ¾ inch National carbons, using D. C. set, as recommended in your Handbooks. Know I should use ⅝ carbons, but we only use one projection, and that would necessitate too may delays to change carbons. As it is we can run five hours and fifteen minutes without changing them, using a Powers six B lamp. However, we get a very good light, and can scarcely tell the difference in screen result when using ⅝ and ¾. We find the National carbons to be more satisfactory for A. C. than Speer, but would prefer Speer for D. C. This is because the National is softer and maintains a steadier A. C. arc. But to get back to the point: Taking Saturday for instance; we run ten hours continuously, using 6½ inches of carbon in the upper and 8 inches in the lower. If it were the reverse I would not be surprised, as the upper naturally gets hotter than the lower. Of course it really makes no material difference in results, which carbon burns faster, but it has puzzled me for some time, and I don't like to be puzzled.
> I wish to compliment you on the good work you are doing for operators in the projection department, and to especially thank you for the help I have received from ti.

I can think of but one thing which would cause the phenomenon you describe, and that is poor contact between the lower lamp jaw and carbon. Such a defective contact might easily add heat which would produce the result, nor would the heat necessarily be such as would be visible. Try a thorough cleaning of the lower jaw with a file, filing away any roughness or pitting, if any there be, or substitute a new jaw. You might first test the matter by installing a lower carbon and wrapping a small copper wire several times around it and the carbon jaw tightly, first thoroughly cleaning the outside of the jaw. If this carbon burns evenly with the upper, then that settles it. The trouble lies in the contact. If any one can offer other solution, let him grab his pencil and get busy. I would also suggest and recommend that you get some very thin copper or brass tubing, if you can, of a diameter the least bit less than the diameter of your carbons. Saw this into one-inch lengths and split each piece lengthwise on one side. When installing a carbon, slip one of these over it so that it will come between the carbon and metal of the jaw. This will prevent roughening of the jaw by always insuring perfect contact. The pieces cost little and each will serve for several carbons. As to your comments on the Speer and National carbons, why the precise opposite of practice is recommended by some operators, which goes to show how much depends on individual ideas in matters of this sort.

I must thank you for your words of kindly commendation. We try to merit the friendship of operators, and believe that more and more the men are coming to understand that in this department and its editor they have a friend who will stick through thick and thin.

Our Position Endorsed.

In a bulletin put out by the United Theater Equipment Corporation, J. H. Hallberg sets forth the following:

> As projection expert for the United Theater Equipment Corporation I go on record as recommending for the very highest class projection an ordinary opaque screen, which might be a thoroughly dried plaster wall coated with a non-metallic compound or paint, preferably of a greyish-blue color. * * * I believe that the very best projection is obtained with a powerful light behind the film upon such a non-metallic surface as described because the delicate half tones in the shadows of the picture are brought out without undue or excessive glare and flicker in the high lights or transparent part of the film as projected upon the screen.
> The dull screen as mentioned is ideal under most conditions, especially where the theater is wide and where the projection is distorted, due to the position of the machine above or at the side of the screen.
> There are, however, cases where a metallic coated screen is very satisfactory and desirable, especially when alternating current is used at the arc, or where a small amount of direct current must be used at the arc. Where the theater is long and narrow and where the illumination of the film is limited the metallic screen may be used to good advantage.
> It is difficult for us to say which is the best of the metallic screens, because when they are new most of them look alike, and I am, as expert for the United Corporation, also interested in the continued good quality of the screen.

It will be observed that Mr. Hallberg says practically the same thing that I have been saying for lo! these many years. He even goes further than I have ever gone in the matter. He differs from me in one particular, viz.: in advising a blue-grey paint compound. I am of the opinion that the patent calcimines, such as Alabastine, Muralite, etc., with perhaps a little ultramarine blue added, give just as good or even better results than the compounds Mr. Hallberg favors, and they cost very much less. I have also recommended a slight mellowing of the light by use of the Amberlux ray filter. I do still so recommend. In my view, however, Mr. Hallberg has put the thing in such a way that his idea may be misunderstood. I think he meant to say precisely what I have said, viz.: that the non-reflective surface, such as we have both spoken of, will give as artistic a projection as is possible with any surface, still there is distinct advantage in the use of the semi-reflective metallic surface in that it is quite possible to closely approach the non-reflective surface in results, and do it at greatly reduced expense in current consumption. Mr. Hallberg's remarks concerning the different screen requirements for different auditorium conditions is also but a reiteration of what has been said in this department many times.

Correspondence.

Texas writes:

I wish to ask your advice in regard to the best system of developing. I develop in quantities of one hundred to three and four hundred feet at one time, and am at present using horizontal racks and trays. I tried one-hundred-foot tanks, which require about ten gallons of solution, but on account of extremely hot weather down here have trouble in keeping the temperature down.

It seems to me that the drum system of developing will be the best for my purposes unless there are some drawbacks in this system, with which I am not acquainted.

I figure I could develop a two-hundred-foot drum of film with two or three gallons of developer, and in this way have fresh developer every time.

I can also tone and tint on the same drums with small quantities of solution. Do you think I would find this system satisfactory?

How many feet of film, half positive, half negative, should ten gallons of Eastman's formula, No. 16, develop? Is Pyro very generally used in developing moving-picture negative?

Can you give me the addresses of some firms who can supply dyes for tinting film?

The drum system of development is the most economical and simplest for the man who wishes to do his own work, which is usually in comparatively small batches and at irregular intervals.

The principal objections to the drum system for commercial work is the amount of valuable laboratory space required and the rapid oxidation of developer by the large amount of film exposed to the atmosphere during development.

The small worker can utilize almost any enclosure at night time for his few hundred feet, and may even, when hard pressed, hang his film outdoors to dry still wound on the drums.

Many traveling cinematographers carry a drum outfit for developing their negative en route. Skeleton drums of light weight knock down construction may be made so that a nest of three developing troughs and a half dozen or more small knock-down drums will go into a steamer trunk.

A drum 2 feet in diameter and 3 feet long will hold more than one hundred feet of film and allow for a fair amount of space between spirals to avoid overlap.

The tanks are segments of a cylinder, made by a tinsmith from sheet iron. Using the drum of the dimensions mentioned three tanks should be made, which are segments of a cylinder 2 feet 2 inches in diameter and 3 feet 2 inches long, of such a section as to be about 4 inches deep at the deepest part and differing in the length of the shortest by an added half inch for one and one inch for the other so that they may nest within one another for shipping or storage. This size trough will be about 18 inches wide. Six tees of heavy strap iron are made, the horizontal section being 18 inches long and the perpendicular part 13 inches high, the projecting end being filed out in a U shape to take the spindle of the drum. Wide straps of sheet iron are soldered at each end of the trough, into which the upright portion of the inverted T may be inserted so that it forms a support for the drum spindle and at the same time prevents the trough from rocking on its round side.

These three troughs are used respectively for developing, fixing and washing. A fourth set of tees may be provided for winding the film on the drum, or the tees on the developing tank may be made with extra long uprights so that the drum may swing clear of the developing solution and an extra pair notches made in the iron lower down for the operation of development. This is a good method of making all the standards as it permits of draining off superfluous solution before transferring to the next tank.

As the iron sheet metal is attacked by the solutions used it must be lined with some material which resists corrosion. Baked enamel is fine where the outfit is not moved about, but it chips very easily under rough treatment, and is therefore not suitable for the traveling photographer. Probus or other photographic paint is good, but must be frequently renewed, as it also scales and chips away from the metal and is also open to the same objection as the enamel, unless the photographer is able to carry a good sized can of it along in his outfit. Probus paint is a great boon for the photographer, but unless it is extra specially well protected he is liable to find some day, on unpacking, that the paint has escaped from the can and oozed into companionship with some of his pet apparatus or into some of his most indispensable chemicals. A simple method is that of painting the trough with thick shellac, and then when it is tacky to line smoothly with heavy white muslin. When the shellac is dry, coat the muslin heavily with melted parafin. Extra parafin is easily carried in cake form, or if that is not at hand repairs to the coating may be made with a wax candle and a match.

The wooden drums should also be painted with hot, melted parafin, or, better yet, the parts should be immersed in the hot wax until the pores of the wood are thoroughly saturated.

Waterproof Varnish.

Hard parafin	1 lb. 5 oz.
Syrian asphalt	1 " 5 "
Benzol	4 gals.
Carbon tetrachloride	3 "

Before treatment it is preferable to immerse the drums for two or three minutes in a 1 per cent solution of hydrochloric acid, and wash for fifteen minutes, after which thorough drying is necessary. The well dried drums are then dipped in the above solution, the excess liquid drained off, when the varnish dries almost immediately.

The varnishing should be repeated at intervals.

The drums are two wheels mounted on a spindle, with cross pieces of round or half round or triangular dowel pin stock attached at intervals of not more than three or four inches apart around the circumference of the wheels.

The wheels may be cut with a jig or band saw from thin boards in segments, using two thicknesses nailed together with brass nails so that the joint between two segments in one thickness comes in the center of the segment in the other thickness. Round dowel stock makes neat spokes and is ver light and strong.

A paper pattern for one of the segments or felloes may be laid off as follows:

For a drum 2 feet in diameter draw a section of a circle with a radius of one foot, draw a chord of the same length as the radius, from the points where the chord intersects the circle draw radii to the center, then from the same center, with a radius of nine inches, draw another sector between the radius lines. Twelve of the curved pieces of this size will then form a circle two feet in diameter and three inches wide of double thickness.

Two gallons of developer will make nearly two inches depth of solution in a developing trough of the dimensions given. On account of the rapid oxidation caused by the stirring of air into the developer by the revolving drum it is not possible to given even approximate figures as to the number of feet of film you can develop with a given quantity of developer.

Use fresh developer for your negative stock—that is, n t more than four or five drums bef re using a new bath, or not so many if it becomes deeply discolored, giving each successive drum a little more developement than the preceding one. For positive it may be used until the high lights show degradation, stain or chemical fog or the color of the image becomes unsatisfactory. As a positive bath becomes exhausted the color of the image passes from cold blue black to warm brownish black and decreasing density of deposit, and may even be carried to a dirty sepia by overprinting and using exhausted bath.

Pyro may be used for negative with the drum system, but fresh developer must be made for each new drum.

Douglas Bergh Talks of His Six Months' Trip

Remarkable Prosperity in the South Shared by the Moving Picture Business and Greater Interest Taken in Pictures Everywhere—Refined Comedies in Demand —Canada Taboos Sex Pictures.

I HAD an interesting conversation last week with Douglas Bergh, traveling personal representative of George Kleine, who has visited all the George Kleine offices in this country and Canada, excepting those in the western division, since last spring. During the trip, Mr. Bergh visited, in order, Dallas, New Orleans, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Washington, D. C.; New York, Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Atlanta, Detroit and Boston.

"The moving picture business, as well as that in other lines, is really remarkable in the South," Mr. Bergh says. "The high prices paid for cotton, and the great activity in the oil regions of Texas, Oklahoma and southern Louisiana, have brought a wave of prosperity to that section. Although I have traveled over the same territory many times within the past ten years, I have never before seen the South in better financial condition.

"The large picture theatres in the South are doing well, and they are showing fine programs. This class of theatres will compare favorably with the better types of houses in New York, Chicago and other large cities in the North. Admissions as a rule are 10, 15 and 25 cents, and as high as 50 cents for big features, while a few small houses, patronized by whites in poor neighborhoods and by colored people in others, charge 5 cents. Only a few of these small houses, however, are now in existence.

"I was in Boston when the announcement of Perfection pictures was made. Great interest was aroused among exhibitors generally, and the future looks very promising for this brand. Refined comedy is peculiarly attractive to picture theatre goers just now, as they assist in relieving the mental tension caused in family circles by the departure of members for the various national camps.

"George Kleine's recent announcement that a revised and elaborated issue of 'Quo Vadis' will be released in the near future, has also created wide interest throughout New England. I was stationed in Boston at the time, and every man who handled the first of the super pictures was enthusiastic over the news of its revival. R. D. Marson, formerly manager of the George Kleine Boston exchange, and now retired, was emphatic in his opinion that 'Quo Vadis' would again take New England by storm.

"During my trip I have been impressed as never before by the great interest in pictures by amusement seekers of the most intelligent and best social types. Moving pictures are taken more seriously than formerly and are evidently considered more than a mere pastime. The best pictures are valued either for the lessons they convey or for their educational value.

"I have noticed, particularly, the great change in the attitude of the daily press towards pictures. Throughout the section covered I was impressed everywhere by the great space given to news and the criticism of moving pictures. Every little country paper has its critic, and these critics show considerable intelligence in their estimate of picture subjects and their production.

"George Kleine's abolition of advance deposits for the product handled by him has created a strong tide of favor among exhibitors, more especially because his policy shows faith in their honesty and reliability as business men.

"Taylor Holmes has won, in an amazingly short time, fine popularity among exhibitors and the public. I have never before known a photoplayer whose rise in popular favor was so spontaneous.

"In Canada, the demand for comedies of the right type is stronger, if anything, than in the United States. Those of the Perfection make are enjoying excellent patronage. All sex pictures are tabooed in Canada, especially in the smaller towns. In the province of Quebec, outside Montreal, the unsettled political conditions have seriously affected the picture business."

Samuel S. Hutchinson Talks About Margarita Fischer's Work and of Other American Stars.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Co., who returned from Santa Barbara to Chicago recently, is very much pleased with the scripts selected for Margarita Fischer, who recently signed a contract with his company for the coming year. This means that the American product will include a fine line of comedy dramas for the year entered upon.

Miss Fischer is an old popular star of the American, whose appearance in comedies under the direction of Harry Pollard, her husband, delighted photoplay lovers all over the country several years ago. This clever comedienne began work on "A Daughter of Joan" for the American Film Co., on Sept. 10, under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham. Mr. Hutchinson announces that this picture will be something new in film production, as he considers it a comedy with a melodramatic punch.

"We feel that this picture will give her full scope for her distinctive ability, and we are sparing no expense in the production," he says. "It keeps away pretty well from any straight war matter, tragedy, heavy theme or propaganda. The American Film Co. will adhere strictly to its present policy of producing only screen dramas of exceptional character and cheerful atmosphere. Miss Fischer, therefore, will star in pictures that are delightful in unexpected plot, with plenty of starring atmosphere and wholesome fun and punch.

"Our studio plans for the winter tend to keep each star definitely within a certain orbit, that is in the distinctive lines along which we have already won marked success and popularity. This will in no way limit them so that they might be accused of a sameness of subject or treatment. Our staff of writers now includes only those experienced in the task of writing and selecting stories of varied interest, which will enable each star to specialize without becoming monotonous."

Henry King has succeeded Lloyd Ingraham in directing the Mary Miles Minter productions. He has already started work on her next vehicles, "The Mate of the Sally Ann," which gives her an excellent opportunity to display her well-known versatility. Henry Albert Phillips wrote this new play, which is the fourth in which Miss Minter has appeared under her new two-year contract. Mr. King is now in San Francisco filming sea scenes. He has purchased outright, it is said, a sea-going steamer which will be wrecked in the making of this production.

Wm. Russell's forthcoming feature, "A Night in New York," was written by Chas. Turner Dazey and Frank Dazey, being adapted for camera use by Chester B. Clapp. Francelia Billington will appear in the leading feminine role of Gwendolyn Van Loon.

Chicago Film Brevities.

At the hearing of "The Spy" case before Judge Samuel Alschuler of the U. S. District Court, Friday, Sept. 28, the court requested counsel for the Fox Film Corporation and for the city to submit briefs. After reading these, Judge Alschuler will give his decision as to whether or not the injunction under which "The Spy" is now being shown will be dissolved.

E. D. Gurney, auditor of the Universal and Bluebird exchanges, has been drafted into the national army, and left for Camp Grant Wednesday, Oct. 3. In a letter received from Mr. Gurney last week, by Irving Mack, of the Universal Film Co., Mr. Gurney wrote: "I may see you before I leave for the front; but, if not, I will try to be a credit to the U. S. A., and be ready to go over the top when the time comes."

"The Eyes of the World," W. H. Clune's latest production adapted from Harold Bell Wright's book, was given its first public presentation at the Auditorium Thursday night, Sept. 27. Kitty Kelly says of it in the Examiner: "'The Eyes of the World' is no sensation, it isn't great dramatically or spectacularly; but it is a very workmanlike production, possessing considerable point and much beauty, in addition to the magic of Harold Bell Wright's influence." It ended its run at the Auditorium Saturday evening, Oct. 6.

It is understood that the members of the sub-committee of the council judiciary committee in charge of the Steffen amendment to the city ordinance, which has for its object the curtailing of the powers of Major Funkhouser, have sent out invitations to leading photoplayers to be present when the amendment is finally considered. Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and other notable players are on the list of those invited to attend.

The Woodlawn theater, with a seating capacity of 1,750, will soon be constructed on Sixty-third street and Maryland avenue, this city. The entire structure in which the theatre is included, and the theatre itself, have been designed by Henry L. Newhouse, the well-known theatrical architect. The cost of the entire building is fixed at $250,000. When completed, the Woodlawn will be managed by Mr. Karzas, of the Woodlawn Theater Company.

Don Sayer Groesbeck, the leading designing artist of the Illinois Lithographing Company, this city, was recently awarded first prize by the U. S. Government, in the nation-wide competition for the best advertising poster, for use in the government's publicity campaign on behalf of the second Liberty Loan. Over 150 original sketches were submitted at the exhibition, and while many received commendation, the sketch furnished by Mr. Groesbeck won great applause. In the foreground of the sketch Uncle Sam is shown in the act of demanding, "Shall we be more tender with our dollars than with the lives of our sons?", the sentence being taken from a speech of Secretary of the Treasury Wm. G. McAdoo. In the middle background, thousands of soldier boys are seen passing in parade, while the main figure in the far background is the Statue of Liberty, surrounded by warships of all types at anchor, with circling airplanes above.

Tom Quill is manager of the Illinois Lithographing Co., and Mr. Stice, formerly of the Goes Lithographing Co., is president, the main offices being located at 359 E. Ohio street, Chicago.

Clyde E. Elliott, who has been sales manager of the Paramount Picture Corporation for the past two years, recently resigned to accept the presidency and general management of the Chicago Cinema Circuit, which has been recently organized.

"The object of this circuit is to bring together the best theatres in Chicago and the middle west, so as to better enable the organization to co-operate more fully with the various distributing agencies and producers," says Mr. Elliott. "The exhibitor will have back of him an entire organization making purchases amounting to hundreds of dollars a week, which will also buy state rights productions for first-run presentations throughout the territory covered."

The officers of the organization will be in the North American Building, with Albert Selig as secretary and treasurer.

J. C. Cohen, president of the Consolidated Amusement Co., Ltd., of Honolulu, spent a few days in the city last week accompanied by his wife, and on Saturday, Oct. 6, they left for New York City, where they will spend some time in sight-seeing and on business. Mr. Cohen controls all the important amusement enterprises in Hawaii, both in the moving picture, dramatic and vaudeville lines. He owns the Bijou-Empire, Ye Liberty, Hawaiian Opera House and the Hawaii. Mr. Cohen makes a point of securing all of the big productions turned out by the Selig Polyscope Co., for which he holds sole rights in Hawaii. He recently acquired the rights to "The Crisis" and "The Garden of Allah," and previous to that had exploited "The Spoilers."

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, passed through Chicago Thursday afternoon, Oct. 4, on his way from New York to the Los Angeles studios.

Rex Ingram Joins Paralta Forces

REX INGRAM, the well known photoplay director, who has been responsible for many of the most notable Bluebird successes, has been engaged by Robert Brunton, Director of Productions at the Paralta Studios in Hollywood, California, to direct the making of "His Robe of Honor," in which Henry B. Walthall will make his debut as an independent star-manager, under the executive direction of Paralta Plays, Inc. Mr. Ingram, while one of the young directors, is looked upon as one of the most capable men on the western coast.

Born in Dublin, Ireland, he received his early education at Saint Columbus College, and later attended Trinity College, where his father was one of the instructors. Here he was not only an adept student, but proved to be one of the foremost athletes and became the champion lightweight boxer as well as the crack 100-yard man, with a record of ten seconds flat. He was injured in a football game at college. His father was anxious for him to resume his college course upon his recovery, but Ingram had read and heard of the opportunities in America and had decided to invade that land of promise. With ten pounds in his pocket, which is equivalent to $50.00, he set sail for the United States, where he entered the employ of a railroad company. Later h entered Yale. It was during his studies here that he became interes ed in motion pictures and after finishing his course he went to work for the Edison Company and later played juvenile parts with Vitagraph. During this time he had dev ted much of his time to writing for the screen and at last he left the Vitagraph company to accept a position in the scenario department of the Fox organization, where he wrote stories which were produced by such stars as Betty Nansen, William Farnum and Robert Mantell. He also achieved success with James and Clara Kimball Young and then went with the Universal Film Company, where his work in producing Bluebird Photoplays attracted widespread comment and praise. Among the pictures he has directed are "The Great Problem," "Broken Fetters," "Yellow and White," "The Chalice of Sorrow," "The Pulse of Life," "The Reward of the Faithless" and "Black Orchids."

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG PICTURES AT THE RIALTO.

"Magda," Clara Kimball Young's first Select Picture, was presented at the Rialto theater the week beginning October 7. S. L. Rothapfel has just signed a contract giving him the initial presentation in New York of all the pictures made by Clara Kimball Young and her own company in her series to be distributed by Select Pictures. There are to be eight of these productions during the coming year. Under this contract the patrons of this pre-eminent photoplay house will be the first in New York to see all of the new Clara Kimball Young productions. "Magda," the first of these, is being shown during the week beginning October 7.

Universal City Gets Scorched

Fire Invades Big Picture Plant—$10,000 Damages to Sets and Stages—General Obregon, Mexican War Hero, Pays a Visit.

CINEMA making at Universal City was halted Saturday afternoon, this week, when a $10,000 fire, which started in the dry grass near the studios spread through the plant and consumed several sets and buildings erected for Western street scenes. The Universal City fire department and the studio force battled with the flames, while the irrepressible instinct of the picture man was evidenced in the "shooting" of the fire scene.

Sparks from the burning buildings fell to one of the stages and set fire to a number of overhead diffusers. Actors and actresses were forced to flee as flames sprang up about them. Valuable "props" and scenic effects were destroyed, delaying the production of pictures on which the Universal Company was working. The new electric-lighted studio, construction of which was launched only a few weeks ago, was threatened, but efficient fire-fighting saved it.

At one time grave apprehension was felt that the extensive plant would be seriously damaged, but with nearly 1,500 fire-fighters engaged in the work the spread of flames was prevented and the fire vanquished.

General Obregon at Universal City.

General Alvaro Obregon, hero of three Mexican revolutions, who arrived in Los Angeles a short time ago, paid a visit this week to Universal City. General Obregon had met a number of cameramen from the famous film city who had been shooting the scenes of military operations in Mexico for the Universal Animated Weekly, and their stories of the wonders of the big picture plant had greatly aroused his curiosity.

One day this week, therefore, General Obregon and party consisting of Major Miller, U. S. A., who is escorting the famous Mexican General on a tour of the United States; General M. Perez Trevino, who also has performed valiant service for the Mexcan government in the operations against Villa and other foes of the southern republic; Baldomero R. Almada, general purchasing agent for the government of Mexico, and several other Mexicans visited the filmland capital.

While there they were entertained by W. Sistrom, personal representative of President Carl Laemmle, and Henry McRae, manager of production. All parts of the big plant were inspected by the visitors and a variety of entertainment such as one could not find except in such a busy beehive of industry was given them which General Obregon said would be remembered for all time. Drama and comedy were in the making with as many as twenty different companies operating on the various outdoor stages and in the electric light sets. The distinguished son of Mexico was especially delighted to meet many of the stars of the Universal Company while making the rounds of the institution. He had seen them on the screen and with marked courtesy he said it gave him great pleasure to meet them face to face.

Fairbanks Battles With Billy Sunday

Baseball Diamond Is the Scene—Former Wins 1 to 0—$5,000 Raised for Soldiers' Sporting Outfits.

TEN thousand people and a 1 to 0 score provided the biggest feature of the Douglas Fairbanks-Billy Sunday baseball game September 24 in Los Angeles. It was an elaborate feast for the big crowd and, considering it was a benefit, compelled wiseacres to say it was the biggest event ever staged in California.

The celebrities who attended ranged from parsons to pugilists and the audience was likewise composed of a great variety, including persons who registered every play with hard expert eyes and those who didn't know "play ball" from "guide right."

The mingling upon terms of affection of so many men of such diverse history and attainments as appeared upon the green field helped to prove that baseball is the most democratizing of games.

Billy Sunday ran bases, three of them, and might have made it four and a tally if the man at the bat had four swings at the ball instead of the all-too-little three. So "Billy" died at third and the game was over, with Fairbanks as the conquering hero.

Whereupon the cohorts of Fairbanks rushed upon him and hoisted him upon as many of their respective shoulders as he could sit upon, by which signs they proclaimed that the "1" on the score board belonged to him and the "0" to the Rev. Mr. Sunday.

Among all the personages scattered here and there it was remarked that the most swaggerish to gaze upon was the screen actor in his baseball costume. There were such eminent specimens present as "Bull" Montana, he of the pleistocene neck; "Strangler" Lewis, the giant wrestler; Tom Kennedy, one time pugilist; Spike Robinson, and others, all of whom were attired in Fairbanks baseball unforms. The three baseballs bearing the signature of President Wilson were ushered on to the grounds by W. E. Bush, master of ceremonies, who auctioned off one of these for $275 to W. H. Frank. The others were given to Fairbanks and Sunday for mementoes. The proceeds of the game, which amounted to over five thousand dollars, will provide baseball and athletic equipment for the soldiers in camp. All hats off to Farbanks. It was his idea and he certainly put it over in a 100 per cent. manner.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

G. P. Hamilton, veteran of the stage and screen, with twenty-three years' experience as motion picture and dramatic performer, producer and director, has been added to the Triangle Film Corporation's large directing staff at the Culver City studio. Mr. Hamilton was once general manager of the St. Louis Motion Picture Company. Prior to that he was production manager of the American, and was once superintendent of studios and factories with the Essanay in Chicago.

Three hundred motion picture "types" assembled in Walker auditorium Wednesday this week and effected an organization, with Ray Canon at its head, designed to cooperate with producers and directors in supplying the latter with desired "characters" and other incidentals to cinema making. An association to be known as "The Photoplayers' Equity" was formed. The organizers are H. Gebber, E. A. Brown, W. M. McCormick, Oscar Horn, Clarence Hatton, Charles Mack, H. Millcrest and W. Sidmore. Al Blake, executive of the now defunct Photoplayers' Exchange, proffered the use of his club quarters, at 1824 Sunset Boulevard, to the association. A paid secretary, Oscar Horn, was chosen, and the real work of the society will commence this morning.

Edith Storey, the new Metro star, has arrived in Los Angeles to begin a large feature production of modern Russia. Her director, Tod Browning, and his assistant, are getting things in shape for the first production. It is expected Viola Dana will arrive shortly, too, with her director, William Dowlan. The Charlie Chaplin studio in Hollywood has been secured by the Metro company, and the building of new stage structures is under way, preparing for the accommodation of the several companies which Metro intends to send out here this winter.

A large part of the lighting equipment at Universal City was transplanted to the Plaza district of Los Angeles one night this week for use in tenement scenes, which form an important part of "The Twisted Soul," being produced by Allen J. Holubar. Motion picture companies frequently operate in the streets of Los Angeles at night, but for the first time in the history of the city the streets were made as light as day by the aid of large lights, nearly one hundred of which were used.

A mess fund has been organized by the stars and directors of the American Film Company to provide the one hundred and seventy Santa Barbara boys now at Camp Lewis with luxuries not furnished by the Government.

Triangle-Keystone Director William Beaudine has finished the first comedy made under his direction, and has started on another which will feature Peggy Pearce, Paddy McGuire, Joseph Belmont and Fritz Schade. The new story calls for considerable "water stuff" and the immense Keystone plunge has been fitted up for the opening scenes.

George Ahern, an American actor for the past three years, has been drafted and left for Camp Lewis at American Lake.

Jack Mower has been signed by the American to appear opposite Margarita Fischer. Mr. Mower formerly was Miss Fischer's leading man in Pollard productions, filmed at San Diego. He recently supported Lillian Walker in "The Lust of the Ages," the Ogden Picture Corporation production.

To forcibly bring to the attention of his congregation the subject of his next sermon, Reynold E. Blight, pastor of the Church of the People, arranged for a theater party to witness "The Honor System," the Fox production, at Miller's theate, a recent night.

One section of the theater was reserved for the Church of the People, and this proved inadequate and many had to wait until a later performance to obtain seats.

An unusual and striking feature of the new Bluebird production which Director Rupert Julian at present is staging at Universal City is the colorful and elaborate Japanese settings, in which much of the action occurs. The story is a screen adaptation of Samuel Merwin's recent and widely-read novel, "Anthony the Absolute," and the scenes are laid in Japan. A corps of Japanese workmen has been engaged especially to build the scenery for the production from designs and sketches prepared by Frank Tokanaga, a Japanese actor, who also appears in the picture.

German Business in Bad Way

Dr. Sanders, Returned Red Cross Man, Describes Theater Conditions in Kaiser's Country.

By Kent Watson.

EVERY phase of the motion picture industry in Germany is virtually on the down road, growing from bad to worse as the world-war progresses. The scientific end of the game has petered out, the resources of foremost Prussian scientists being practically given over to devising methods and instruments for a continuation of the combat for the life of militarism against the righteous odds of the Entente Allies. The exhibitor's side has ceased to be, subsequently compelling the slow death of the production end.

A vivid description of motion picture conditions in Germany is given by Dr. Charles Haddon Sanders, former director of an American Red Cross unit in the battlefields of the German Empire. Dr. Sanders has recently returned to America to resume his practice of medicine, and although not particularly interested in the motion picture industry he states that he was forced to observe a few of the things that tend to make what he has to say really worth while to those interested in motion pictures.

"The German people have no time to think of amusement now," Dr. Sanders declares. "They're playing another game—a losing game. When a German has all to gain and nothing to lose, he's in it to the death. That's why the Prussian forces have so stoically maintained what little they had to start with. Germany is a nation standing solidly against waste. The motion picture industry is considered unnecessary in Germany. It has been officially decreed that to attend a motion picture show is to assist financially as much as is the admission fee in destroying the hopes and aims of Germany.

"Subsequently, the entertainment side in Germany's life is waning fast. The frivolous side of affairs no longer exist. American stars are as hated in Germany as they are admired in our own country. Things have been brought down to earth and peasants are having to scrape for dimes to live on without a thought of amusement. Germans are not like Americans, anyway. They have no craze for frivolous things now. They are concertedly fighting the motion picture industry as an American evil. Germans believe the motion picture show is an outrageous scheme concocted by Americans and 'Englander Schwein' for the purpose of diverting Prussian efforts from the war.

"Down the thoroughfares of German cities to-day it is almost impossible to locate a picture show. What formerly were picture theaters now have been transformed into hospitals for wounded German soldiers. All fixtures have been made into something that will help the warring side of fighting Germany."

Dr. Sanders and his corps of hospital workers were situated in a German city. The hospital they worked in was a former picture theater, one time handsome, but by the war deleted of all its former beauty.

Germany has made American producers suffer, because material for developing the negative prints have been partially cut off by the serious conditions abroad, making the cost more than triple what it was three years ago, causing competition that has naturally made it harder to procure the material necessary for reproduction.

"There are no studio activities in all of the German Empire, so far as I was able to learn," declared Dr. Sanders. "Actors and actresses feel as keenly toward attempting to win the war as any other class in the entire country. They feel that to lose the war is to lose their art, and the countenance of one great German actor, lying under my care with both legs severed, seemed to presage their art is lost!

"I became interested in the motion picture when I was in an impromptu way forced to observe certain phases of it. It was interesting to be in the midst of a country so ridden with strife that the pleasant side has been knocked head-over-heels to nowhere. I was an American, there among thousands and thousands of foreigners, seeking American diversion from the strain of administering aid to sick and wounded and the odor of human blood—and I could find no picture show to attend in all that countryside. The only form of amusement was the singing of songs by half-well wounded at my theater-hospital. So, for the side of American amusement I can truthfully say that it is the best ever, and when it comes to entertaining Americans I say to the Germans, as did Colonel Henry Watterson: "To hell with the Hapsburgs and Hohenzollerns!"

The Greatest Thing on the Screen

By William H. Kitchell.

TAKE twenty personality experts—otherwise 'screen idols'—out of the feature game, and watch the house of cards fall over!" It was a producer who said this. He had two of the twenty experts under contract, and he would have bought more had there been any to buy. But there wasn't, it seemed, and he was listening for the crack of doom. If the twenty got under one roof and the beams caved in, all that would be left of the moving picture business would be a trade paper, some cameras and five miles of empty studios.

He was three per cent. correct.

Remove personality from the "star" end of the feature industry and there will be a cloud of reinforced concrete dust visible, metaphorically, from the seven moons of Jupiter. But all would not be lost.

Somebody would find out what human interest meant.

There are nine hundred ways nowadays of prospecting for human interest. One method is to hire the personality, and let him—or her—do most of the digging, and bury most of the profits. If you have money enough, you add to the expense by investing in the rights to a popular novel, and then sit back and hope that the book and the personality together will bring results. If the personality fails, the reputation of the book may save the outfit. If you are a tight-wad, you run mostly to "classics." If you are a loose spender, you keep on spending—anything to find the human interest vein that leads to a fat Bonanza. Perhaps you blow in $1,000, less or more, upon the production, and as much again upon a dozen beautiful dream-pictures to make the sub-titles seem interesting.

There are other methods.

A reputable studio that was taking a vacation brought out a society feature the other day which illustrates most of the other methods. It was a very serious feature about nothing in particular, and—for a human interest "touch"—a little girl runs into the drawing-room and is drawn hastily into her comedy-mother's arms because there was a plaster cast of Venus there, not fit to look upon. Later, came an expressive "comedy effect" following the heroine's shy experiment with a pair of male pajamas—or were they pajamas?—brought out by the divorcee's sub-titled remark commenting upon the result: "She isn't married at all! If she was, she would know how men put on their clothes."

As for human interest———!

The picture which lingers longest in the reminiscent brain of more than one close follower of the screen is that of an old French Pathe, entitled "The Grandfather." Few who saw have forgotten it. This was the plot: The Prussians of 1870 had ravaged a French village, and nobody was left alive after the Huns stopped working except Grandfather and the boy. The Prussians shot the boy and made Grandfather bring wine for a carouse. And Grandfather poisoned the wine and watched the Prussians die, and then went out and buried the boy.

Yet this picture is "all wrong"—if you believe a good many producers of alleged human interest stuff. Nobody likes gruesome junk and tragedy. But "The Grandfather" wasn't gruesome. It was tragedy—the right kind of tragedy. The story was only 750 feet long, and there were no close-ups and cut-backs to help along suspense—and to serve as padding. It was story. Not only was there no sex-interet, but there was no woman on the screen. As for the cast, the names of actors were not listed upon the film in those days, and nobody over here ever heard of them before—or since.

But they sure did "get across!"

Given a studio, a scenario, a director and several actors, most anything can happen—and generally does. In the case of the society feature, a sub-normal impulse gummed the thought-wires leading into the studio, connecting it with a home for the feeble minded instead of a bureau of intelligence. What happened to "The Grandfather" was that somebody got interested in writing a real plot, and the plot interested a real director, who interested a real company of actors in the production of it. The result was a human interest photoplay that has never been beaten.

Do you remember the acting of the dead body of the boy?

But a 750-foot subject is not a feature. Why not? What are human interest subjects? Nobody knows until they see one upon the screen. "The Clansman" was one. And the plot of "The Clansman" is only the elaborated skeleton of "The Grandfather," worked out with spectacles and complications. Love; danger; calamity; hate; revenge; and love again. This is the technical receipt. But you cannot analyze an explosion. The Pathe Brothers made another masterpiece out of a banker's boy and a row of summer-resort manikins—which is another picture that is remembered.

It isn't the subject, but the handling of it that makes for human interest.

Perhaps the producer who harped upon personality had the right idea after all. A personality means an individual gifted with a mysterious dynamic force, who does things that other people would like to do if they had thought of it first. If he is a scenario writer he is not likely to be a studio hack whose human interest "touches" are taken from manuscripts submitted by outside contributors. He is not likely to be a director whose fame rests upon his own press notices and the production of so many reels a month at so much apiece. If he is an actor, he is either a very good actor, or else no actor at all—not long.

If you get three or more of these personalities together, you can look for a human interest feature—and a bonanza.

HELEN CHADWICK RENEWS WITH PATHE.

Helen Chadwick, who for the past year has been appearing in Pathe pictures, has just renewed her contract for one year, Pathe also obtaining an option on her services for a second year. It is the intention of the Pathe concern to star Miss Chadwick in all her future production, the first of which will be "The Naulahka," an eight-reeler now being directed by George Fitzmaurice at the Solax studio at Fort Lee, N. Y.

ALLAN DWAN LEAVES FOR CALIFORNIA.

Allan Dwan, who recently became affiliated with the Douglas Fairbanks organization as director to alternate with John Emerson, has left New York City for California. While in New York, since signing his new contract, Mr. Dwan has been busy on a new photoplay with Keene Thompson, who recently joined the Fairbanks scenario staff. Mr. Thompson will work with Mr. Dwan on Fairbanks pictures similar to the method used by Director Emerson and Anita Loos.

GRIFFITH IN FRANCE.

A New York Sun dispatch, dated October 8 from somewhere in France with the British Army, states that David W. Griffith is paying his second visit to the battlefront for the purpose of taking pictures of a screen play of the European war.

Goldwyn Employs National Advertising

Will Exploit Company's Productions and Stars in Leading Weekly Magazine.

GOLDWYN Pictures, now securely launched throughout America, will be further introduced directly to the American people through the inauguration in the Saturday Evening Post, beginning October 13, of a tremendous advertising campaign to back up the exhibitors everywhere who are playing or are about to play the Goldwyn productions.

Despite the fact that by the contracts and responses of the public Goldwyn has already proved the tremendous drawing power of its distinctive stars and the productions thus far announced, Samuel Goldfish felt there was still one big step to be taken to focus the attention of the nation's population on the theaters in which these productions will be seen in all communities. The coming campaign is therefore the direct development and outcome of this feeling.

This exploitation is but the beginning of a vast plan of introduction and further popularization of the six stars thus far announced under the Goldwyn imprint—Mae Marsh, Madge Kennedy, Mary Garden, Jane Cowl, Mabel Normand and Maxine Elliott, with other players of equal magnitude to come.

To unify this campaign and not only take in the theater-patronizing public, but the exhibitors in every town and village where there is a picture theater, Goldwyn advertises its special magazine advertising in the motion picture trade journals. This campaign covers an extended period of time, the second of its announcements appearing on October 27.

In conceiving and carrying out a national campaign, Goldwyn follows the sane and careful policy which has marked the career of the company from the beginning, with emphasis laid on the fact that this advertising was not undertaken or promised in advance to encourage exhibitors to book the Goldwyn productions, but is carried out at great cost after exhibitors have signed as evidence of the company's intention of adding to the appeal and drawing power of its productions.

"Goldwyn has been very careful and reticent about this campaign in advance of its actual appearance in print," said Samuel Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn organizations. "We have not wanted to create the impression that we were selling our pictures to exhibitors as the result of an advertising campaign. We have already sold our pictures to the exhibitors on their intrinsic merits, because of the strength of our stars and our stories and the elements which have been incorporated into the pictures.

"Already as a result of a year's effort we have made these productions known and appreciated by the American public. What we are now doing by this additional campaign is to tell the American public that Goldwyn Pictures actually on view in theaters everywhere give proof of the superiority of Goldwyn production."

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of October 7 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Bab's Diary" at the Strand.

THE principal photo-dramatic feature for the week of October 7 at The Strand was "Bab's Diary," an adaptation of Mary Roberts Rinehart's famous "Sub-Deb" stories, in which Adolph Zukor is starring the clever and diminutive Marguerite Clark. She portrays the role of Bab Archibald, a mischievous and attractive boarding-school girl, who resents being treated as a child and astonishes and worries her parents and elder sister by announcing her engagement to marry a young man. In the supporting cast are Nigel Barrie, Leonora Morgan, Frank Lossee, Isabel O'Madigan, Richard Barthelmess, Helen Green, Guy Coombes, Jack O'Brien and George Odell.

An educational film, "The Warblers of France," "Mutt and Jeff in the Laundry," and the Strand Topical Review, were also on the program. The soloists were Rose Lind and Henri de Caux.

Magda at "The Rialto."

Clara Kimball Young appeared on the screen at The Rialto in the photoplay version of Herman Sudermann's masterly drama, "Magda." Margaret Turnbull put into film form the story of the conflict of wills between the stern, provincial father and the daughter, whose talents won for her a grand opera career. Emile Chautard directed Miss Young and her own company in the production.

Mr. Rothapfel's Animated Magazine, scientific films, and travel picture, and a comedy completed the program.

The soloists were Albano and Mlle. Madeleine D'Espinoy.

"Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" at the Globe.

"Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," William Fox's excellent picturization of the fascinating Arabian Nights Tale, has finished its third and last week at the Globe.

The filmed Aladdin is one of the most thrilling and spectacular stories ever put upon the screen, and the youngsters who enact the principal roles—the Fox Kiddies—are a pleasing and distinct departure from current types in movie heroes and heroines.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street Theater, for the entire week, Edward Everett Hale's immortal masterpiece, "The Man Without a Country," was shown.

Gladys Varden, L-Ko Comedienne

DURING the past five months Gladys Varden, L-Ko comedienne, has had prominent parts in nine of the two-reel features produced under the supervision of J. G. Blystone. This comes very near constituting a record, and means that Miss Varden has had very little time for anything but work. It also accounts for the steady improvement in her handling of characterizations since she joined Blystone's band of funmakers. At the present she is rated among the most popular young women appearing on the Universal program, and plans are now afoot to star her in several unusual L-Ko comedies that are being prepared for early production.

Gladys Varden.

Gladys Varden is a native of Washington, D. C., where she was born twenty-two years ago. She is a blonde, with blue eyes and golden hair. It was her carefree manner and ability to look pleasant on the least provocation that first attracted Blystone's attention to her when she applied for work at the L-Ko studio. According to life insurance statistics, Miss Varden is of nearly perfect physique, for she stands 5 feet 5 inches in height and weighs exactly 130 pounds. She sings and plays several musical instruments, and has won prizes in dancing contests, both in the east and on the coast.

Some of the best comedies in which Miss Varden has taken part are "Gambling on the Green," "Scars and Stripes," "A Surf Scandal," "Props, Drops and Flops" and "Soapsuds and Sirens."

She declares it is her ambition to become a director, and with this end in view spends practically all of her time about the studio, whether she is working in the production being filmed or not.

MARY PICKFORD ADOPTS 600 SOLDIERS.

Mary Pickford, the Artcraft star, has become the little Fairy godmother to six hundred California soldiers. They constitute the second battalion of the First Regiment of California Field Artillery, comprising Battery E of Oakland, Battery F of Los Angeles and Battery D of San Diego. Within a few months, when the battalion accompanies the rest of the regiment to France, each man in "Mary's Six Hundred" will wear a locket about his neck containing a miniature of his petite protector.

Miss Pickford has formally adopted the entire battalion and is now having six hundred miniature photographs turned out for presentation to "her boys." The formal adoption took place at Camp Arcadia, near Los Angeles, where Col. Fred Peterson, commanding officer of the battalion, ordered out the entire force of men for the ceremony.

"I intend to see to it that the boys receive plenty of tobacco and candy," said Miss Pickford.

Abrams and Schulberg on Tour

Trip of Paramount Heads Coincident With Million Dollar Advertising Campaign of Their Company.

IT was not merely coincidental that Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount, and B. P. Schulberg, general manager, started on their long tour of the United States to visit exhibitors in every city of fifty thousand population or over, just prior to the announcement of the million dollar campaign of Paramount and Artcraft still further to promote the popularity of the motion pictures bearing those trademarks.

As a matter of fact, before the beginning of the tour of the Paramount officials the big drive had been thoroughly discussed, and it had been definitely determined that one of the most important phases of the campaign would be that of personal contact with the exhibitor. In other words, if an advertisement of these pictures appears in a great national magazine or newspaper it must at once be associated in the minds of the readers with their local theaters exhibiting these products. This will be done by means of trademarks employed in all advertising, identifying marks which cannot be overlooked or mistaken.

The exhibitors themselves, however, must have first hand knowledge of the plan, and also they are certain to have ideas of their own which will be of value to the corporation in rendering the campaign of greater practical value to them. Hence the tour of the officials who will carefully in each instance not only explain in detail the idea of the drive, but obtain as many ideas as possible which will be useful in increasing the service-value of the whole undertaking.

"Among other important matters that I must take up while here," said Mr. Abrams in Los Angeles, "is that of making additional productions in the West. I will take this up with Mr. Lasky at once. Weather conditions will render this course advisable for outdoor productions to a large extent.

"Mr. Schulberg and I," continued Mr. Abrams, "wish to confer with exhibitors and find out just what type of pictures is best suited to each locality during the present war crisis. This is an important period in motion picture history, and Paramount and Artcraft will make a still greater bid for universal popularity.

"With the present great interest in the war and the continued increase in living costs the public is turning more and more to the screen for relaxation, and it is now up to the producers and distributors to give them at a reasonable price the necessary amusement.

"We expect to remain here about three days and will then visit San Diego and some of the other southern California cities before starting North. My idea in coming to Los Angeles direct was to get first hand information from the studios here to transfer to the exhibitors on the trip."

Capellani a Metro Director

Third Producer To Be Signed in a Week By the Rowland Organization.

RICHARD A. HOWLAND, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, announces the signing of Albert Capellani, famous French director, to produce super-productions with famous stars under the Metro banner. This is the third director to be signed by Metro within a week, the others being Frank Reicher, formerly of Lasky, and William S. Davis, recently of Fox.

Mr. Capellani came to America about two years ago, after serving the first year of the great war as an officer in the French army. He was relieved from duty through illness contracted at the battle of Soissons, and as war conditions made it impossible for him to continue his profession in France he brought his family to America.

Albert Capellani's French production of Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables" is acknowledged to be one of the greatest motion picture masterpieces. As director for Clara Kimball Young he produced "The Common Law," "Camille," "Trilby" and others for World-Pictures. His most recent production is "The Richest Girl," starring Ann Murdock, for Empire All-Star, and released by Mutual.

Mr. Capellani was trained as a director in the old Pathe Company of Paris, a pioneer in the art. He was with this concern twelve years, or practically during the entire development of the motion picture.

The director is popular with players. His manner in the studio is one of infinite congeniality and patient courtesy. Never has he been known to raise his voice in anger against one of the players, and yet the results he has obtained speak for themselves as peerless examples of the photo-dramatic art. With great facilities for producing big features at his disposal, together with the most talented stars, Mr. Capellani feels that his affiliation with Metro Pictures Corporation will result in the making of the greatest pictures of his career.

Director Capellani is now resting for two weeks at Atlantic City.

Starts Literary Bureau

Henry McMahon Will Actively Help Producers Who Require Special Service.

A NOVEL idea of helpfulness to producers is put forward by Henry MacMahon in the establishment of his Literary Bureau, which was opened on October 1 at 321 West 55th street, New York. As he says:

"Every film executive and publicity manager needs outside help or information in a hurry now and again. The regular staff is tied up with other matters, or the needed facts are not available without digging in the libraries and some hours of journalistic interviewing. For instance, a point in history, drama, art or science baffles producing director or scenario chief; or, there is an unusual number of writing orders to be executed; or, perhaps, it is imperative to get in touch with some important personage for an interview and a story. I purpose to meet this long felt lack of supplemental service. Whatever your literary problem is bring it here. I can solve it for you, or I can put you in immediate touch with the clues to its solution."

Having done extensive research work for D. W. Griffith and many other producers, Mr. MacMahon is peculiarly qualified for this branch of effort. His acquaintance with the theatrical and literary field of New York is second to none. During a vacation from his regular labors he has been contributing articles to several of the magazines and feature supplements. He will be daily in his study in West 55th street henceforth and may be reached by telephone, Columbus 2969.

NEW DIRECTORS AND STARS FOR L-KO.

General Director J. G. Blystone, of L-KO Comedies, is increasing his forces, both directors and stars, to meet the increased requirements of the times. There seems to be a certain indication that war is bringing on a demand for more comedies, and L-KO has acted upon the behest of President Julius Stern to anticipate the demand by increased production.

Bobby Dunn, a former comedian in Keystone's, has been signed for L-KO's, and will be directed in a series of comedies by Robert Kerr, who was also associated with Mark Sennett in producing Keystones. Eddie Kennedy has been engaged as Dunn's chief foil.

Noel Smith, having been called to the colors, is replaced as director of Hughie Mack by James Davis. This company is now working out a tropical comedy, to be called "Hulu Hula Hughie." Frank Howard Clark, formerly chief editor in the scenario department, is now directing Phil Dunham and Lucille Hutton in one of his own scenarios.

Clarence Barr is another recent addition to L-KO's directorial staff, coming to the Hollywood studio with wide experience in comedy directing to recommend him. Vin Moore and Dick Smith, old stand-bys of L-KO, continue to turn out their usual number of merrymakes. Thus will L-KO keep ahead of the demand for "cheer-ups" in war time.

G. P. HAMILTON A NEW TRIANGLE DIRECTOR.

G. P. Hamilton, veteran of the stage and screen, with twenty-three years' experience as motion picture and dramatic performer, producer and director, has been added to the Triangle Film Corporation's large directing staff at the Culver City studio. At one time Hamilton was general manager of the St. Louis Motion Picture Company. Prior to that he was production manager of the American Film Company and superintendent of the Essanay studios and factories in Chicago. He also served five years with the Biograph in New York and Los Angeles. Hamilton's star and company have not yet been selected, but he plans to begin work on his first Triangle picture in the very near future.

STRYCHMANS, RECOVERED, WITH ARTCRAFT.

After a severe and protracted illness, Hector V. Strychmans returned to New York and the film fraternity this week still a little thin, but otherwise the same old Strych. He announces that he has affiliated with the Artcraft organization.

Chaplin Foreign Rights

First National Circuit Disposes of World Interests to William Vogel Productions, Inc.

THE foregn rights to Chaplin's forthcoming comedies have been purchased from the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., by William M. Vogel, who recently returned from a two years' stay in Australia, where he has been handling World and Metro pictures.

Mr. Vogel's extensive knowledge of the foreign field has already enabled him to dispose of much of his territory, the rights for England going to the Western Import Company and those for Australia to Australasian Films, Ltd. He expects to close practically all foreign rights before the release of the first picture, and reports record prices all along the line.

The deal is said to have involved Mr. Vogel to the extent of nearly half a million dollars, which is one of the largest individual obligations in the film field for some time. Mr. Vogel has formed a company, the William Vogel Productions, Inc., with offices at 1020 Longacre Building, where his Chaplin and other interests will be centered.

Pomeroy Cannon

WITH a personality most agreeable, Pomeroy Cannon, one of the most gifted "heavies" in pictures, is by the choice of the casting drector usually presented to his public in seriously earnest roles, all of which he accepts as a testimonial to his histrionic ability. Mr. Cannon has for several years been a prominent member of the Los Angeles film colony, in high favor with the largest producers. His earliest picture appearances were in "The Fall of a Nation," "Intolerance," "An Innocent Magdalen," "The Little Liar," and other productions, in minor parts. Since then he has been playing next to the lead in particularly well-known features — for instance, as Chuckawalla Bill in "The Parson of Panamint," with Dustin Farnum, as Bob Evans, with Douglas Fairbanks in "The Good Bad Man," and as Warden Evans in "The Honor System," and as the heavy in "Pidgin Island" and "The Promise." His next forthcoming role is as King Pharaoh in the Mena multiple reel production, "By Super-Strategy." He is also slated for a heavily featured role in a William H. Clifford production soon in preparation. Pomeroy Cannon is a Kentuckian, and comes to the screen from the legitimate stage.

WOUNDED ITALIAN POET WRITES FOR SCREEN.

The Monopole-Film, a motion picture producer of Rome, has undertaken to screen some of the newest stories of the Italian poet, Sam Benelli, who has had a glorious part in the tremendous achievements of his country's armies. He has been severaly wounded and in the period of his recovery has turned his pen to writing stories for the screen. Sam Benelli is one of the leading poets of Italy and the news that his genius will find expression in motion pictures has caused a stir of expectancy not only in cinematographic circles, but in the literary and artistic world as well.

NEW ROLE FOR MARY MILES MINTER.

Henry King will supervise the Mary Miles Minter productions henceforth. He has started work on her newest one, "The Mate of the Sally Ann," which gives her excellent opportunities to display the famous Minter versatility. Henry Albert Phillips wrote the new play, which is the fourth for Miss Minter under her new two-year contract.

"JOHNNY" WATERS TO ASSIST BALSHOFER.

Fred J. Balshofer, president of Yorke Film Corporation, has engaged John Waters as his assistant director for Harold Lockwood's next Metro wonderplay, "Love Me for Myself Alone," and for subsequent productions. Mr. Waters has for the past year been associated with "Doc" Willat of Technicolor. Previous to that time he was assistant director to Wray Physioc at the Biograph, in the production of two-reel and three-reel features. He has also worked for Reliance, Rex and other companies, on both the East and West coasts.

BESSIE BARRISCALE ON NEW PICTURE.

Bessie Barriscale and Raymond B. West have begun work on the filming of her latest Paralta play, "Within the Cup," written by Monte M. Katterjohn, which will follow the release of "Madam Who" and "Rose o' Paradise."

Miss Barriscale will act the role of "Thisbe Lorraine," an erratic young literary woman and artist, who attempts to make a career for herself. The opening scenes are laid in the Latin quarter in Paris and change to old Greenwich Village in New York City, which has become the great Bohemian center of American artistic and literary life.

STERN'S NEW CATALOG IS WORTH READING.

The 1918 catalog of still and moving picture cameras, lenses and photographic supplies issued by the David Stern Company of 1027-1029 Madison street, Chicago, is considerably more than a catalog. It is a photographic handbook which tersely tells the reader enough about the goods listed to enable him to make a judicious selection of the proper camera or accessory which his specific needs require. It is worth real money, but our readers may have it free by writing to the David Stern Company and mentioning that they read about it in the Moving Picture World.

PATHE CONTROLS LARGE PRODUCING CAPACITY.

The big increase in production of Pathe features necessitated by the announcement of Pathe Plays means an enlargement of studio facilities. In addition to the four studios used by the Astra Film Corporation in Jersey City and Fort Lee, and the Rolin studio in Los Angeles, three new production plants have been taken over in whole or in part for the making of Pathe pictures. They are the former Sanger studio, 134th street and Park avenue, New York, the Norma Talmadge studio in 48th street, New York, and the Kalem studio in Los Angeles.

GOLDWYN TO DISTRIBUTE WAR PICTURE.

Goldwyn Distributing Coroporation announces to the trade it will distribute "The Freedom of the World," one of the productions made as an outgrowth of the world war.. Under a contract between Ira M. Lowry and his associates the producers, Goldwyn, obtain the exclusive rights for world distribution of the subject. It was months in the making in Philadelphia and Canada, and thousands of Canadian troops in maneuvers, training and camp evolutions are shown in the picture prior to the time when the locale of the story switches to the French battle line.

CAMPEAU RE-ENGAGED BY FAIRBANKS.

Frank Campeau, who plays the part of "30-30" Madden in "The Man from Painted Post," the forthcoming Artcraft release, has been re-engaged by Douglas Fairbanks to appear in his next production. As a portrayer of heavy dramatic roles, Campeau has few rivals, and because of his unusual ability was selected for the new cast, as contrast to the Fairbanks smile and light comedy characterization. It is likely Compeau will be permanently identified with the Fairbanks-Artcraft photoplays.

VISITING EXCHANGE MAN.

A. J. Nelson, branch manager for General Film Company at Washington, D. C., was a visitor at the home office of General in New York this week. He reports a strong demand for the O. Henry and George Ade releases, as well as an unusual amount of interest in the de luxe production of "Camille" with Helen Hesperia, just released by General.

WOODS BUYS HALF INTEREST IN "ROMANOFFS."

A. H. Woods has purchased a half interest in Herbert Brenon's sensational picture, "The Fall of the Romanoffs," with Iliodor, now playing to capacity at the Broadway theater. At the conclusion of its engagement at this theater the picture will be shown at some other Broadway playhouse and will be exhibited in the leading theaters throughout the country.

"Fighting Odds"

Goldwyn Picture Corporation Presents Maxine Elliot in a Photodramtic Debut.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"FIGHTING ODDS" is the story of a young business man who has succeeded in a large way as a manufacturer, largely through co-operative ideas suggested by his wife. He disregards her advice, combines with monopoly interests and is made the sacrificial victim to their greed. He is framed by getting his signature to a doctored statement of financial resources and jailed, while the real villain escapes. The wife now undertakes to rescue him and punish the guilty. She does so by methods which have been often used in moving pictures, using sex influence, and she goes to the villain's rooms at midnight in evening dress to get the incriminating papers, finally obtaining justice and releasing her husband.

The Goldwyn Company has utilized a full force of studio artistry in this presentation, and Maxine Elliot responds adequately to all of her opportunities, but these opportunities are limited. The story idea is a popular one, the saner vision of woman's intuition dominating man's faulty logic, but the story development is along lines so often used, particularly in the high points, that interest is marred where it should be most intense.

"Camille" by Fox Players

Dumas' Drama Pleases Audience at the Academy of Music, New York—Theda Bara Plays the Titular Role.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE "Camille," played by Theda Bara and an excellent supporting cast of Fox Film Corporation players, found favor with a good sized audience at the Fox Academy in New York. Theda Bara is not the type of actress to put a living soul of emotion into the great drama that capped the Romantic Movement. Camille is all romance; she is a cry of the soul. Theda Bara is thoroughly modern and matter of fact; but the story that she tells certainly interested the spectators. In many ways it is her best work. She is progressing, but she should make every effort to control a mannerism of moistening her lower lip. It is hardly an emotional gesture and is apt to be an anti-climax in an emotional scene.

One of the chief elements in the success of the picture is its fine sets and the care that has been taken in the general staging, which shows well for the ability of J. Gordon Edwards, the director who is responsible for the screening of the work. Of the supporting players the first notice, I think, should be given to Alice Gale for her characterization of Madame Prudence, rough and ready to eat, drink and borrow money. Albert Roscoe plays Armand and Water Law, has the part of de Varville. Claire Whitney plays Armond's sister, and Glen White has the role of her fiance. They all do commendable work.

It is a Theda Bara picture. Her large following will see such in it that will please them and exhibitors should boost is as a Theda Bara "Camille." It is in many ways a very pretty picture and there is no doubt that it will be popular with many.

"The Public Defender"

Six-Part Propaganda Photoplay Has Fine Foundation but Is Weak in Treatment—Frank Keenan, Alma Hanlon and Robert Edeson Head Cast.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

INSPIRED by Mayer C. Goldman's book of the same title, "The Public Defender," a photoplay in six parts, written by Mr. Goldman and Frank W. Harris, is now offered to the public by Harry Raver, with Frank Keenan, Alma Hanlon and Robert Edeson in the cast. The scenario is the work of Frederick Rath, and the production was staged by Burton King. The underlying motive of the story is novel and will have a wide appeal. Unfortunately, the incidents chosen for the development of the plot are often of the most conventional sort, and have not been expertly handled.

The Goldman book is a plea for equal rights before the bar of justice for the rich and the poor. To quote from a foreword by Justice W. O. Howard: "Every technicality and delay and defence and avenue of escape known to the cunning of lawyers are available to the rich man indicted for crime. The poor man under indictment is permitted to go through the forms and appearances of a trial; but such a trial is only a mockery. * * * The provision for a Pubilc Defender should be imbedded in our statutes. No law could be more economical —more humane."

The story told by the photoplay illustrates the experience of an innocent man, convicted of murder and about to be electrocuted, who is saved when his case comes into the hands of a newly appointed Public Defender. In its present form the picture is like the ordinary melodrama, with its desperate struggle to reach the proper authority and secure a stay and the race to the prison with the paper, an aeroplane being used in this case. The action is too slow at this point and the interest is not well sustained. In spite of its defects, however, "The Public Defender" will be found instructive and, to many persons, entertaining. The theme is worthy of a better setting.

The production has many things in its favor, the cast taking first place. Frank Keenan as a District Attorney with an unenviable record acts with his usual complete grasp of a character and ability to make it clear to the spectator. At no point do his efforts tax him in the slightest degree. Alma Hanlon is entirely satisfactory as Mary Reed, the heroine. To Robert Edeson falls the character of Arthur Nelson, the Public Defender. He is earnest, physically well fitted, but has not mastered the art of screen acting at its best. He attempts to make his points too rapidly and is too much the actor all through his scenes. John Sainpolis plays the falsely accused man as the authors drew him, and good characterizations are contributed by Florence Short, Louis Sterns, C. A. Martin, William B. Vreen, "Tex" La Grove, Harry Kingsley, Helen Conwell, James Sullivan, F. A. Cronin, John O'Keefe, and J. K. Roberts.

IN ACCORDANCE with its policy referred to in last week's issue the Kalem Company is releasing two additional one-reel features dealing with the exploits of Grant, Police Reporter, which are fully up to the standard set in the previous issues of this series. George Larkin, as Tom Grant, Police Reporter of the Chronicle, is ably assisted by Ollie Kirkby and a competent cast, which includes Harry Gordan, Cyril Courtney, Robert Ellis, Mary Taylor Ross and Mrs. Welsh.

"The Sign of the Scarf."

George Larkin in this number upholds his reputation for performing thrilling stunts, by dropping from the branches of a tree on to the roof of a house, and then swinging from the eaves, in through an open window and rescuing Ollie Kirkby who, as an heiress, has been kidnapped by the "Spider's" gang in the hopes of obtaining a fortune by substituting one of their accomplices for the heiress.

"The Man With the Limp."

While endeavoring to overtake "the man with a limp" who, posing as a foreign nobleman has stolen jewels from an heiress to whom he was engaged, George Larkin, after jumping from a second-story window to the ground, and being nearly run over by an automobile, which he commandeers, reaches the dock, climbs to the roof, lassoes the mast of the steamer which is just leaving the pier, swings himself into the rigging of the ship and succeeds in capturing the thief.

"The Man from Painted Post"

Artcraft Presents Douglas Fairbanks in a Cowboy-Detective Vehicle Written By Himself.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE MAN FROM PAINTED POST" is the story of a hero who foils the villain rustler of cattle, when the villain gets the heroine, the little schoolmistress, in his power. Of course this involves a lot of riding up and down of cowboys amid dust and over the treeless plains, taking us back to the days when interest in moving pictures was supposed to depend on motion, when rushing trains and riding cowboys constituted a genuine attraction, when the two-gun hero killed villains by the dozen. Fairbanks was in mood reminiscent when he wrote this play. He is about the only author left who could get away with that stuff, but he does. His athletic feats still charm, and his cheery smile still holds. People may not care much whether the villain is foiled and the heroine rescued from his clutches, but people like Fairbanks on the screen, and they will go to see him in anything—for a while.

There is nothing to the story but Douglas Fairbanks, and plenty of him. He kills men two at a time, crossing his revolvers in front of him and not looking at either of them—he has a sort of second sight when it comes to shooting on the screen. To count up the cattle rustlers he slays in this one picture is a mere detail. Such is his duty, and he does it. His best work, however, is in a pretty little courtship scene, where he rises out of his gory mood into genuine screen presentation. He pleases immensely in comedy. He has not given himself suitable opportunity in "The Man From Painted Post," not the kind of opportunity his admirers prefer, but, still, he is Douglas Fairbanks, and he is pleasing in spite of his play.

Swift Progress Made by Select

Great Organization Well Launched—Productions Completed and Marketed—Many Offices Opened and Contracts Signed.

ALTHOUGH Select Pictures Corporation has been in operation for less than two months a truly marvelous progress has been made by President Lewis J. Selznick and General Manager Arthur S. Kane in establishing the new organization.

Having taken over the home offices of the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises in New York City, the company has already fully equipped branches in operation in nineteen cities of the United States, embracing the various centers of distribution for the motion picture industry. Exchange managers have been appointed to each of these branches, as well as a sales manager and a special representative with headquarters in New York.

Contracts have been signed calling for the distribution of the pictures made by Clara Kimball Young and her own company, the Norma Talmadge pictures presented by Joseph M. Schenck, the Constance Talmadge pictures presented by Lewis J. Selznick, and Alice Brady, a recently signed Select star, in productions to be presented by the Select company itself.

The first of Miss Young's pictures is "Magda," from the famous drama of the same name. In this production Clara Kimball Young was directed by Emile Chautard and has made what will undoubtedly rank as the finest of her screen presentations. "Magda" is completed and distribution of the picture started. Miss Young's second picture, "Shirley Kaye," is well under way. The first of the Norma Talmadge pictures, "The Moth," was released a week ago and accorded a splendid reception. Miss Talmadge has also finished her second picture, "The Secret of the Storm Country," which is a screen version of Grace Millar White's memorable story.

Constance Talmadge has also finished her first Select picture. It is a wonderfully strong screen presentation of Cosmo Hamilton's novel, "Scandal," which has been running serially in the Green Book magazine. This picture will undoubtedly prove the strongest first starring vehicle that ever brought a young actress to the premiere honors of the screen. Constance Talmadge does unusually fine work in this role of the "worst spoiled girl in America." "Scandal" is ready for distribution.

Alice Brady's first Select picture has just been started at the Paragon studio in Fort Lee. It is "Her Silent Sacrifice," picturized from the play "The Red Mouse," by Henry J. W. Dam, which had a successful Broadway run a few years ago. Miss Brady is being directed by Edward Jose.

It has been arranged that each of these four stars will produce a series of eight productions during the coming twelve months, and all of these Star Series pictures will be distributed by Select.

In addition, Select Pictures has arranged to distribute a number of splendid single productions of the highest quality. These include "The Wild Girl," the first picture to be made by vaudeville's famous star, Eva Tanguay, which will be released during the next few weeks; the stupendous film drama "Lest We Forget," built around the sinking of the Lusitania, and other international episodes, which will present Rita Jolivet as the star, and which will be released during November, and the sensational drama of food control and price regulation, "The Public Be Damned," now being shown.

Select has been particularly successful during its six weeks of sales campaigning in closing big contracts with exhibitors of prominence. Both Arthur S. Kane, the general manager, and Sales Manager C. E. Shurtleff, have been subject for congratulation on account of the remarkable showing which their sales forces have made in the very short time they have been operating.

CAMPAIGN BOOK ON "WHO IS 'NUMBER ONE'?"

Paramount is sending to exhibitors and exchanges this week one of the most comprehensive campaign books ever issued on a serial. The book tells everything about "Who Is 'Number One'?" the Paramount serial, that the exhibitors want to know. An artistic double-page spread shows scenes from the fifteen-episode serial. Another page is filled with miniatures of a few of the newspaper ads that will be used in the campaign.

A small reproduction of Frederic Dorr Steele's twenty-four sheet poster, that will be posted by Paramount in 150 cities, illustrates the article outlining the billboard campaign. Other pages are devoted to Anna Katharine Green, who wrote the story, which is to appear in full in America's greatest newspapers, and to Kathleen Clifford, star of "Who Is 'Number One'?"

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

THE SIGN OF THE SCARF (Kalem).—An episode of the Grant, Police Reporter series, in which George Larkin maintains his record for acrobatic stunts by dropping from the branches of a tree on to the roof of a house, and then by swinging himself in through a window to rescue a girl who is being held prisoner. A review is printed in another column of this issue.

THE MAN WITH THE LIMP (Kalem).—In this number of "Grant, Police Reporter," George Larkin furnishes two thrills, first by leaping from a second story window to the ground, and later by boarding an outgoing steamer by lassoing one of the masts and swinging out into the rigging from the roof of the steamship dock. This episode is up to the standard in interest, and is reviewed in full on another page of this issue.

Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

THE MAN FROM PAINTED POST, October 1.—A Douglas Fairbanks vehicle by himself. Plenty of Fairbanks, but not at his best. He is, nevertheless, pleasing, his personality carrying the play.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

ANYTHING ONCE, October 8.—This five-part photoplay is treated as melodramatic farce and has plenty of movement. Franklyn Farnum is the star. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Butterfly Pictures.

THE GIRL WHO WON OUT, October 8.—A five-reel feature, by Judge Willis Brown, with a pronounced juvenile interest. The plot concerns two little girls and their efforts to find a home after their mother's death. They are finally successful, after numerous trials, and the picture ends happily. The story interest is slight, but works on the sympathies and is generally pleasing. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Educational Films Corporation.

SEALS AND PELICANS IN THEIR NATIVE HAUNTS (Educational). October 1.—This picture is an unusually interesting one, showing the seals as they congregate on Magail Island, off the coast of California. Closeups of seals lying on the rocks, and also views of hundreds at a time moving off to their feeding grounds near the coast of Japan are unusual sights. The pictures of the pelicans on Anacapa Island give interesting closeups of the young of the pelican and groups of the old birds, in fact, hundreds of them congregated on the island. This is an intensely interesting picture.

A FLYING TRIP THROUGH HAWAII (Educational), October.—This picture is in two parts, the first release of which will be October 8 and the second October 15. It shows in tinted photography some of the most interesting features of Hawaii. Among these are the natives fishing in the surf with throw-nets, and the surf riding at Waikiki beach. These latter pictures are unusually good.

ANIMALS OF AUSTRALIA (Educational).—A Ditmars number, in which the animals of Australia are given nice illustration. The lizard, the alligator, the emu and cassowary, the rabbit-eared bandicoot, and the echidna, the link between the mammal and the bird, form the features of the picture.

Fox Film Corporation.

CAMILLE (September 30.—A five-reel picture with Theda Bara playing the famous romantic heroine. It is a pretty, ably-acted and interesting offering. For a longer notice see elsewhere in this issue.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

FIGHTING ODDS, October 7.—A vehicle for the debut of Maxine Elliott, in which her opportunities are limited, but handled with dignity and grace.

Greater Vitagraph.

THE LOVE DOCTOR, October 8.—The theme of this picture would have made excellent farce. It is treated seriously by the author and is not very impressive. Earle Williams has the principal part. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

SPORTS AND SPLASHES (Vitagraph).—One-part farce by Lawrence Semon, full of rough-house fun of the usual sort belonging to this brand.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE JOY OF FREEDOM (Drew), October 1.—An amusing comedy, in which Mr. and Mrs. Henry Minor (Sydney and Mrs. Drew) discover themselves for the second time. Mrs. Minor goes away to visit, leaving Henry apparently sad but inwardly joyous. A week of late nights, etc., however, proves enough for him, and the remainder of his wife's vacation he spends in yearning for her and in trying to pamper her every wish obviously expressed over the telephone, such as the desire for a victrola, or an automobile. Returned home, there is general rejoicing and the Minor home is turned into a vertible paradise.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 144 (Gaumont), October 3.—Interesting items of this issue are U. S. engineers receiving instructions in sinking concrete piles for big gun foundations, society girls of Washington send a bear cub as a mascot to General Pershing, a dental parlor on wheels for use in the camps, and the world's largest bridge being completed at Quebec, Canada, and bidding goodbye to the western regiment known as the "Grizzlies" at San Francisco.

JERRY IN YODEL LAND (Cub), October 4.—One of the usual type of Jerry comedies in which he accidentally gains the position of valet to an old gentleman who has the gout. He meets with some bandits who finally are routed by him and the old man and the nurse in the case are saved. A bicycle figures largely in the comedy.

THE GIRL ANGLE (Horkheimer), October 8.—A five-part production featuring Anita King. The story is of the western type and is quite interesting in development, treating of how a young woman believing herself a man-hater goes west and tries to set up an establishment on a ranch by herself. In doing so she meets with considerable difficulty and in the end falls in love with a man whom she has believed to be a bandit, but who turns out to be connected with the secret service.

SOUTHERN PRIDE (American), October 8.—Gail Kane is the featured member of the cast in this five-part production, which is only of moderate quality. The story is clean but not wonderfully strong. It treats of an incident in the history of a family of creoles who in reduced circumstances were forced to part with a number of family relics to gain money with which to keep up appearances. In the course of events the son of the house steals a pair of valuable bracelets and a pearl necklace belonging to his sister and presents them to a beautiful vampire. Meanwhile his sister meets a difficult situation in which she finds herself in the clutches of an antique buyer who wants to marry her. Discovering the whereabouts of the jewelry she goes to the woman and demands it back. Thus the situation is saved, and the story ends happily with the bethrothal of the girl to the man she loves.

FIRING FATHER (Strand), October 9.—A moderately entertaining but clean comedy with Billie Rhodes and Jay Belasco in the lead. In the picture the lover in desperately striving to possess the girl he loves in spite of the opposition of her father, persuades her to light a fake fire in her room. Her father, believing the house to be on fire, calls the fire brigade and the lover joins the gang and so wins the girl.

REEL LIFE NO. 76 (Gaumont), October 11.—Subjects contained in this issue are "A Dam Across the Mississippi," "The Development of the Watch," "Acrobatic Cyclists" and "Cantaloupes of the Imperial Valley." These subjects are interesting and well illustrated.

THE CALENDAR GIRL (American), October 15.—Juliette Day is the featured member of this very poor five-part production. The picture intended for a dramatic presentation misses its mark. The story is slight and poorly constructed. It centers about the fortunes of a young girl whose picture is used on an advertising calendar of a modiste establishment in which she has worked as a mannequin. A love story interwoven sustains what interest the picture possesses.

REEL LIFE NO. 77 (Gaumont), October 18.—"A Colonial Church" is the opening subject of this number of Reel Life No. 77, and gives views and facts of a South Carolina church. "When Dishwashing is a Pleasure," "The Banana Industry" and "A Primitive Jeweler" are other subjects of interest presented.

Overland Films Corporation.

A MAN'S LAW (Overland).—A well-acted and tense screen drama with Irving Cummings and Ruth Sinclair as the stars, this five-part picture is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE GHOST HOUSE (Lasky), October 1.—A good picture featuring Jack Pickford and Louise Huff. The story, as its title implies, runs rather strong on the ghost stuff, which provides situations creepy as well as tense. The subject is reviewed in another column.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE TORTURE OF SILENCE (Pathe-Gold Rooster), October 14.—A strong five-reel subject, featuring Mrs. Emmy Lynn. She is a remarkably beautiful woman and plays the part of a doctor's wife, whose husband thinks her guilty of infidelity. He separates her from her child and allows her to think the child seriously ill until he learns the secret she has withheld from him. The production has a powerful psychological motive and holds the interest well. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE DAGGER DUEL (Pathe), October 14.—Episode No. 15 of "The Fatal Ring." This number, in which the story approaches its close, abounds in adventurous happenings. Tom Carlton saves Pearl just as she is about to be hurled over a cliff in an auto. The masquerade ball is another entertaining feature, and the installment closes with Carslake fighting members of the cult with daggers.

BLISS (Pathe), October 14.—A one-reel comedy, featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. The action at the beginning would have been more amusing with an explanatory subtitle or two; later there is plenty of humor of the knockabout sort. Harold wins the girl in spite of the old man's desire to have her wed a count. A pleasing number.

BIARRITZ—THE FASHIONABLE (Pathe), October 14.—Tinted views of the celebrated French watering resort, showing the grotto, light house, great rocks jutting out of the water and other scenes along the Basque coast. A picturesque half reel.

THE WARBLERS OF FRANCE (Pathe), October 14.—A splendid nature subject, on same reel with above. This gives some instructive studies of birds of the warbler species, nesting and rearing their young.

Harry Raver.

THE PUBLIC DEFENDER.—A six-part propaganda photoplay founded on Mayer C. Goldman's book, the story has a strong theme and is played by a cast headed by Frank Herman, Alma Hanlon and Robert Edeson. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

ONE SHOT ROSS, October 14.—Good story well acted this five-part melodrama of the West features Roy Stewart. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

WILD SUMAC, October 14.—Elaine Sterne is the author of this five-part photoplay of the Northwest, which is not very convincing. It is reviewed at length on another page of this isue.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 91 (Universal), September 26.—This issue contains auto races at Sheepshead Bay, quelling of Spanish revolution, French instructors instrueting our officers in the south, completion of Quebec bridge and many other features of interest and importance.

CURRENT EVENTS, NO. 21 (Universal), October 6.—Launching of new American-built ship, building of structure in France for American aviators, food saving, Red Cross collections and other topics of present interest are treated in this interesting number.

THE DUEL (Universal Special), October 1.—Installment No. 15 of "The Gray Ghost." The Ghost holds the members of the police force captive while he sets an infernal machine, connected with the telephone. This feature could have been made more convincing. Jean, the character played by Eddie Polo, is seen raising himself up the elevator shaft, walking crosswise, a difficult acrobatic feat. The Ghost and Wade Hildreth struggle for possession of a knife; the Ghost gets it and threatens to kill Hildreth at the close. The installment has considerable suspense and prepares the way for the concluding number.

THE QUEST OF VIRGINIA (Universal Special), Rel. Week of October 8.—No. 1 of a new serial of 16 two-reel installments, to be known as "The Red Ace." Marie Walcamp, who was featured in "Liberty," has the leading role in this, which is apparently to be a somewhat similar type of story. It deals with the efforts of foreign spies in this country and Canada to control the platinum supply by theft and trickery. The opening number arouses much interest and has all the earmarks of a successful war serial. Jacques Jaccard is the director, and others in the cast besides Miss Walcamp are Harry Archer, Bobbie Mack, Lawrence Peyton, Noble Johnson, Yvette Bitchell, L. M. Wells, Charles Brinkley and Miriam Shelby.

THE RED ACE (Universal Special), Rel. Week of October 15.—Installment No. 2, under the special title, "The Lure of the Unattainable." This takes the observer to the scene of the "Lost Hope" mine, located in a wild and beautifully picturesque region. The girl arrives and begins searching for the hidden cache of platinum left by her murdered brother. The gang of foreign spies is constantly shadowing her and trouble threatens. A number of interesting new characters are introduced, including Little Bear, Red Fawn, Pierre and Dutch Kate. The serial is plainly to be one of the adventurous type.

THE TEMPLE OF TERROR (Bison), Rel. Week of October 15.—An African jungle story. Fred Church and Eileen Sedgewick fall into the clutches of a half-breed queen who throws all white people she lays hands on into a den of lions. Miss Sedgewick is thrown into the den and rescued. This is a thrilling two-reeler. The suspense is strong. The entertainment value is very high.

WHO DONE IT? (Joker), Rel. Week of October 15.—A comedy number, by Robert Dillon, featuring Gale Henry, William Franey and Milton Sims. The wife has aspirations to be a "movie" actress and her jealous husband beats up all her men friends. There are some funny moments all through this, and the burlesque moving picture makes a good feature. This is rather better than the average.

WHEN LIZ LETS LOOSE (Victor), Rel. Week of October 15.—A rather unusual subject, from a strictly character standpoint, by E. M. Ingleton, featuring Evelyn Selsbi and Harry Griffith. They appear as low class English cockney types. The woman supports her "bloke" by selling flowers. When he spends her pocket money on another, she tears the waist from the latter and is sent up for fourteen days. On her return Bill gets his punishment and harmony is restored. The story itself is very slight; as a character study this has considerable merit.

THE MAGIC JAZZ BO (Joker), Rel. Week of October 15.—A comic number, by Albert A. Santell, featuring Gladys Tennyson, Dave Morris and others. This contains considerable laughable nonsense and a good novelty. The latter shows the way in which a certain gas may be used to slow up the enemy on the battlefield. The number is original and very entertaining.

WILD AND WOOLLY WOMEN (Nestor), Rel. Week of October 15.—Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran appear in this juvenile comedy subject. The first scenes are in school and the girls go on a hike together. Eddie and Lee pretend to be bandits and carry the girls off to a ranch, where they are put to work. The plot gives oportunity for some pleasing comedy situations, which are well handled.

World Pictures.

SHALL WE FORGIVE HER? (Peerless), October 15.—June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley have the leading roles in this five-part photoplay which has good dramatic material and is well produced. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE BURGLAR (Peerless), October 29.—Six-part screen version of Augustus Thomas' stage play, with Carlyle Blackwell, Madge Evans and Evelyn Greeley. The picture has strong heart interest. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Pathe Releases Russian Subject

"The Painted Doll" Will Be the First Release of Series—Other Features on October 21st Program.

ONE of the most important features of Pathe's program for October 21st, is the first of the Russian Art Films to be released by this company and described as the initial drama of a series which marks a new era in photoplays. This picture, produced by Pathe in the new democracy in six reels, may truly be said to represent the very pinnacle of motion picture art. It is adapted from the famous story by Rushkin, one of the greatest of the Russian writers, and its cast includes the great Mozukin, without a doubt the greatest actor in Russia, if not in Europe.

"The Painted Doll" is a wonderfully dramatic photoplay, superbly produced. Made here, it would cost about $70,000, without allowing for the high salaries paid to stars in this country. One of the very best of the Russian Art Films, it will create a sensation, according to authorities who have seen it.

Mollie King stars in the 6th episode of the "Seven Pearls," entitled "The Abandoned Mine," with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary produced in two reels by Astra. More thrills than ever mark this episode. An explosion frees Ilma and Harry and knocks Perry insensible. It is clear that the man is out of his head. They all three join forces and take refuge in a counterfeiter's den. Ilma and Harry are captured and sentenced to death, but Perry, having established his idiocy, is allowed to wander about. The leader of the band is about to shoot Harry in spite of Ilma's screams, when Perry enters with a can of nitro-glycerine and suddenly throws the can at the gang. An explosion follows. Perry lies motionless, Ilma and Harry are insensible as a rescue party starts to save them, brought to the spot through an ingenious method employed by Harry to attract attention.

Pearl White stars in the 16th episode of "The Fatal Ring," produced in two reels by Astra. This episode has two very big thrills. The first is when Pearl is thrown by Carslake and his adherents into quicksands and narrowly escapes death. The other is at the end of the story when, after many fights and much fast action, she takes refuge under a pile-driver without realizing that the immense hammer is just above her. As the picture fades out, Carslake pulls the lever and the huge piece of iron begins to fall.

There is on this program a two-reel Lonesome Luke Comedy, produced by Rolin, and entitled "Lonesome Luke from London to Laramie." This is said to be another "knock-out" with Harry Pollard as "Lord Algernon," Harold Lloyd as "Lonesome Luke," his valet, Bud Jameyson, as "Brindle Pup" and Bebe Daniels as "Betty Pup," his daughter. When Lord Algernon arrives with his valet and about twenty trunks at Bob Cat Ranch things begin to happen. The boys put the Englishmen through their paces, and at the end Lonesome Luke puts one over on them. Having adopted their own tactics, he tells them: "I'll riddle the first man that follows us" and beats it for the tall timbers with the Belle of Bob Cat.

A split-reel Pathe-Colored scenic and educational is "A Corner of the Morvan," showing beautiful scenes of that picturesque France which has not been despoiled by Barbarians, and "The Wild Duck," part of series released under the main title, "Our Game Birds."

There are also an International cartoon and scenic split-reel and Hearst-Pathe News No. 86 and No. 87.

BROADWAY THEATER WILL SHOW BLUEBIRDS.

Manager Stanley Mastbaum, manager of the Broadway theater, New York, has made an arrangement with Managing Director Carl Laemmle, of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., to show regularly at his theater the Bluebird program. The opening of the series will be Oct. 21 with a Rupert Julian production, entitled "The Savage," the star of which will be Ruth Clifford with Monroe Salisbury leading man. In this manner Bluebird's "Star-Cycle" will be introduced to New York in full week showing at a Broadway playhouse.

State Rights Department

Conducted by A. K. GREENLAND

LESSER RECUPERATING.

Sol L. Lesser has arranged to return to New York during the early part of November, now that he has outgrown the weakening effects of his recent attack of typhoid, which confined him during his last visit to the big city. The purchase of additional material for his exchanges is only one of his purposes, another vital consideration being the completion of the details of the State Rights Distributors, Inc., which organization has been described in a previous issue of this publication. As Lesser is president of this new body, as well as one of its directors, the next meeting awaits his arrival. Membership covering the various territorial divisions in the United States and Canada has now been completely allotted with the exception of the Minneapolis field and that will probably be granted before many days. The Denver district membership has been awarded to L. Goldstein, of the Supreme Photoplays Corp. California's little live wire exchangeman has a host of strong friendships everywhere who will be pleased to be apprised of his recovery after his five weeks' confinement with the dreaded fever.

HOFFMAN MAKES TRIP.

Deals pending with out-of-town exhibitors in various sections of the country caused the departure, last Friday, of M. H. Hoffman to confer with them in the interest of Hoffman-Foursquare pictures. He spent Saturday in Detroit, thence to Chicago, where the Hoffman-Foursquare exchange has just been started by Branch Manager Frank J. Flaherty—and then to St. Louis, where Sidney J. Baker presides over the destinies of the adjacent territory.

When he finished his business in these three cities, Mr. Hoffman looked in on the Cincinnati and Cleveland exchanges, and likewise stopped off to pay his respects to Theodore C. Bronstetter, in charge of the Pittsburgh exchange. He concluded his present trip in Philadelphia, where Division Manager Jerome Abrams presides.

P. V. R. Key, manager of sales and advertising for the Hoffman-Foursquare organization, states that the exhibitors' response to the pictures of this company are particularly satisfying. Quite as important is the Hoffman-Foursquare plan of reasonable rentals, which Mr. Key asserts is making permanent customers in every territory.

NEW WARREN SUBJECT COMPLETED.

"Weavers of Life," the next Warren Productions, Inc., to be offered the state right market, is finished, except for a few final touches in titling and cutting. Its well-known producer pronounces it his masterpiece and will soon stage a becoming and befitting exhibition of his latest work. The story is said to be a sweet, wholesome, appealing one, delicately interspersed with allegorical references, as the title justifies. It is the joint product of the pens of Harry Hoyt and John B. Clymer. Mr. Warren was assisted in his direction of the picture by Lillian Warren, as heretofore. The cast comprises 117 persons by actual count, many of whose names are accepted by-words in highly recognized professional circles. Prominent in this category are Barney Gilmore, Howard Hall, Kenneth Hunter, Earl Schenck, Gilbert Rooney, Helen Hays, Gladys Alexandria, Cedric Ellis, Edna Hibbard, Isabel West, Jennie Eustis, Irving Southard, Percy Standing, Harry Hatfield, Helen Tyler, Elsie Kerns, Margaret Vinton, Martha McGraw and Dulce Moore.

MORE HOWELL HOWLERS.

Alice Howell and her director, J. G. Blystone, are now hard at work on the production of the fifth of the Century Comedy series. The piece, which is a two-reeler like its predecessors, has not been named as yet, but the basis of the scenario concerns the troubles of Alice, who takes the part of a forlorn country school teacher, and a gang of bandits, who provide her most adequately with the sort of situations which befit her talent. "Neptune's Naughty Daughter," the third edition of the Century Comedies' catalogue, will be released November 1.

STEGER STARTS NEW FEATURE.

Julius Steger, president of the Triumph Film Corp., is taking no rest between the filming of "Just a Woman," the Eugene Walter drama in which Charlotte Walker has been starred, and his next production, as yet untitled, but in which Evelyn Nesbit is again being featured. The story is one said to aptly provide for the talents of this well-known star.

"LUST OF THE AGES" SELLING.

Isaac A. Rosenthal, of the Western Civilization Company, closed a contract with the Ogden Pictures Corporation for the rights to "The Lust of the Ages" for the territory of Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana. Mr. Rosenthal intends sending out six prints of the production to be exploited as a road attraction.

Among the original ideas to be used in the exploitation of this attraction is street car advertising in the big cities, where the producton is to play.

A contract was also closed with the Photoplay Exchange of Salt Lake City, on the same production for the territory of Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico. A. L. Stallings, vice-president and manager of the Photoplay exchange, reports that three prints of that production will be kept working until the first week in January. The Alhambra theater at Ogden, Utah, a house with a seating capacity of 2,500, immediately booked the production for a full week's run, beginning October 18.

HILLER & WILK ASTIR.

Hiller & Wilk announce that they have sold the Southern Californian and Arizonian rights on "A Morman Maid" to T. F. Tally, of Los Angeles. Mr. Tally is a member of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and has arranged for the premier in Los Angeles to be given in honor of Mae Murray, the star of this picture, who will appear personally. They have also sold the Australian rights on the W. S. Hart picture, "The Cold Deck," "The Whip" and "The Mormon Maid." Through the efforts of the Hiller & Wilk organization the deal was recently closed by which the "Co-respondent" was sold to the Jewel Productions. "A Mormon Maid" has been sold to Turner and Dahnken for Northern California and Nevada.

Mr. Wilk said, on speaking of the money market in regard to state rights sales, "During the summer there was a tendency to hold off on the actual closing of sales, but as soon as the first touch of cool weather arrived great activity was manifested by the territorial buyers and we expect to have our entire world rights closed out within two or three weeks."

TWO DEALS FOR CORONET.

E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Coronet Films, Inc., announces the completion of two separate deals whereby the weekly educational releases have been secured by E. V. Richards, Jr., of the Saenger Amusement Co. of New Orleans for Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Alabama, and by Isaac A. Rosenthal of Seattle, Wash., for the states of Washington, Oregon, Montana and northeastern Idaho. Both contracts became effective October 1.

ROYSTER CHANGES POSITION.

Nat L. Royster, having severed his connections with the All-Star Features Company, of Jacksonville, Fla., is now the sales manager for the Southern Features Company, which, from its location at Knoxville, Tenn., handles state right productions throughout the Carolinas, Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee. Associated with him in this enterprise is W. E. Drummond, who, like Mr. Royster, qualifies because of his lengthy experience as exhibitor, manager and salesman.

SANFORD BUYS MORE RIGHTS.

Southwestern Art Dramas, Inc., Dallas, of which F. M. Sanford is president and manager, make the announcement that they have purchased "The Deemster" for Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana, and "The Crisis" for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

HUBLEY BUYS "EXCUSE ME."

The recently established foreign department of General Enterprises, Inc., under the supervision of M. R. Fink, expert market analyst, is making rapid strides in the disposal of the several features which it has undertaken to handle for distribution outside of the United States. Mr. Fink reports the sale this week of the five-part screen version of "Excuse Me," the Henry W. Savage, Inc., stage farce of a few years ago. Through the transaction in question, the General Film Company, Ltd., of Canada, become the owners of the Dominion rights to the film. T. A. Hubley closed the deal.

"JOBBING" THE MAYOR.

The promoters of the new Liberty theater, being erected in New Orleans, were recently the guests of the King-Bee Films Corp. at Bayonne, N. J. They are Ernest Boehringer, theatrical manager; W. Eberhart, a prominent well driller; A. F. Cazedessus, real estate magnate, and Alex Crouchy, Jr., the Mayor of Baton Rouge.

Billy West, the star of the King-Bee comedies, was making his entrance in a bar scene just as the party arrived. At the suggestion of Mr. Boehringer, Arvid E. Gillstrom, director of these famous comedies, used the entire party in this scene, and remarked afterwards that they acted more natural than the "extras" who were engaged. President Burstein remarked that it was natural for them to act at home in any barroom, which caused a peal of laughter from all the party.

Mayor Crouchy became very much interested in the ingenue leading lady, and while telling her a funny story Nat Spitzer got the camera man to snap two stills of them, which should make very good copy for the papers "down home."

FINK OFF ON TRIP.

M. R. Fink, a departmental head of General Enterprises, Inc., left New York October 2 on a special tour, embracing several important cities. He carries with him on his trip two copies of "The Warrior," and special screenings of the film spectacle will be held under his direction in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and other cities which occupy important positions in the distribution of motion pictures.

While making the circuit, the General Enterprises, Inc., representative will also arrange for a series of advance showings for the six-part human interest feature "Mother," produced by George Loane Tucker, and recently acquired for state right disposition by McClure Pictures.

In Philadelphia, at the request of several prominent exchange men and leading theater owners, a private showing was held in one of the big hotels, comprising special orchestral and stage effects, in order to give the feature a presentation in keeping with its magnitude.

Because of its distinct military flavor, officials high up in the diplomatic corp at Washington have evinced a desire to witness "The Warrior" and its unusual scenes of warfare on the Italian front. Mr. Fink, in addition to holding a special show for the buyers in the District of Columbia, may arrange to exhibit the Maciste picture for the benefit of several of the Governmental heads.

BROOKLYN WILL RALLY FOR LILLIAN.

The Brooklyn Triangle theater, which has been closed for a few months, during the making of extensive alterations, reopened Saturday night, October 6, with the initial production of the Ogden Picture Corporation, in which Lillian Walker is starred, "The Lust of the Ages."

The management of the theater has been on the lookout for an extraordinary production with which to inaugurate the new policy of this theater, and closed with Harry Samwick, who controls the Greater New York rights to "The Lust of the Ages." In fact, Brooklyn feels every right to claim Lillian its native daughter.

An augmented orchestra will be installed in the Triangle theater and a full musical score especially prepared for "The Lust of the Ages" will be played during the run of that production.

COSMOFOTOFILM DISPOSE OF MORE TERRITORY.

"I Believe," the state right offering of the Cosmofotofilm Co., directed by George Loane Tucker, has now been closed out for the states of California, Utah, Nevada, Arizona, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado and New Mexico to the Deseret Film Co., of Salt Lake City.

HERBERT LUBIN CONVALESCING.

Acute appendicitis necessitated the removal of Herbert Lubin the past week to the Stern Hospital, New York City. An immediate operation was performed by the noted surgeon, Dr. William Engel, brother to Joe Engel, Metro's able executive. A ten-day confinement at least is predicted for the partner to Arthur Sawyer in the conduct of the General Enterprises, Inc.

It is an interesting side-light on the situation to know that Dr. Engel left the day following the operation on Mr. Lubin for his post, having been commissioned a lieutenant in the medical division of the American army.

During Lubin's absence, Mr. Sawyer will preside over his affairs. Incidentally this case of appendicitis recalls to mind the operation on Herbert Brenon for the same malady the same week. The trade rejoices in the knowledge that both patients are recuperating splendidly.

"THE SLACKER" FOR CANADA.

Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin announce the successful conclusion of negotiations between Phil Kauffman, of Globe Film, Ltd., of Toronto, Canada, and Richard A. Rowland, of Metro Pictures, whereby Mr. Kauffman's company becomes the Canadian owners of two big feature productions.

The deal involves the sale for the Canadian rights of the two big Metro specials, "The Slacker" and "The Call of Her People." These latest additions to the roster of pictures controlled by the Canadian distributors feature Emily Stevens in "The Slacker" and Ethel Barrymore in "The Call of Her People," and a strong advertising campaign will be carried out in exploiting the Metro specials throughout the Dominion.

Sawyer and Lubin have established a record in the matter of negotiating important film deals during the past four weeks, and in addition to their numerous activities in this particular field, are rapidly disposing of territorial privileges for "The Warrior" through the medium of General Enterprises, Inc.

"PARENTAGE" HOUSE ORGAN PULLS INQUIRIES.

More than one hundred direct-by-mail inquiries from exhibitors desirous of booking "Parentage" have been received by the editor of "The Parentage Messenger," one of the first house organs to be launched in the state rights field. These requests for first runs have come from all over the country following the issuance of the first four numbers, and each one has referred in praiseworthy terms to Frank J. Seng's house organ, thereby justifying its existence as a magazine of service.

As rapidly as these letters have come in they have been sorted and forwarded to the various exchanges, handling "Parentage," to be followed up by personal calls and the actual booking contracts secured.

IVAN CLOSES MORE TERRITORY.

Williams Oldknow, Consolidated Exchange, Atlanta, Ga., has concluded arrangements whereby his offices become the distributing centre for Ivan Film productions in the Southern districts. Beginning with "Married in Name Only," all Ivan productions will be handled by Consolidated exchange in the territory described. The Ohio Film Distributors, Inc., has purchased "Married in Name Only" and reports big business.

MAMMOTH'S LATEST PURCHASES.

Foster G. Moore, general manager for the Mammoth Film Corp., announces in behalf of F. E. Backer, president, the purchase of "Her Bargain," the Mary MacLaren Photoplays, Inc., production which D. W. Russell is managing for David W. Horsley in Eastern territory. The rights secured comprise northern New Jersey, New York City and New York State.

ELLIOT BUYS "WHITHER THOU GOEST."

Joseph S. Klotz, of Klotz & Streimer, has closed a deal with Mr. Elliot for the franchise on "Whither Thou Goest" for the states of Minneapolis, northern Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas. Mr. Klotz is now en route to Seattle, Washington, and Los Angeles, where he will show "Whither Thou Goest" to prospective buyers for their territories.

SINS OF AMBITION UNDER WAY.

Prominent in the cast selected by Ivan Abramson for the Ivan Film Co.'s next production now in the studio are Wilfred Lucas, Barbara Castleton, James Morrison, Leah Baird, Madeline Traverse and Anders Randolph. The firm expects this feature to eclipse any of its previous offerings to the market.

SPITZER ON DECK.

The Bee-Hive exchange, with offices in the Godfrey Building, suite 1103, have secured the state rights of New York and New Jersey for all Billy West King-Bee comedies. Nat. H. Spitzer is general manager of the Bee-Hive exchange.

HELEN SPENCER WITH KING-BEE.

Hiss Helen Spencer, a well known comedienne, has been added to the roster of the King-Bee Corp. and will assist Billy West in the making of King-Bee comedies. Miss Spencer was featured in all the Vitagraph "O. Henry" comedies.

IMPORTANT WEEK FOR P. P. A.

This week is expected to prove a telling one in the history of the Producers' Protective Association, the organization conceived by Wm. L. Sherrill, head of the Frohman Amusement Corporation. A meeting is to be held the middle of the week, probably at the Hotel Astor, where the present and prospective members of this independent manufacturers' corrective and mutually protective body will give it the finishing touches, which is all it lacks at this time from beginning at once the systematic discharges of its designated functions.

The various state rights feature makers have all signified their intention of attending said meeting, and the details, at present unfinished, will be cleaned off the slate on that occasion. The personnel of the Producers' Protective Association has attracted wide-spread attention in film circles, and it might be well at this point to repeat the list of officers and directors of the body: President, William L. Sherrill; vice-president, Leopold Wharton; secretary and treasurer, Jesse J. Goldburg; directors, W. L. Sherrill, Leopold Wharton, Jesse J. Goldburg, I. N. Chadwick, M. A. Schlesinger, and Harry Rapf.

This body of men are not known to stop on any assignment until they have put it through. Each of them realizes the advantages to be gained by such an organization as this; they will not be diverted therefore. The central joint sales bureau or exchange idea is proving particularly popular. Its character will be found fully explained on page 2013 of the September 29th issue of the Moving Picture World. Great inconvenience and wastage of time will thus be eliminated for the visiting out-of-town buyer in that he can do all his purchasing from the manufacturers' common representative in the one office without spending three days to a week to do what can in this way be done in one or two days. This convenience will find particular value in dealing with visiting film buyers from foreign domains. Many of these, especially those of Latin nativity, unaccustomed to having to wait in outer offices before being able to see busy heads of manufacturing houses, and unfamiliar with finding their way around the film center, will thus be encouraged to do business direct with this central selling depot. The idea will also have inestimable value in standardizing the credits of all buyers and eliminating the risks. The systemization thus assured will repay the members of this organization many times over.

The foregoing is the unanimous opinion of all concerned in this project. The selection of the manager of this central bureau is receiving the most painstaking consideration by the body.

RANKIN AWAY ON SWING.

Charles Rankin left New York Saturday, October 6, for a spin around the state rights circuit, making Chicago stop number one. His special attention is being devoted to the six reel production, "A Modern Lorelei," in which Tyrone Power and Frances Burnham are being featured, and in which a diving chorus and swimming ballet of 250 mermaids plays a conspicuous part. The world rights on this feature were purchased last week by Rankin from M. Philip Hansen, of Los Angeles. In a conversation with the representative of the Moving Picture World, Rankin waxed enthusiastic over the paper that he has had prepared for his spectacle, for he has ordered two separate and widely different styles of one, three and six sheets; one on the melodramatic vein, very virile and striking in tone, the other, highly artistic and aesthetic, calculated to appeal to that portion of the theater-going public inclined to high-brow things.

One particular service that Rankin will render the firms who buy territorial rights to "A Modern Lorelei" is the open booking now being done on this picture, such bookings thus secured being turned over to each buyer as soon as the deal is closed for any particular section. Charlie expects to be back on Broadway about the middle of the month.

RATISBONNE BRINGS WAR FILMS TO CANADA.

E. Ratisbonne, delegate in the United States and Canada of the Cinematographic and Photographic Division of the French Army, has just completed arrangements with L. Ernest Ouimet, president of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., 313 Bleury, Montreal, whereby he will handle in Canada the French Official features which will be distributed in the United States by the Pathe Exchanges. The first subject, "In the Wake of the Huns," has just been announced for early release.

JOE LEE OFF SICK LIST.

Last week Joe Lee had to take things easy for the first time in his life—and then the indefatigable hustler would not have acquiesced were it not the doctor's inexorable demand. One week was enough for Joe, however; so he once again is on the job stirring the dust as much as ever. As heretofore his address is "everywhere."

GRIEVER & HERZ BUYS "WHITHER THOU GOEST."

Joseph S. Klotz, of Klotz & Streimer, during his visit to Chicago, has closed a contract for "Whither Thou Goest" with Mr. Griever for the states of Illinois, Indiana and southern Wisconsin.

HE WANTS HIS POUND OF FLESH.

Babe Hardy, the only rival (avoirdupoisedly speaking) of Fatty Arbuckle, has determined to take on fifty pounds more weight. This decision was reached after a conference with L. B. Burstein, president of the King-Bee Films Corp., at their studio in Bayonne, N. J.

A new contract was drawn up whereby Burstein agrees to pay Babe Hardy two dollars per pound for each additional pound gained by "Babe" after the signing of the contract, and also agrees that at the end of six months if fifty pounds have been gained he will pay a bonus of two hundred and fifty dollars.

At three o'clock yesterday afternoon Babe Hardy weighed in at two hundred and sixty-five pounds, and then proceeded to eat two big custard pies that had been used in the making of the new Billy West comedy, "The Pest."

GLOBE FILMS OPEN NEW OFFICE.

Bert Lubin, recently appointed general manager for Western Canada by Globe Films, Ltd., has opened a branch office in Winnipeg, in the Phoenix Block Building. Mr. Lubin, who will supervise all of the activities of his company in the Western territory, has installed R. Rose as manager of the Winnipeg branch.

Lubin will make his own headquarters at Calgary, Canada, and has left for that point to arrange for the establishment of the main offices, through which channels all territorial and exhibition arrangements for Globe Film productions will be handled embracing the western part of the Dominion.

HOFFMAN ARRANGES FOR CANADA.

One of the most important transactions of the current month in the Hoffman-Foursquare distribution field was concluded yesterday between M. H. Hoffman, Inc., and the Metro Films Service of Canada. M. H. Hoffman and J. J. Unger, representing their respective organizations, arranged for the distribution of the first-mentioned's entire product in Canada through the Metro Films Service, whose principal exchanges are situated in Montreal and Toronto.

The first pictures to be distributed in Canada will be "The Bar Sinister," "The Sin Woman," "Madame Sherry," "The Silent Witness" and "The Fringe of Society."

HILLER & WILK SELL "WHIP" FOR FRANCE.

Hiller & Wilk, Inc., selling agents for Paragon Films, announce the sale of the rights to "The Whip" for France and Switzerland, to the Mundus Film Company, of Paris. Negotiations on the part of the buyers were conducted by S. Garrett, of J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd. The success of "The Whip" in London and other English cities has created a wide interest for the picture on the part of continental buyers. Negotiations are pending for the sale of the unsold continental territory.

COHEN DOING THINGS.

George M. Merrick, executive of the Motioncraft Film Company, announces that Max Cohen, for the past ten days enroute amongst the state rights buying circuit, is closing contracts for Motioncraft product all along the line. His itinerary extended throughout middle-west territory from the Canadian border to Texas. In the last mentioned commonwealth, Cohen is at this time pulling off a deal of particular moment that Mr. Merrick will release for publication next week. Cohen will be back to headquarters before the middle of the month.

PELZMAN JOINS FORT PITT.

The distribution of the Royal Italian Government's official war pictures, "The Italian Battlefront," for Greater New York New York State and New Jersey is being handled for the Fort Pitt Theater Company by S. D. Pelzman, who recently became associated with the New York office of this organization, and is widely known among exhibitors in these territories, having been connected with the Universal Company, where he handled state rights releases and other special productions.

TAYLOR ARRIVES FROM LONDON.

John H. Taylor, managing dirctor of the London office of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, arrived in New York City on Monday, September 16, to confer with the home office. Upon Mr. Taylor's arrival he was greatly grieved to learn of the sudden death of Henry J. Brock, president of the Inter-Ocean Company. It is Mr. Taylor's intention to return to London the end of the coming week.

NOBLE'S "SHAME" READY FOR SHOWINGS.

The trade can now look forward to an early private exhibition of Jack Noble's far heralded "Shame." Jules Burnstein, general representative for the Noble enterprises, stated to a representative of the Moving Picture World that, except for several of the titles, it is ready now, after three weeks' personal attention to this phase by Director Noble himself. "Shame" is being presented in seven-reel size.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Essanay Filled Up to Year's End

Long List of Features and Short Subjects Completed for Release Through Kleine and General Film.

ESSANAY is far ahead of its release schedule, and a complete program of subjects up to the first of the year is now ready. Taylor Holmes, in "Fools for Luck," the current release, heads the list. The picture is based on "Talismans," by Kennett Harris. It deals with superstition. Helen Ferguson, Essanay's sixteen-year-old star, plays the leading feminine role.

"The Fibbers," the next October release, is a comedy-drama based on married life, starring Bryant Washburn and Virginia Valli. The story was written by James W. Adams, a magazine writer of note.

Mary McAllister, Essanay's six-year-old player, will appear next in "Young Mother Hubbard," a travesty on the old nursery story, written especially for the tiny actress by Charles Mortimer Peck.

Mr. Holmes will make his third screen appearance in "Two Bit Seats," the action of which was adapted from the magazine story of the same title by Gladys E. Johnson. Marguerite Clayton appears in the leading feminine role. The picture deals with a young spendthrift who can't afford midnight suppers and a girl who refuses to mulct him but encourages thrift. The spendthrift reforms; then they call a minister.

There is plenty of action in "The Kill-joy," in which little Miss McAlister is featured, she playing the only feminine role of the picture. The script was written by Mr. Peck. It deals with a child who is the idol of a rough and tumble Western mining camp. Realism galore is afforded by real Indians and cowboys.

"The Small Town Guy," Mr. Holmes' fourth picture, is taken from the magazine story, "The Picture of Innocence," by Freman Tilden. Mr. Holmes depicts the role of the small town hotel clerk who unconsciously becomes the tool of bunco men, and Miss Ferguson plays the part of the sweetheart who rescues him. There is a fine vein of humor throughout the picture.

Jack Gardner and Miss Ferguson play the leading roles in "Gift of Gab." Mr. Gardner does the best work of his career in this picture.

"Sadie Goes to Heaven," another McAlister picture, is taken from a magazine story of the same title, written by F. Dana Burnet. It has a strong appeal and numerous amusing situations.

The foregoing pictures are being released on the Perfection Picture program through the George Kleine exchanges.

In addition, new prints of the original Essanay-Chaplin comedies that made Charlie Chaplin famous will be released monthly. These include "A Jitney Elopement," "A Night in the Show," "By the Sea" and other popular comedies. New fables by George Ade, the noted Hoosier humorist, are being released each week. These pictures are released through the General Film Company.

A picture in which Mary MacLane, the writer of unconventional books, will play the vampire in one of her own works, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," will be ready for release soon. It will have a screen time of 65 minutes, and will be entirely out of the ordinary run of pictures.

Beginning December 1 twelve educational and scenic subjects, with screen time of 15 minutes each, will be released. Also a series of 15-minute "slapstick" comedies will be ready soon.

An unusual subject, based on Japanese life, starring Tsuro Aoki and Frank Borzage, will be an early release. The title is "The Curse of Iku," and the screen time is 25 minutes.

SECURE "THE CO-RESPONDENT."

The Jewel Productions, acting through Hiller & Wilk, Inc., brokers, have purchased Ralph Ince's newest production, "The Co-Respondent," which is based on the stage success that enjoyed a successful season at the Booth theater, New York, during the past year. The authors of the stage play are Alice Leal Pollock and Rita Weiman. Elaine Hammerstein, who has made a striking success in pictures, is starred along with Wilfred Lucas, who has been seen in many Triangle productions.

This is the first of a series of Ralph Ince photoplays that are being made by the Advanced Motion Picture Corporation. They have in work at present "The Battle Cry," which brought William Farnum back to the stage several seasons ago. "The Co-Respondent" was shown at the Broad theater beginning October 6.

DONNA DREW IN "'49—'17."

Donna Drew is the star of "'49—'17," the Butterfly picture scheduled for release October 15. This is a film version of William Wallace Cook's novel, "The Old West Per Contract," which attracted so much attention when it appeared in the Argosy Magazine some time ago. Ruth Ann Baldwin wrote the scenario and directed the production, which is noteworthy for its vigor and straight-from-the-shoulder action, and represents the high-water mark of her achievement for the Butterfly program.

The plot of "'49—'17" has many unique elements. In the main it tells the story of a well-to-do judge, one of the pioneers of the gold rush of '49, who has become bored with the ease and quiet of civilization, and decides to recreate the old mining camp of Nugget Notch out in the Sierras where he and his partner were once kings of the shovel and pan. He gives his secretary, Tom Robbins, carte blanche to put the old camp on the map again, and at the expense of a modest fortune, Tom finally has a regular gold-digging settlement in full swing. Jude Brand goes out to take charge of the camp. He is welcomed by a number of old-timers, and almost immediately involved in an exciting mystery effecting the identity of one of the residents of his community, a beautiful young girl, known as Lady Ann, and commonly supposed to be the daughter of Pa Babbett, the proprietor of the general store. "Gentleman Jim" Raynor, a professional gambler who has taken up his quarters in the saloon, also has a hand in the proceedings, and events crowd upon one another at a fast and furious pace until the solution of the mystery is brought about unexpectedly. Donna Drew is adequately supported by Joseph Girard, Leo Pierson and Jean Hersholt.

MARCUS LOEW SIGNS BIG CONTRACT WITH SELECT.

The signature of Marcus Loew has just been secured by the New York offices of Select Pictures Corporation to a big contract whereby the Loew theaters are to get a number of the Select releases for about seventy days' run each in Loew's Greater New York chain of theaters.

Among the features called for in this—one of the largest contracts which the new Select company has written to date—is the new Norma Talmadge picture, "The Moth," which will be seen at an early date in the Loew theaters. This is a play made from the novel of the same name by William Dana Orcutt, and depicting life in a very gay social set. Norma Talmadge, the star, is seen in the role of a very young girl who has made a loveless marriage and who permits herself to go the pace in order to hide her disappointment. The picture was directed by Edward Jose.

Other features secured by the Loew theaters in this booking include Hobard Henley's picture, "Parentage"; the Herbert Brenon thriller, "The Lone Wolf"; "The Whip," a screen presentation of the big Drury Lane melodrama; and "On Trial," the film version of a recent New York stage success.

Five Metros in October

All Notable Productions With Popular Stars—Supplemented With the Usual Drew Comedies.

FIVE superb feature productions will be presented by Metro Pictures Corporation during the month of October, as well as the usual quota of Metro-Drew comedies. These are exclusive of the patriotic special production de luxe, "Draft 258," Metro's great successor to "The Slacker." This, like "The Slacker," has been directed by William Christy Cabanne and written by him and June Mathis. It is scheduled for early release. Ethel Barrymore, Harold Lockwood, Emily Stevens, Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne and Mme. Petrova are the stars represented in the October output.

First on the list is "Paradise Garden," with Harold Lockwood as star, released October 1. This is a screen version of the popular novel of the same name by George Gibbs. Vera Sisson, William Clifford, Lester Cuneo, and Virginia Rappae are prominent in the star's support. Fred J. Balshofer directed this six-act production, adapted for the screen by himself and Richard V. Spencer. Harold Lockwood plays Jerry Benham. By the terms of his father's will, Jerry is not permitted to see a woman or to know anything about the feminine sex until he reaches the age of twenty-one. He meets the right kind of woman—then the wrong kind, and dramatic developments lead up to a satisfactory finish.

"Life's Whirlpool," the October release, has the celebrated Ethel Barrymore as star. "Life's Whirlpool" is an all-Barrymore production, for it was both written and directed by the star's brother, Lionel Barrymore. It is a five-act Metro wonderplay, presented by B. A. Rolfe. "Life's Whirlpool" is a strongly dramatic story, in which one striking incident follows another, building up a thrilling sequence of events to a powerful climax. Miss Barrymore has the part of Esther Carey, a woman whom fate seems to have marked as the innocent victim of unusual circumstances. The way in which she weathers the storm and finally wins her life's happiness is masterfully told. Supporting the star is a cast of Metro favorites, including Alan Tale, Paul Everton, Walter Hiers, Ricca Allen, Reginald Carrington and Frank Leigh.

"A Sleeping Memory" is a magnificent seven-act superfeature starring wonderful Emily Stevens. It is a screen version of E. Phillips Oppenheim's splendid novel of the same name, and has been adapted for the screen by Albert Shelby Le Vino. George D. Baker has directed "A Sleeping Memory," which has been produced under the personal direction of Maxwell Karger. "A Sleeping Memory" makes remarkable demands on the versatility and acting ability of the star, and no one but an artist of Miss Stevens' well recognized talents could have emerged from the ordeal triumphant. Frank Mills plays opposite the star and the supporting cast includes Walter Horton, Kate Blancke, Mario Majeroni, Richard Thornton and Frank Joyner.

"More Truth Than Poetry" is the October 22 release. Mme. Petrova appears in this five-part feature, which has been written by the star herself. It is a story within a story. Elaine Esmond, a novelist, is so absorbed by the theme of her new novel that she continues dictating to her stenographer hour after hour, "More Truth than Poetry" being the child of her imagination. Vera Blair, the heroine of the story, aids her husband in winning the success that he could not attain without her assistance, and when he has reached the pinnacle of fame and fortune, he attempts to discard her in favor of another woman. Her treatment of this crisis forms the climax of the play. Mme. Petrova plays the dual role of the novelist and the heroine. Mahlon Hamilton has the leading masculine role, that of Ashton Blair. Others in the cast are Violet Reed, Harry Burkhardt, William B. Davidson, Charles Martin, Mary Sands and Anthony Merlo. Burton L. King directed the picture.

Metro's final release for October is "The Adopted Son," in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are co-stars. "The Adopted Son" is a picturization of Max Brand's story of the same name appearing in the All-Story Weekly. Charles Brabin has directed this six-part super-feature under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, and it has been adapted for the screen by Albert Shelby LeVine. "The Adopted Son" is a stirring tale of the Tennessee mountains, and of a feud of long standing between the Conovers and the McLanes.

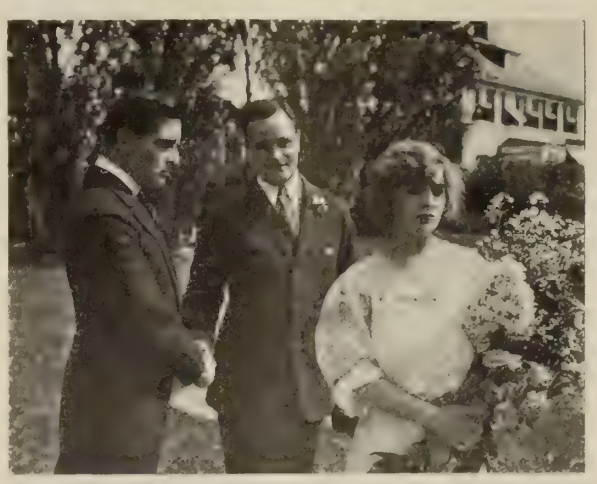
Mr. Bushman plays "Two-Gun" Carter in this production, and he proves his right to the title by shooting equally well with both hands. Miss Bayne has the part of Marian Conover, for whose sake the stranger from Texas makes the cause of the Conovers his own, vowing to wipe out blood with blood. How, in Willoughby Hollow at midnight, after marrying pretty Marian, he meets the McLanes and holds his own against them unaided, provides material for one of the most exciting moments ever shown on the screen. Wild mountain scenery, with cascades and mountain streams, furnishes the background for this beautiful production. A capable cast, including J. W. Johnston, Leslie Stowe, John Smiley and Art Ortega, interprets "The Adopted Son."

ALLENS GETS SELECT PICTURES FOR CANADA.

Select Pictures has closed a contract with Jule and Jay J. Allen, the eminent Canadian exhibitors, whereby their important chain of theaters throughout Canada will play all Select Pictures. This firm now controls the rights for Canada to Artcraft, Paramount, Famous Players, Select and Monarch pictures, as well as a number of important individual productions.

"JUDGMENT HOUSE" SET FOR NOV. 19.

Timely from more than one point of view will be the release on November 19 of the first J. Stuart Blackton production for Paramount—"The Judgment House," by Sir Gilbert Parker. The story is in itself appropriate to the times because of the military flavor and the great battle scenes depicting incidents in the Boer War. Furthermore, interest has been intensified in the works of Sir Gilbert Parker, because he has been in this country for several months past, having sailed for England only a week or two ago, and has personally watched the filming of the first two Blackton pictures for release by Paramount—"The World for Sale" and "The Judgment House."



Scene from "The Judgment House" (Paramount).

While both these productions are completed it was decided that "The Judgment House" should be the first one given to the public, because of its timeliness.

TANGUAY COSTUME REVIEW IN "THE WILD GIRL."

When Eva Tanguay makes her first appearance on the screen in "The Wild Girl," which Select Pictures will release shortly, picture fans throughout the country will see the famous star of vaudeville in all the costumes which she has worn during her many years of sensational success as a vaudeville headliner. Included in these are some of the eccentric and beautiful costumes worn when Eva Tanguay sang "I don't Care" from sea to sea.

"THE GOLFERS" (L-Ko).

Dick Smith and Archie Mayo collaborated in producing "The Golfers" for L-Ko release through Universal exchanges Nov 14. Eva Novak will be the female star, and Bob McKenzie, Eddie Barry and Chester Ryckman will vie with her through their efforts as comedians in producing the usual average of L-Ko fun from a subject that would seem to lend itself very easily to screen gaiety. In addition to the principals there will be one of the most numerous companies of assistant mirthmakers lately presented in this series of comedies. The fun proceeds indoors and out, and there is a promise of a surprising number of ingenious schemes to fetch the laughs from the crowds which, in these days, have enough of serious matters to think of, and seek relief in merrymaking on the screen.

Goldwyn Names Second Quartet

Mae Marsh, Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy and Maxine Elliott Are Featured in Coming Pictures.

GOLDWYN'S second four releases, just announced, are as follows: November 4, Mae Marsh in "Sunshine Alley," by Mary Rider; November 18, Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg," by Porter Emerson Browne; December 2, Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married," by Edgar Selwyn; December 16, Maxine Elliott in "The Eternal Magdelene," by Robert McLaughlin.

"Sunshine Alley" gives Mae Marsh a role unlike anything she has ever had before in her career. The role is as plaintive and charming as her most recent role of Polly in "Polly of the Circus" and, in addition, there is a whimsical note that gives her the opportunity to reveal again what a really remarkable actress she is. Audiences everywhere will be delighted to find that in "Sunshine Alley" Robert Harron, Miss Marsh's former team-mate, is again her leading man.

"Joan of Plattsburg" is Mabel Normand's first Goldwyn picture and it brings this delightful and world-famous comedienne back to the screen after an absence of more than a year. Her first Goldwyn picture is a delightful comedy with a big patriotic touch and thousands of soldiers at the Plattsburg, N. Y, camp take an active part in the picture

"Nearly Married," bringing Madge Kennedy before the public for the second time, is Edgar Selwyn's famous farce comedy which enjoyed a long run in the Gaiety theater, New York, when first presented, and was then seen throughout America. This picture is being directed by Chester Withey, and Miss Kennedy is supported by Frank Thomas, Mark Smith, Alma Tell, Richard Barthelmess and Hedda Hopper.

"The Eternal Magdelene," from Robert McLaughlin's sensational play, gives Maxine Elliott a tremendous opportunity to attract the attention of American audiences. The direction of this picture was in the hands of Arthur Hopkins, a daring radical in the theater who is often termed "the socialist of the American theater."

Goldwyn has a surprise in store for its ninth release and this unnamed picture is expected to win high favor with both exhibitors and the public in all parts of the world.

VICTOR MOORE IN "THE COW JUMPED OVER THE MOON."

Victor Moore will release on October 8, Thos. J. Gray's latest comedy, "The Cow Jumped Over the Moon." Though given a fairy tale title, the comedy is based on the high cost of living.

Vic gets the butcher bill, and the total of it nearly knocks him off his feet. He decides then and there to put an end to the high prices. He starts out to purchase a cow, and on the way he picks up a circular with a drawing of a cow, with directions of how to dissect her in the most economic way. He arrives at a farm house and buys a cow, and starts homeward with her. En route he has no end of trouble, but eventually gets her home. The next morning, at breakfast, he is without cream for his coffee, and he figures here is where he beats the milkman. Out he goes to the cow, and knowing nothing about milking a cow, he thinks he'll "crank her." After much trying, he finds the cow is "dry." He decides to be stylish and get a Dairy Maid for the cow, but his wife soon put this idea out of his head. He then decides to map the cow out as per the drawing and take her to the butcher. He does, but he manages to get into an argument with the butcher, who throws him and the cow out of the place. The finish finds Vic without his cow and out the money he paid for it.

This comedy must be seen to be appreciated, for this very timely subject is handled in a most unique way. It is full of laughs and loads of funny situations, and Moore gets over some very funny comedy.

TRIANGLE RELEASES.

Margery Wilson and Roy Stewart Featured in Separate Productions for Week of October 14.

THE triumph of justice over lawless brigandry and romance among the great woods of the Canadian Northwest are motifs which promise a strong Triangle program for October 14th, when "One Shot Ross" and "Wild Sumac" will be released.

Surrounded by the genuine article in cowboys, Roy Stewart undertakes to clean up a western settlement infamous for its wild disregard of law and order. His direct methods of dealing with offenders earn him the title of "One Shot," and as the vigilante of the community, he comes in for a deal of admiration and necessary bloodshed. But when his unerring aim of authority brings sorrow to a little child, he decides to pull stakes for a camp where eternal vigilance is not the price of safety. The hold-up of the outward-bound stage brings him under the shelter of the Sheridan roof, and sows the seed of a pretty romance in which the famous gunman uses his skill to avenge a father's murder and rid the earth of a villainous rival. Supporting Stewart in this new Western drama are Josie Sedgwick, as Mary Sheridan, and Jack Richardson, whose "bad man" characterization gives the familiar "gambler of the screen" an opportunity to desert his faro table for a time.

In the second release of the week, "Wild Sumac," a picture which William V. Mong directed while on leave of absence from the Culver City playing forces, Margery Wilson has an unusual opportunity to adapt her personality to the character of a fair young gypsy of the big woods, untamed and unguided, who is charged with a murder of which she is innocent. The long arm of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police figures prominently in this story as the half-breed bootlegger is brought to justice and the girl Sumac's true identity revealed. Her thrilling rescue from a burning pyre and a realistic man-battle rivalling in its intensity of emotion the famous fight scene in "The Flame of the Yukon," are high points in the wistful love story. Jack Cunningham prepared the scenario from the story of Elaine Sterne.

On the Triangle Komedy program for this week are "Their Love Lesson" and "A Prairie Heiress," both one-reelers. The Keystone feature, "Pearls and Perils," concerns a maze of trouble started over a string of pearls, the original and bogus jewels going the rounds of an exclusive millinery shop and its "vamp" model with lightning rapidity.

CONSERVATION WORK SHOWN IN CURRENT EVENTS.

Popularizing such serious subjects as the conservation and organization of America's resources for war purposes is a task that calls for considerable knowledge of human nature. But the editor and title-writer of Universal Current Events seems to posses this knowledge in a marked degree, judging from the contents of the 21st issue of this interesting news weekly just released.

Views are shown of one of the new Transatlantic frighters recently launched in Lake Erie after being constructed in record time.

The success of the food conservation campaign that has been carried on in Greenwich, Conn., during the past three months is fitting celebrated with pictures that not only tell their story excellently, but will doubtless inspire people in other wide-awake communities to accomplish similar results.

Guynemer, most famous of all French aviators, whose recent death or capture was the cause of widespread mourning throughout the greater part of the civilized world, is shown in a series of intimate studies that should help keep his memory alive.

The celebration incident to the departure of a huge contingent of California troops from the Golden Gate comes in for adequate representation, as well as the greeting extended to Baron Ishii and the other Imperial Japanese envoys by the City of New York a few days ago.

Belle Bennett Leads Universal Program

Gale Henry and William Franey in Burlesque of "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," But One of Many Features for Week of October 15.

BELLE BENNETT is the star of the Gold Seal drama entitled "The Taming of Lucy," which heads Universal's regular schedule of releases for the week of October 15. The story was written by Edna Rowell Schley and Giles Warren, and produced by Charles Swickard. It presents the theme of the unwilling bride, married to the alleged caveman, whose reputation for rough virility acts as a bar to happiness. When the big test comes, however, the real man shines through. There are some unusual angles to this touch-and-go drama which seem guaranteed to give any spectator a reel surprise at the climax. Val Paul, Betty Schade and Morris Foster are prominent in Miss Bennett's support.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran will appear Tuesday, October 18, in a Nestor comedy entitled "Wild and Wooley Women," written by Fred Palmer, and produced by Roy Clements. Edith Roberts takes the featured feminine role in this amusing commentary on life in a co-educational school. There are some amusing bathing scenes, in which the boys surprise the girls, cans certain sections of the wardrobe, but in the ensuing mix-up, the girls get the drop on the boys and force them to take to the water thoroughly squelched.

The L-Ko comedy to be released Wednesday, October 17, bears the intriguing title, "Vamping Reuben's Millions." It was directed by Dick Smith under the supervision of J. G. Blystone, and details the many unusual occurances in the life of an agriculturalist whose good judgment of horses is only exceeded by his poor judgment of mortgages. The resulting misadventure provides an excellent object lesson regarding the folly of trying to mix business with pleasure. Bob McKenzie, Eva Novak, Eddie Barry, and Catherine Young are the principal funmakers. The 94th issue of the Universal Animated Weekly will be released on the same day.

Gale Henry and William Franey are the stars of the feature for Thursday, October 18, which is an uproarious burlesque on "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" entitled "The Cross-Eyed Submarine." The scenario, which is one of the most deftly constructed take-offs on a popular story that has been done in many a day, is the work of Jack Cunningham. W. W. Beaudine is responsible for the direction. Lillian Peacock and Milburn Moranti have parts well suited to their respective styles of humor, and the many mechanical novelties introduced in the course of "Prince Ducker's" ceaseless quest through the caverns of the deep for his kidnapped daughter will be sure to provide much genuine merriment. Dave Morris and Gladys Tennyson will be featured in a Joker comedy known as "The Magio Jass-Bo," released coincident with "The Cross-Eyed Submarine." Alfred Santell and A. F. Statter are responsible for the direction and authorship of this swiftly moving version of the art of slapstick, which exemplifies some of the best trick photography recently turned out at Universal City.

On Friday, October 19, Evelyn Selbie and Harry Griffith will be shown in a Victor comedy of English cockney life entitled "When Liz Let Loose," written by E. Magnus Ingleton, and picturized and produced by Ruth Baldwin. The 41st number of the Screen Magazine, containing several exclusive features of semi-news interest, will also be shown at the same time.

"The Temple of Terror," a Bison drama featuring Eileen Sedgwick and Fred Church, will be released Saturday, October 20. This is one of a series of short thrillers with wild animals prominent in the action that have aroused much favorable comment on the part of Universal patrons during the past four months. Gale Henry and William Franey will also be seen in a Joker comedy by R. A. Dillon and W. W. Beaudine known as "Who Done It"? The mistakes of a jealous husband provide several hearty laughs in this exhilarating farce.

The week will also be notable in making the closing episode of "The Gray Ghost" and the opening episode of the "The Red Ace," Universal's new outdoor mystery serial, which has already produced a remarkable impression for its vigor and well-timed suspense in greater New York.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE STARTS ANOTHER SELECT PICTURE.

Constance Talmadge has begun work on another of her Select Pictures. This is an original story called "The Honeymooners," and was written by Lloyd Sheldon. The scenario has been prepared by Eve Unsell.

Unlike Miss Talmadge's first feature, "Scandal," which was built on a powerful dramatic theme, "The Honeymooners" is pure comedy drama, and will afford the charming star opportunity for a display of her brilliant comedy gifts. Miss Talmadge's rare penchant for comedy interpretation came to light during the filming of "Scandal," and Charles Giblyn, her director, at once set about providing her with a suitable vehicle for new triumphs.

Miss Talmadge, her director and company left this week for Niagara Falls, where the greater part of the work on "The Honeymooners" will be staged, and will be gone for several weeks, as this part of the production will be most elaborate.

Meanwhile prints are being prepared with all possible dispatch on Miss Talmadge's first picture, "Scandal," which is announced for early release.

CHAPTER FIVE OF "THE LOST EXPRESS."

New and sensational phases of the photonovel are revealed in Chapter V of "The Lost Express" entitled "In Deep Water," released by Mutual October 15.

Miss Helen Holmes, star in the fifteen chapter thriller, becomes involved with a gang of gypsies before the chapter is well under way, and before it is over there is staged a bit of sensational drama on the sea.

Helen escapes from a hut in the mountains just as it is destroyed, and fleeing, is imprisoned. Gypsies come along and rob her hands of the jewels she is wearing. She is found by members of her father's office staff and hurries to the Thurston oil fields to discover that one of the main feed lines is leaking. She sends a diver down into the bay to repair the damage, and Valquez sends a diver into the bay armed with a knife, with instructions to cut the air tube of the Thurston diver.

The action throughout the two reels is fast. Director McGowan has hit his stride in the fifth episode, and as the chapter proceeds the action grows faster and faster.

GAUMONT FEATURETTES FOR WEEK OF OCTOBER 22.

The featured subject in Reel Life No. 78, which will be released on Thursday, October 22, is "Dining on Wheels; or, How the American Traveler is Fed." Believing one of the best ways to gain the friendship of the traveling public is through the stomach, the great railway systems now devote as much attention to the dining car as to the other departments of their service. This subject not only pictures how you are fed at eighty miles an hour, but takes you behind the scenes and shows you how the cooks and waiters are trained in special schools.

There are other subjects in Reel Life No. 78 which deserve more than passing mention. A Colorado enthusiast has financed twenty expeditions to the top of the Continental Divide, to obtain the eggs of "The Rocky Mountain Jay," which lays only in the winter. Mr. Enos A. Mills, the distinguished author-naturalist, is one of the characters in this beautiful scenic-scientific subject, which was photographed at the crest of the continent. A remarkable example of double-exposure photography gives us "Then and Now; or, How High Living Cost Wins the Race," a comparison of to-day and when grandfather was a boy. The saman, or raintree, is pictured with others in "Queer Trees of Trinidad." Two animated drawings from "Life" complete the reel.

The Gaumont-Mutual Weekly No. 147 is released on Wednesday, October 24, but as this news-reel is made up only of the latest news events of importance, it is not possible to forecast what topics will be shown. War news, of course, will be featured, the Gaumont Company having its own staff of enthusiatisc cameramen not only in France and the United States, but all over the world; and no other event of national or international importance will occur without being pictured in this foremost of news weeklies.

In spite of the fact that the art of makeup will deceive even the searching lens of the motion picture camera, Director Emile Chautard is determined that local color in the first Paramount picture with Lina Cavalieri as the star shall be perfect, and for that reason has engaged a large number of Italians to interpret the extra roles.

The scenes of "The Eternal Temptress," which will bring Mme. Cavalieri to the screen, and which was written expressly for the beautiful operatic favorite by Mme. Fred de Gressac and adapted by Eve Unsell are all laid in Italy.

Beside the familiar Grand Canal of Venice, the Bridge of Sighs and the quays of Rome, the famous Church of San Marco has been reproduced at Fort Lee with startling fidelity. In several scenes the star is seen entering or leaving the doors of this picturesque old house of worship, and the populous neighborhood, with churchgoers, beggar hordes, and so on, required the use of large numbers of extras.

The Well-Fed American Traveler

"Dining on Wheels" in Gaumont's "Reel Life" No. 78, Released October 25.

ONE of the most important departments of any railroad system today is that of the commissary or dining car, but few are the travelers who think of the difficulties which have to be obviated in order that they may dine en route as well and as economically as in the best hotels. Not the least of these difficulties is the fact that each dining car must be equipped to feed one man or hundreds, and no matter how many travelrs there may be each expects to be served as well as though he were alone. Railroads of today strive to please their patrons, and believing one way to a man's friendship is through his stomach, they pay no little attention to the meals they serve. After considerble persuasion the Gaumont Company induced one of the biggest railroad systems to permit them to photograph "Dining on Wheels," which is featured in Reel Life No. 78, and released October 25. In this subject is shown not only the outfitting of the dining cars at the commissary, but the schooling of the cooks and waiters, and the actual "dining on wheels" at the rate of eighty miles an hour!

The other subjects in this issue of Reel Life are of more than ordinary interest. Museums are always on the hunt for things which are rare, and the fact that "The Rocky Mountain Jay" lays her eggs in the winter time is responsible for a beautiful scenic picture of the search for these eggs on the snow-clad top of the Continental Divide.

"Then and Now," a subject made possible only by marvelous double exposure, shows an entertaining contrast in the income and "outgo" of grandfather's day and ours. Among other "Queer Trees of Trinidad" we see the raintree, so large that a passing trolley car looks like a small insect. "Not Guilty" and "The Apparel and the Man," two animated subjects from "Life," the popular humorous weekly, complete the reel.

"PUBLIC BE DAMNED" ENDORSED BY WOMEN.

The National Housewives League, an organization of vast influence throughout the country through its president, Mrs. Julian Heath, has endorsed the film drama, "The Public Be Damned." In her letter to Arthur S. Kane, general manager of the Select Picture Corporation, Mrs. Heath characterizes the play as most opportune and destined to be of assistance in adjusting the present food control situations.

"THE THING WE LOVE" (Paramount).

Baring German intrigue in America, portraying Hun plots to injure this country and its allies, "The Thing We Love," which will be released in November by Paramount, with Wallace Reid as the star, supported by a splendid cast, will be a timely picture, besides possessing merit and innumerable thrilling scenes and situations.

Wallace Reid has just started work on "Nan of Music Mountain," from Frank Spearman's novel, and Ann Little has arrived on the West Coast to support the star in this production. George Melford is director.

Following the completion of the picture, Mr. Reid will come East to work in "The Source" with its locale in the Maine Woods.

For "The Thing We Love," Reid has the role of a red-blooded young American who, with the aid of his sweetheart, is able to frustrate a vile plot to wreck a great munition plant.

The scenario was founded upon a story by H. B. and M. G. Daniel and the picture was directed by Lou-Tellegen. Harvey Thew wrote the scenario.

"FATTY" GOES TO CONEY ISLAND.

In that riotous melee of comedy which constitutes "Coney Island," the last of Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle's comedies for Paramount to be "made in New York" before his return to the coast studios, the action is precipitated by "Fatty's" determination to spend a day at Luna Park untrammeled by domestic ties.

"Fatty" has reckoned, however, without his wife, who insists upon making one of the party and reading to her husband as they sit upon one of the benches in the park. Taking advantage of one of her preoccupied moments "Fatty" hastens to disappear and makes his way into the park, where he immediately starts a flirtation with a pretty girl, whose escort he succeeds in having arrested by a clever ruse, thus securing the young lady to himself. His wife, after a fruitless search all over the beach, reports "Fatty's" disappearance to the police and asks their assistance in tracing the recalcitrant.

"Fattys" unmasking leads to a general fight, the lifeguard calls out the police—he has been disporting in the water—and the entire party is taken to the station house where the turmoil starts all over again. Here, though, "Fatty" and the much-abused escort join their forces and succeed in locking the women and the entire police force in one of the cells. As they leave the station house the victors they resolve never to look at women again, a determination which they keep only until two charming girls who are passing smile at them.

REAL SANDSTORM IN ALADDIN.

So vivid is the presentation of the swirling sandstorm in William Fox's "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," that more than a few veteran picturegoers close their eyes to avoid the flying dust on the screen. The picture, the second by the famous Fox Kiddies, is at the Globe theater in New York City.

The spectacular scenes in which Aladdin finds himself choked with the blowing dust are not the product of a "prop" sandstorm. They were filmed by the directors C. M. and S. A. Franklin on the wastes of Oxnard Desert in California, when the wind was whipping and roaring across the open spaces. The big company, of which Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin are the chief members, lay in wait many days for a gale heavy enough to stir up the sand. They were rewarded by one which all but carried the juvenile players away.

THE LEES MEET GOVERNOR EDGE.

"Governor's Day" at the New Jersey State Fair, Trenton, N. J., this year took on an added significance by reason of Jane and Katherine Lee, William Fox's "Baby Grand" film stars, sharing with Governor Edge the honors and homage tendered by seventy-five thousand persons. The Lee Kiddies were presented to the governor, Senator Frelinghuysen and other celebrities, photographed engroup with Jersey's officialdom, and figured prominently in most of the celebrations of the day.

The talented little Fox film celebrities took Trenton by storm, and during the five days they spent there were guests of honor at many social events arranged for them.

QUINTUPLE EXPOSURE IN THIS WILLIAM FOX FILM.

Only those who have studied photography or have gone into it seriously can appreciate the full significance of the announcement that in "Conscience," Gladys Brockwell's new William Fox production, there is one scene which required a quintuple exposure. The scene in point shows Miss Brockwell, herself, in the Court of Conscience surrounded by Avarice, Lust, Ambition and Vanity, each of whom she impersonates.

Hart's Artcraft Debut Is Fritz's Finale

In "The Narrow Trail" Spirited Horse of the Actor Makes Farewell Screen Appearance.

OCTOBER 15 will mark an important day in the career of William S. Hart, the popular characterizer of western parts, in that it is the release date of his first Ince photoplay to be distributed through Artcraft. In addition to making his debut as an Artcraft star, "Big Bill" on this day discloses his initial efforts as an author.

"The Narrow Trail" is the title and presents Hart in the role of Ice Harding, an outlaw of the plains who falls out with his gang because of his horse, a conspicuously marked Pinto that discloses the identity of the bandits wherever they go. The outlaw's great love for his pony causes a rupture between him and the men, with the result that Harding leaves the gang and conducts his raids alone. Various touching scenes between master and beast are portrayed by Hart and his popular Pinto Fritz, who appears for the last time on the screen in this picture. In a thrilling scene for this picture Fritz narrowly escaped death recently, whereupon Hart decided to retire his horse because of his fondness for the pony. The story for "The Narrow Trail" is practically written around the famous animal and presents many startling incidents in which Fritz plays an important part.

As leading woman to the star there appears Sylvia Bremer, the beautiful Australian actress who has recently made such pronounced successes in Ince pictures. Others in the cast are Milton Ross and Robert Kortman.

TWO DIRECTORS FOR MARY GARDEN.

The mystery hedging about the director selected for Mary Garden's first screen play, "Thais," has been solved. Goldwyn announces not one director but two to take charge of the famous diva's debut. They are Hugo Ballin and Frank Crane.

These two men will collaborate in the making of "Thais," Mr. Ballin giving more attention to the artistic phases of the picture, beginning with the settings and ending with the composition of the figures in the scenes, while Mr. Crane will handle the technical direction.

The leading part opposite Miss Garden, that of the role of the monk, Paphnucius, will be played by Hamilton Revelle. Among others chosen for the cast are Crauford Kent, Charles Trowbridge, Lionel Adams, Alice Chapin, and Margaret Townsend.

"THE LASH OF POWER" (Bluebird).

J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton provided the story and scenario for "The Lash of Power," in which Carmel Myers will make her debut as a Bluebird star on Nov. 5. Miss Myers comes to the Bluebird "Star-Cycle" with only a brief but, nevertheless, enviable screen career. She is being made familiar to the better class of photoplay patrons in the present state rights operations involving "Sirens of the Sea," in which she is the featured one. These facts will aid exhibitors in advertising Bluebird's new star.

"The Lash of Power" is an exciting melodrama, a page torn from "old school" methods of popular entertainment. There seems to be plenty of problem plays, comedies and society dramas, but diversity in its program is a Bluebird maxim—hence melodrama, "lurid," if you like, to forward the stellar interests of Carmel Myers.

Kenneth Harlan, as Miss Myers' leading man, undertakes heroics and villainy that recall the palmy days of melodrama; Charles Hill Mailes is cast in an essential role, and the other players include Helen Wright, T. D. Crittenden, Gertrude Astor and Jack Nelson. To enumerate the sensations in "The Lash of Power" would involve a catalog of practically every method of stage-craft employed to stir the thrill-centers of theater-goers.

"THE BEAUTIFUL ADVENTURE" (Empire-All-Star).

In "The Beautiful Adventure" the Empire All-Star Corporation have a story that is expected to repeat on the screen the great success it had on the stage when produced by Charles Frohman.

It tells of a young girl who refused to marry the dry old "stick" her aunt has chosen for her—albeit he is wealthy—preferring, instead, to marry the man of her choice.

Just what plights her wilfulness leads her into how she flies at the eleventh hour in her wedding dress: of the natural mistake made by her grandmother in thinking the eloping couple husband and wife, and the various other complications are told with a delightful delicacy that, however, loses none of its Gallic piquancy in the telling.

Miss Ann Murdock interprets the same stellar role that she did on the stage, that of Helene, and is ably supported by Mr David Powell, who, as the romantic young Frenchman, is at his best.

Other members of the cast are: Ada Boshell, Carl Sauerman, Vera Fuller Mellish, and Kate Sergeantson. The date set for the release of "The Beautiful Adventure" is October 15 on Mutual programs.

BEBAN IN TWO MORE PARAMOUNTS.

A definite selection of the two additional productions in which the noted character actor George Beban will appear for Paramount has been made. Of these the first is "The Land of the Free," based upon a powerful dramatic playlet written by William C. De Mille and presented with remarkable success in New York several seasons ago. For the second production the virile story of the Canadian northwest, "Jules of the Strong Heart" has been chosen. The title role affords Mr. Beban ample opportunity to display his wonderful histrionic ability in portraying the big, wholesome, lovable characterizations that have made him the greatest exponent of Latin types on the screen or stage today.

"The Land of the Free" is one of those humanly touching episodes that in real life frequently befall immigrants arriving on the shore of America. The true pathos of the honest-hearted Italian laborer who finds it impossible to bring his little family into the land of the free because of his economic shortcomings will be faithfully portrayed by Mr. Beban.

"Jules of the Strong Heart," while entirely different in character, is also admirably suited to the actor's peculiar talents.

OIL WELLS IN COMING RAY PICTURE.

Immense oil-producing properties, with wells in operation, will form a splendid background for Charles Ray's second Paramount picture, "His Mother's Boy," which follows "His Father's Son," which is to be released October 22. The Ince star in the second production, which is a picturization of Rupert Hughes' story, "When Life is Marked Down," the screen version having been written by Ella Stuart Carson, has the role of a youth who has been raised with more than ordinary care and is finally put on his mettle, when he proves that he is a real man after all.

Victor L. Schertzinger is the director and has devoted much time to obtaining the real atmosphere for the old field scenes, which form a large part of the actual story. The magnitude of the fields, the immense derricks, and all the working of the great industry are pictured and the film becomes a veritable object lesson in the production of oil.

In the supporting cast chosen for Mr. Ray in this picture will appear Doris Lee, a new leading woman of the Ince forces.

PRIVATE SHOWING OF "MADAM WHO."

A capacity audience filled Aeolian Hall last Monday evening as the guests of Carl Anderson, president, and the Paralta organization, to witness a special projection of Bessie Barriscale's second play, "Madam Who."

IT IS "JOAN OF PLATTSBURG" NOW.

Mabel Normand's first picture for Goldwyn isn't to be called "Joan of Flatbush" after all. Its "Joan of Plattsburg." Porter Emerson Browne, author of the story about the poor little orphan girl whose simple faith in visions turns up and delivers into the hands of the military a band of enemy spies, heartily approved the change in title after watching the famous little comedienne "on location" at the great officers' training camp in northern New York State.

"Everybody's been so good to me up here," Miss Normand explained, "that I want to show I'm grateful."

MARGARITA FISCHER'S NEW SCREEN DRAMA.

Lloyd Ingraham will direct Margarita Fischer, newly acquired screen star for the American Film Company. Mr. Ingraham has recently completed a series of three productions, featuring Mary Miles Minter, who will be directed now by Henry King. The Minter productions, "Charity Castle," "Her Country's Call" and "Peggy Leads the Way" have been produced at an unusually heavy expenditure, every detail being exact, at whatever the cost. President Samuel S. Hutchinson will not allow cost of production to be considered when he aims at results in the way of excellence and artistic finish and character.

Miss Fischer will first be presented as an American screen star, in a timely five-reel feature dealing with modern questions, and called "A Daughter of Joan." It is a comedy-drama and was written by Beatrice Vander Pluym and William Parker, and adapted for the screen by Chester B. Clapp. Jack Mower will continue as her leading man.

Frank J. Urson has been secured by the American Film Company to photograph the Margarita Fischer productions. Mr. Urson formerly worked under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham for several years and their long association in the motion picture field is expected to produce some excellent results in the Fischer productions.

BILL POSTING FOR BLUEBIRDS.

A schedule of 500 cities throughout the country, in which will be carried on a bill-posting campaign to introduce Bluebird's " Star-Cycle" to the general public, has been arranged. William de Leftwich Dodge has designed a dignified and at the same time ornate combination of art and portraiture to attract the passerby and make familiar the features of Mae Murray, Ruth Clifford, Dorothy Phillips, Carmel Myers, Violet Mersereau and Franklyn Farnum, who constitute the membership of Bluebird's "Star-Cycle."

The six facial representations will hang in as many medallions within a border of effective coloring, with very little typematter to detract from the emphasis that is intended to apply to the individual pictures. In this way Bluebird believes that co-operation with the exhibitors will be effectively obtained, and to that end the selection of cities have been carefully made.

"ARMS AND THE GIRL" (Paramount).

Just about a week before she makes her debut in a new play at the Hudson theater, New York, Bille Burke, the star of stage and screen, who was last seen in the Paramount production, "The Mysterious Miss Terry," will appear in the film version of the successful drama, "Arms and the Girl." This second Paramount picture will be released October 8.

"Arms and the Girl" is serious in theme, dealing with those harrowing days at the outbreak of the great war, when the hand of the Hun fell heavily upon helpless Belgium.

CHANGES IN TRIANGLE PROGRAM.

The Triangle Distributing Corporation has announced the release of "The Man Hater," featuring Winifred Allen, for the week of October 28. "Doing Her Bit," the patriotic drama originally scheduled for this date, has been temporarily removed from the schedule. "The Stainless Barrier" will be the release for the second half of the week, as previously announced.

As revised, the Triangle feature program for the latter half of October is as follows: October 21, "The Firefly of Tough Luck," with Alma Ruebens, and "Cassidy," with Dick Rosson; October 28, "The Man Hater," with Winifred Allen, and "The Stainless Barrier," with Irene Hunt and Jack Livingston.

"A NIGHT IN NEW YORK" (American).

William Russell will be presented in a new role in his forthcoming feature "A Night in New York," written by Charles Turner Dazey and Frank Dazey and adapted for the screen by Chester B. Clapp. Russell will be presented as a station agent at Hohokus, Maine, whose one desire in life is to go to New York. He gets there—and right there the story hops to it.

Francelia Billington, as Gwendolyn Van Loon, has the leading feminine role. She is a beautiful society girl, daughter of a wealthy government official at whose house the Hohokus station agent finds himself all mixed up because of mistaken identities.

Carl Stockdale, Edward Peil and Alfred Ferguson have important parts and Harvey Clark has again been assigned the role of screen father to William Russell.

KATE PRICE APPEARS IN "SPARKLES."

Kate Price, the jolly comedienne, is featured in the first of the fourth series of Sparkle comedies, introduced this month by General Film Company for the Jaxon Film Corporation. Her able co-star, Billy Ruge, appears with her first in "Week End Shopping," a one-reel subject. Kate and Billy visit a department store for the purpose of fitting Billy out in some new store clothes. Billy's inclination to flirt, which is almost a disease with him, brings about one mix-up after another until it earns for him the soundest spanking of his life. The comedy in "Week-End Shopping" never lags for a minute. It promises well for the new series of six subjects.

"THOU SHALT NOT STEAL" (Fox).

"Thou Shalt Not Steal," the William Fox Special Feature released October 14, and in which Miss Virginia Pearson is starred, not only is an unusually abosrbing detective story, but affords Miss Pearson ample opportunity for employment of her emotional art. The bewildering action of the picture swirls around a $100,000 theft-from-a-thief, and the meager and solitary clue is of about the right size and in about the right anatomical location to be covered by a wrist watch.

The cast is exceptionally large, and every member contributes lavishly to the mystery features. One of the company, the valet, is Victor De Linsky, a Russian nobleman, who was a lieutenant for the Emperor in the war against Japan, who subsequently was graduated from the Imperial Academy of Dramatic Art at Petrograd, and who, later, still under the reign of the near-sighted Czar whom once he served, took such treasonable interest in the revolutionary propaganda that he was sent to Siberia.

The play was adapted and staged by William Night and the photography, on which Mr. Fox is laying unusual emphasis since the inauguration of his special features, is by Joseph Ruttenberg.

"RASPUTIN" AND "THE BURGLAR" on WORLD FILM PROGRAM.

"Rasputin, the Black Monk," which drew very large audiences to the Park theater, New York, is in seven reels, and "The Burglar," which followed immediately, is in six reels. Both these picture plays will be published, just as they are, upon the regular World program at regular World prices.

"This," said Director General William A. Brady, "is by way of making good our forecasts of the past fifteen or sixteen months, and doing it in a manner that leaves no room for picking flaws.

"'Rasputin,' by the crowds it has drawn in New York, and by the laudations it has received from all the leading newspapers, has already established its right to rank with the biggest of the big specials.

"We intended to permit this photoplay to run on at the Park theater throughout the period of our lease, which we had succeeded in extending for this purpose, but we could not find another suitable theater just now in which to show 'The Burglar,' and so determined to curtail the prosperous run of the Russian picture.

"It is no secret around the Park that the house statistics of receipts for motion pictures have never excelled the record of 'Rasputin,' so we are making something of a sacrifice through its withdrawal in favor of 'The Burglar.'"

NEW SELIG LIBRARY DATES.

Future releases in the Selig World Library series being distributed by General Film Company, promise to add to the reputation these subjects have established as friend-makers for the exhibitors. These educational pictures, from exclusive Selig negatives, have scored a success wherever they have been shown. Three subjects are promised for October in accordance with the new plan of issuing one of these single-reel features every other week. Release dates for the month are October 3, 17 and 31.

Number 20 of the Selig World Library presents four of the most entertaining features yet seen in these series. One gets a good view of highly amusing Japanese cabaret performers at Tokyo. Next the camera shifts to Jerusalem, the Holy City. Other interesting subjects are "The Cocoanut Industry in the Philippine Islands" and "Ostrich vs. Chicken as a Food Producer." The latter subject illustrates the various uses to which this big bird can be put as a meat substitute. For one thing, one of its eggs equals thirty hen's eggs and is equally nutritious.

ETHEL RITCHIE STAR IN "FALCON."

"The Understudy," the current Falcon Feature announced by General Film Company, does more than its share to maintain the fast pace set by these popular four-reel dramas. Ethel Ritchie and Neil Hardin, two popular screen favorites, are featured in this picture, which is the eighth release of the series. Incidentally Miss Ritchie enjoys the distinction of appearing in two roles—those of Georgianna Lane and Hope Van Alen. The remarkable resemblance between the two young women is the basis of the highly entertaining story which follows the substitution of the former to pose as Mrs. Van Alen while the real wife is being treated at a sanitarium.

The story of "The Understudy" is by Leigh Gordon Giltner, a popular magazine writer, who has injected a lively plot into the story. The two stars are ably supported by a strong cast which contains, among others, Bruce Smith and Mollie McConnell. "The Understudy" was produced under the supervision of H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer.

FREULER ANNOUNCES "THE ADVENTURER."

Next Chaplin Pi ture Now Ready for Distrib_tion by Mutual.

THE ADVENTURER," next of the Chaplin-Mutual specials, will be released October 22. This announcement was made by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, upon receipt of a telegram from Los Angeles, announcing that the film, completed after weeks of delay, was on its way to the Mutual's executive offices in Chicago.

"The Adventurer" has met with innumerable adventures in the course of its completion. Just as the final scenes were about to be shot Mr. Chaplin was taken ill. He was well enough to appear in the studio for only a few days when Edna Purviance, his leading woman, was forced to go to the hospital for two weeks. After the last scenes were finished and Mr. Chaplin began his task of cutting the 20,000 feet down to 2,000, it was found that certain of the scenes, destined to remain in the film, were not done to the satisfaction of the comedian and he ordered retakes.

"The Adventurer" portrays Mr. Chaplin in the bestriped garb of a convict, and many of the most comical situations in the film occur during his pursuit by the prison deputies over the Sierra Madras.

"REACHING FOR THE MOON" NEXT FAIRBANKS.

The title of the new Fairbanks picture will be "Reaching for the Moon." Work on this photoplay is now well under way in California at the Lasky studio. It was for this production that the Fairbanks organization crossed the continent recently in order to get New York scenes.

"THE AUCTION BLOCK" (Goldwyn).

Though the story is, of course, the "star" of "The Auction Block," the great picture made from the Rex Beach novel, and soon to be released through Goldwyn, an unusually strong and capable cast of player will be seen in the picturization of the story.

Rubye DeRemer plays the role of Lorelei Knight, the little country girl whose greedy parents and scheming brother bring her to New York to put her on the auction block for sale to the highest bidder. Another important feminine role is in the hands of Florence Deshon, last year one of the featured players in David Belasco's production of "Seven Chances."

The role of John Merkle is played by Alec Francis, widely known to picture fans. Other players are Florence Johns, Dorothy Wheeler, Walter Hitchcock, Ned Burton, Charles Graham, George Cooper, Francis Joyner, Bernard Randall, and Peter Lang.

Mutual Schedule

Offerings for Week of October 15 Features Ann Murdock and Juliette Day.

TWO stars of the speaking stage, each in her second Mutual production, are listed on Mutual's schedule of releases for the week of October 15. Miss Ann Murdock appears in "The Beautiful Adventure," a picturization of the Charles Frohman stage success, and Miss Juliette Day, star in "Upstairs and Down" and other Broadway hits, comes to the screen in "The Calendar Girl," a five-reel comedy-drama.

"The Beautiful Adventure" is from the story by Robert de Flers, G. A. de Caillavert and Ettienne Ray. The little French heroine runs away on the morning set for her wedding to the man of her parents' choice with the man she loves, fleeing to her grandmother's home in the country where grandmother naturally accepts them as bride and groom. There ensued the beautiful adventure. It is a snappy story, beautifully acted by the clever and famous Miss Murdock. It was scenarioized by Joseph F. Poland and directed by Dell Henderson, who was responsible for "Reputation," starring Edna Goodrich, and "Outcast," the first of Miss Murdock's Mutual pictures.

Juliette Day scored heavily in "The Rainbow Girl," and her second Mutual release, "The Calendar Girl" is equally interesting and equally as well produced. Miss Day has been at work for several months at the American studios in Santa Barbara on a series of productions for Mutual. She deserted Broadway, where she was starred in the clever play "Upstairs and Down," for the Pacific Coast. She has brought to the screen the same inimitable little touches of acting, and the same clever personality which won her fame before the footlights.

"The Calendar Girl" deals with the experience of a wonderfully pretty model in a modiste's shop, who goes to the beach to display an attractive bathing creation and becomes involved in complications with a newspaper reporter, a calendar printer and a rich and handsome young lawyer.

Chapter V of "The Lost Express."

"In Deep Water," the fifth chapter of "The Lost Express," Helen Holmes' latest Mutual-Signal photonovel, is released October 15. Heavy bookings have been reported on the new serial, and they are increasing rapidly as exhibitors are discovering the success with which first-run exhibitors are showing the production.

"The Lost Express" is declared to be the most thrilling thing that Helen Holmes has done in her long and spectacular screen career. Each chapter is full of sensation and sets a new pace for fast action drama. Chapter V includes some new stunts which Director J. P. McGowan devised for his dare-devil star to stage.

Two Comedies on Week's Schedule.

There are two comedies on the Mutual schedule for the week. Billie Rhodes appears in the third of her new series of Strand Mutual one-reelers, "For Sweet Charity." She is supported by Jay Belasco and a capable cast. George Ovey appears in "Jerry's Jam," another of the highly laughable one-reel productions in which the humorous George Ovey appears as Jerry. "For Sweet Charity" is released October 16 and "Jerry's Jam" on October 18.

Two Topicals to Be Released.

Reel Life, Mutual's one-reel film magazine, is released October 18. It contains the following subjects: "A Colonial Church in South Carolina," "When Dishwashing is a Pleasure," "The Banana Industry," "A Primitive Jeweler," and an animated drawing from life, entitled "An Optical Illusion." Mutual Weekly, the Mutual-Gaumont news reel, is released October 17. It carries pictures of the latest news events up to the time the film is shipped.

"THE WOMAN GOD FORGOT" RELEASED OCT. 22.

The date of release for the mitral Geraldine Farrar film, "The Woman God Forgot," is October 22. A greater triumph than experienced even with "Joan the Woman" is predicted by the producers for the new Artcraft spectacle, and a special exploitation campaign is being prepared by exhibitors, who have already booked this picture.

The story is of a princess who sells her country for the man she loves. It is taken from a chapter in the early history of America, telling how the Spanish invaded Mexico and of their conquest of Montezuma. The princess falls in love with a young Spaniard, which role is played by Wallace Reid. The cast includes Hobart Bosworth, Theodore Kosloff, Russian dancer; Raymond Hatton and James Neill.

THEDA BARA GOES TO BROADWAY.

Theda Bara will make her first Broadway appearance at the Lyric theater on Monday night, October 15, in a film drama, "Cleopatra," founded on history and Cleopatra, as portrayed by Shakespeare and Sardou. Theda Bara will portray the Queen Cleopatra.

The film was photographed last summer in California. William Fox, the producer, acknowledges the assistance of the Egyptian department of the Metropolitan Museum in bringing out true historical values in the picture. The scenario is by Adrian Johnson

An elaborate musical setting has been arranged to accompany the presentation of the picture.

CARL LAEMMLE TAKES CONTROL OF BLUEBIRD.

Because of his manifold moving picture holdings, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., has previously been unable to give his personal attention to anything more than the production department of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc. He has now so arranged his business that he will be free to take upon himself the entire management of Bluebird affairs and has, in accord with the suggestion of the other stockholders, become managing director of Bluebird, assuming all the responsibilities and work that the title implies.

The increased activities in Bluebird affairs, which Mr. Laemmle ow assumes, as managing director, will involve his full participation in the most important advances the series has made since its establishment; marking a broadening of policy that has for some time been contemplated, and the introduction of innovations still to be announced. Every matter of policy, distribution, production and advertising in all essential details, will, in future, have the managing directors' experienced and personal attention.

NEW PLAY FOR EDNA GOODRICH.

A drama that hits hard at the heterogeneity of the American introduction and illustrates in most effective fashion the folly of inviting casual business acquaintances home to dinner is "Her Second Husband," by Hamilton Smith, in which Miss Edna Goodrich is to star.

The author of this play, who also wrote "The Vampire," "The Chests of Fortune," "Girl Detective," "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel," and many other well known film dramas, had Miss Goodrich in mind for the star part when he began this portray, which is intended to show the folly of compelling a wife to receive in her home on terms of social familiarity the acquaintances of her husband to whom he desires her to be nice "for business reasons." The production is for early Mutual release.

Miss Goodrich is much pleased with the play, which she declares inculcates some highly important social lessons and at the same time possesses all the essentials of dramatic availability.

SECOND "SUB-DEB" COMES OCTOBER 29.

Once again has Marguerite Clark proved she is mistress of the art of depicting upon the screen girlish types, with all the elusive charm, daintiness and the whilom spirit of mischief that is the natural accompaniment of youth at that place where womanhood and childhood meet. "Bab's Diary," first of the Paramount screen versions of the "sub-deb" tales by Mary Roberts Rinehart, was released September 29, and no sooner had it been given the public than demands for the production began to flow in, in almost unprecedented quantities. The public and—necessarily—the motion picture exhibitors, have received Bab with acclaim.

"Bab's Burglar," which is to be released October 29, is being awaited with exceptional interest, everyone being anxious to know just what this sprightly sub-debutante will do next.

J. Searle Dawley has directed both these "Bab" pictures; and it is only fair to say he has succeeded in catching the spirit of the stories down to the last degree and infusing it into the productions. Furthermore a fine cast, virtually the same in each picture, aids in rounding out the result

MONTAGNE AND THOMPSON FINISH ANOTHER SERIAL.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, was so pleased with the picturization of "The Fighting Trail," made by Edward J. Montagne and Garfield Thompson, that he immediately assigned these two clever writers to put in scenario form Vitigraph's newest serial, "Vengeance and the Woman." The script was finished this week in record time, and after being O K'd by Mr. Smith was hurried to the West, where William Duncan, director and star of "The Fighting Trail," will produce it.

NEW FOUR-REEL "O. HENRY."

One of the most delightful and whimsical of the O. Henry stories is found in the current Broadway Star Feature release, "The Indian Summer of Dry Valley Johnson," of General Film Company. In this, the fourth four-reel "O. Henry" production, Carlton King and Jean Paige reappear as leads.

Both Miss Paige and Mr. King have given a delightful interpretation to this charming story, which was directed by Martin Justice. This story will be followed in a week by a two-reel "O. Henry" picture, "Law and Order," a powerfully dramatic Western subject.

"DRAFT 258," TO BE RELEASED AS SPECIAL.

"Draft 258," Metro's forthcoming special patriotic production de luxe, is described by those who have seen it as the logical successor of this firm's sensational box office success, "The Slacker," and, as "The Slacker" has already done, will further crystallize patriotic enthusiasm through the country. Directed by William Christy Cabanne, the man who made "The Slacker," and written by him in collaboration with June Mathis, it takes up the situation of America of today exactly where "The Slacker" left off. "Draft 258" has the distinguished actress, Mabel Taliaferro, as star.

Nazimova Goes to New Orleans

Director Baker Heads Company of Players Who Will Appear in Big Metro Production.

MADAME NAZIMOVA, who has signed a long-time contract with Metro, has left with Director George D. Baker and a large company for New Orleans, where the exteriors of her initial Metro photodrama, an adaptation of Mabel Wagnalls' "A Rose Bush of a Thousand Years" will be staged.

The members of Madame Nazimova's supporting cast who are accompanying her to New Orleans are Charles Bryant, her leading man, who portrays Paul Granville, an American artist; Frank Currier, as the Prior; Bigelow Cooper, as De Roche, the heavy; John Sturgeon, as Fra Augustin; Albert Hall, as Pierre, and Philip Sanford, as Mestaire, the innkeeper. A large number of players will be engaged in the Southern city for the ensemble scenes. Others in the party include Charles J. Hunt, assistant director; Dwight Begeman, Charles Devin and Edward J. Shulter, technical director.

Much of the action centers around a monastery, which will be a large set constructed of masonry, that will equal in cost and size the great Tower of Babel set erected for scenes in Metro's "Draft 258." The old sections of New Orleans are ideal locations for the scenes located in the Latin quarter of Paris.

Madame Nazimova has a role in this Metro production which is of great dramatic intensity, being cast as Joline, whose regeneration is brought about in a mystic manner by a rose bush planted with sacred rites a thousand years ago. A crowning miracle is performed in the life of the heroine.

Incidental to the story of "A Rose Bush of a Thousand Years" are phases of the present great world war. The spectacular war scenes will be staged when the company returns to New York.

General Has "War News Weekly"

Cinema News Syndicate's Patriotic Release Taken for Exclusive Distribution.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY will act as exclusive distributor for the "American War News Weekly," one-reel subjects dealing with military and naval activities of the United States. This new arrangement begins with the twenty-fifth number of the American News Weekly, dated October 5. This weekly, produced by the Cinema News Syndicate, has been scoring everywhere, and the ambitious plans for the continuation of this feature on an even more important scale promise well for the future.

The Weekly is edited from the work of some thirty camera-spondents in this country and Europe, who are doing highly creditable work in providing a high grade graphic weekly of patriotic and topical interest. The activities of the fighting forces, important events in the preparedness movement, patriotic demonstrations and many other events dealing with America's participation in the war, are shown each week.

A series of new exhibitors' helps has been prepared by General Film. These include twenty slides for advertising purposes, two stock posters and a weekly one-sheet, printed in red, white and blue, in which the four leading subjects are headlined. This campaign of co-operation on the part of General Film is expected to enhance the effectiveness of the "War News Weekly" as a friend maker for the exhibitor.

BIG CAST FOR BRENON'S "EMPTY POCKETS."

Herbert Brenon is recruiting the characters for his latest production, "Empty Pockets," from the novel of Rupert Hughes, from the ranks of the Jewish actors and actresses from the East side, also from the ranks of Broadway's foremost actors. As has already been announced Bert Lytell, who made his screen debut in "The Lone Wolf" with such success, will be seen again in this picture, while Barbara Castleton is to play Muriel Schuyler.

Mr. Brenon has now added to his list Hetty Galanta, as Maryla; Malcolm Williams, as Perry Merrithew; Susan Willa, as Red Ida; Henry Leone, as Angelo Angeiillo; Susan Graham, Thornton Baston, Frank Nelson, Joseph Chailles, Germaine Bourville, Inez Shannon, Peggy Betts, Mr. Askman, Mr. Rothstein, Nathan Marcus, Ethel Kauffman, Peggy Shaw, Mrs. Mandel and Mrs. Rosen.

Mr. Brenon, who has been recovering from an operation for appendicitis, left the hospital and intends to resume his work on "Empty Pockets" within the next few days.

SIEGMANN TO DIRECT CARMEL MYERS.

Following her introduction as a Bluebird star in "The Lash of Power," on Nov. 5, Carmel Myers will appear in still another Harry Solter production, "One Clear Call," created from Larry Evans' story of the same title, a work numbered among the "best sellers" of last year. Then Miss Myers will pass to the directorship of George A. Siegmann, who is numbered among the experts in motion picture production.

Kenneth Harlan will continue as Miss Myers' leading man, but her supporting company will be newly chosen by Director Siegmann from the stock forces at Universal City. It is the purpose of Managing Director Carl Laemmle, of Bluebird, to give Miss Myers every advantage in her progress as a Bluebird star. The engagement of Director Siegmann is a clear indication of Mr. Laemmle's sincerity of purpose.

"ANTHONY, THE ABSOLUTE," JULIAN'S NEXT BLUEBIRD.

An unusual and striking feature of the new Bluebird production which Director Rupert Julian is at present staging, is the colorful and elaborate Japanese settings in which much of the action occurs. The story is a screen adaptation of Samuel Merwin's recent and widely-read novel, "Anthony, the Absolute," and the scenes are laid in Japan. Consequently nearly all of the sets, interior and exterior, are of the light and artistic type of construction familiar to all who have visited the Land of the Rising Sun.

A corps of Japanese workmen has been engaged especially to build the scenery for the production from designs and sketches prepared by Frank Tokanaga, a Japanese actor, who also appears in the picture. Ruth Clifford is the star of the photodrama and Monroe Salisbury appears opposite her as Anthony Eckhart, the studious scientist. W. H. Bainbridge and George McDaniels also have important parts in the production.

SECOND ESSANAY CHAPLIN READY.

"A Jitney Elopement," a conspicuous Charlie Chaplin success, is the current attraction in the new edition of famous Chaplin hits being made by Essanay through General Film. It has been strengthened by re-editing and has been retitled guaranteeing a continuation of the popular favor which the Essanay-Chaplin releases have rolled up from the beginning. Chaplin's inimitable comedy and the excellent work of his leading lady, Edna Purviance, are shown to splendid advantage in this subject.

New England Exhibitors Lend Able Hand

Theaters All Over the Territory Boost Library Fund for Soldiers—Manager L. B. Mayer Aided Distribution of Slides—"Four Minute Men" Help.

By Richard Davis Howe, 80 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—Great success marked the efforts of the moving picture exhibitors of New England in exploiting the Library Fund for Soldiers and Sailors. The campaign was in direct charge of Louis B. Mayer, president of the Metro Film Corporation of New England, and Mrs. Alice Rice Carroll, well-known lecturer and exhibitor. The distribution of the slides for the advertising of the campaign was effected through the New England Metro organization. Only a few days' notice was given of the campaign, but by heroic efforts and wonderful organization all the film houses received their slides in time to make a remarkable showing for the fund. They all did great work in advertising the campaign.

A number of "four-minute men" were secured and assigned to Boston theaters and these lecturers added greatly to the effectiveness of the campaign. The following houses allowed the "four-minute" lectures: Keith's Boston, Keith's Bijou, Orpheum, St. James, Park, Modern, Beacon, Gordon's Washington Street Olympia, Gordon's Scollay Square Olympia, Bowdoin Square, Star, Fenway, Franklin Park and a number of suburban houses.

Sailors from the Receiving Ship at Commonwealth pier were stationed in the lobbies of various theaters throughout Boston, where they solicited aid from the patrons as they passed in and out of the house.

Harry G. Segal Takes Russian Revolution Film.

Boston, Mass.—Harry G. Segal, general manager of the Globe Feature Film, announces that he has purchased the New England distributing rights for the authentic Russian Revolutionary pictures, featuring Alexander Kerensky, Provisional President of the Republic.

Haverhill Exhibitor Begins Children's Matinees.

Haverhill, Mass.—James Sayer, manager of the Colonial theater, has put in operation his plan of a special performance on Saturday morning for children. The program is selected by the Haverhill Women's Clubs after they have reviewed the various films which Manager Sayer has selected for the "kiddies."

Mr. Sayer put the proposition of a children's performance up to the Haverhill women some months ago and he received their earnest co-operation. They even canvassed the city for him and made a report on the kind of moving pictures the public at large liked best.

Aided by this report Manager Sayer has been able to book attractions that have met with favor of the majority of his patrons.

Three New Salesmen Come to the Lair.

Boston, Mass.—Three new salesmen have been added to the force of the New England Fox headquarters in Boston. The new men are Mose Eberstein, A. F. Walters and Claude Fredericks. All of the men have had wide experience in the picture game in New England.

Mr. Eberstein sold "The Battle Cry of Peace" in New England territory. He will cover Eastern Massachusetts and Rhode Island for the Fox company.

Mr. Walters is a successful exhibitor from Rumford, Me., where he controlled and operated the opera house, a moving picture theater. He will cover the Maine territory for Fox, where he is well acquainted.

Mr. Fredericks has been a salesman for the American Feature Film Company, of which Louis B. Mayer is president and general manager. He also sold "The Battle Cry of Peace" for the Peerless Pictures Corporation in New England territory. He will represent the Vermont and New Hampshire section, where he replaces David Garb, who has been transferred to Western Massachusetts and Connecticut.

Goldwyn Gets Three More Salesmen.

Boston, Mass.—Three more salesmen have been added to the New England offices of the Goldwyn Pictures by General Manager Harry F. Campbell. He now has a staff of six men, which he considers the finest salesman's staff in New England territory. The additions to his force are William O'Brien, Frank Truda and Frank S. Stanton.

Mr. O'Brien will cover the Maine territory. He has been connected with moving pictures for the past twelve years and has worked with the Mutual, Triangle and World.

Mr. Stanton has been manager of the Modern theater in Providence, R. I., for the past two years, going there from the management of the Fenway, Boston and Franklin Park theaters, all of Boston. He was connected with the Boston office of the Greater Vitagraph for three years.

Mr. Truda has traveled throughout New England for Samuel Grant's enterprises and is well-known to all exhibitors.

General's "Camille" Makes a Stir.

Boston, Mass.—"Camille," first super production to be marketed by the General Film Company, was shown recently to the trade and was heavily booked at the first run-off. This six-reel attraction features Helen Hesperia, a young lady of good looks and a considerable amount of histrionic ability.

Earle B. Tinker, of the local General office, reports big sales on this feature and that many small towns were paying big town rentals to secure early runs on this unusual offering for their patrons. The first contract made was closed by Earle B. Tinker with J. J. Whalen of the Strong theater, Burlington, Vt., by telephone, for what is said to be a record figure for any Vermont theater to pay for a picture.

"Baby Mine" Filling Boston Theater.

Boston, Mass.—Dainty Madge Kennedy is "packing them in" at the Boston theater in her first appearance on the screen in motion pictures, in "Baby Mine."

Pine Tree State News Letter

Elm, Portland, Celebrates Birthday.

PORTLAND, ME.—The first anniversary of the Elm, one of Portland's finest theaters, was marked by gala bills and likewise gala audiences. The Elm seats about eight hundred people and is very ably managed by Harry Rosenthal. Mr. Rosenthal has made an unusual success of this theater, largely through a pleasing personality and a desire to give the public the best the market affords. While the Elm is handicapped by small seating capacity, it is astonishing what big attractions Manager H. Rosenthal plays and gets by with. Anniversary week the following subjects were used in the program: Henry King in "The Climber" (Falcon), Charlie Chaplin in "The Champion," and Marguerite Clayton in "The Rainbow Box," a Black Cat feature.

Mr. Rosenthal is a considerable user of General Film product, controlling in Portland from the General Boston office the Black Cat subjects, Falcon features, American War Weekly and the four part O. Henry Broadway Star productions. In addition he uses three special comedy releases a week from the same company.

New Waterville Theater Almost Ready.

Waterville, Me.—A. S. Black's New Haines theater, at Waterville, is fast nearing completion. Mr. Black is already arranging for the service for this new house, the first contract being for certain productions of the General Film Company which will then be on the market.

The General Film contract was made at the offices of the Maine Theaters, Inc., at Rockland, Me., between A. S. Black, president, and Earle B. Tinker, special representative of J. D. Levine, manager of the General Film Company's Boston office.

Pine Tree Breezes.

Millinocket, Me.—Charles Rush, the Millinocket theater proprietor who was recently injured when a fly-wheel burst in his building, has recovered, his friends will be glad to hear, and has installed a new engine to replace the one that exploded.

Presque Isle, Me.—The Perry theater, of Presque Isle, has been rented to the United Churches for evangelical services for three or four weeks.

Bar Harbor, Me.—Joe Emery cleared more than $1,000 from admissions to the "Daughter of the Gods," the spectacular film featuring the divine Annette.

Bangor, Me.—"The Romance of Bangor," a motion picture film taken in this city through arrangement with the Bangor Daily News and the Park theater, is proving to be a great attraction at the Park. This despite the fact that a scene is shown three years after the hero and the heroine are married in which they are seen with three children (no twins) and one of the children is supposed to be five years old. This anachronism merely adds to the enjoyment of the play by the people of Bangor, who are discussing it on every street corner.

Pittsburgh Firm Leases Johnstown Theater

Garden Theater Taken for Ten Years by Scherer & Kelly—House is to Be Remodeled and Renamed the Temple—Will Now Seat 1,000.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 405 Fourth Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa.

JOHNSTOWN, PA.—The attractive Garden theater, Johnstown, Pa., has been leased for a term of ten years by the firm of Scherer & Kelly, prominent exhibitors. The house is being remodeled throughout and will be formally reopened about Jan. 1. The seating capacity is to be increased from 500 to 1,000, and the plans call for many new and modern improvements which will make the house one of the finest in the city. It is announced that the name will be changed to the Temple theater. Scherer & Kelly also operate the Cambria theater and the Park theater, two of Johnstown's leading picture houses, and will conduct their latest acquisition along the same up-to-date lines. Among the features of the Temple will be a large orchestra.

Several Changes in Pittsburgh Pathe.

Pitsburgh, Pa.—Manager Leo Levison of the Pittsburgh Pathe exchange, Film Exchange building, announces a number of important changes in his organization during the past week. Karl Suelke, formerly connected with the Philadelphia office of Paramount, has been placed in charge of the Westmoreland county and eastern Pennsylvania territory of Pathe, succeeding W. J. Fitzpatrick, resigned. Miss Betty Burgess, formerly booker of the exchange, is now in charge of sales control. Samuel Wheeler succeeds Miss Burgess as booker. Miss Emily Harvey has been appointed secretary to Manager Levison.

Exhibitor H. N. Murray Called to Colors.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Herbert N. Murray, of the Sharpsburg Cameraphone theater, Pittsburgh, Pa., and one of the best known of the younger exhibitors of this city, has been called to the colors and is now at the Petersburg, Va., training camp. His brother, Cecil Murray, is now in charge of the theater. The Murray brothers took over the Cameraphone last February and are meeting with much success. Prior to that time Mr. Herbert Murray was connected with the Colonial theater, Wilkinsburg, one of the Rowland & Clark houses.

Bronstetter Opens Foursquare Office.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The new Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures exchange, of which T. C. Bronstetter has been appointed manager, has established offices at 127 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, in the quarters formerly occupied by the World Film exchange. An office has also been opened at that location by Max W. Herring, until recently half-owner of the Quality Film exchange, but who is now operating independently.

Leader Film Reorganizes.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—A charter of incorporation has been issued to the Leader Film Service, 804 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, with a capital stock of $15,000. This exchange has been operating here for some time, but a reorganization was effected recently with a view to expanding the business. The officers of the company are Alfred Hirsch, president; Al. Cole, vice-president and manager; David Simon, secretary and treasurer.

New Theater Opens at McKees Rocks.

McKees Rocks, Pa.—The New Castle theater, Chartiers avenue, McKees Rocks, Pa., was formally opened on Oct. 1. The house, which is owned by J. H. De Johns, is an attractive one and is up-to-date in every respect. Manager Byers, formerly of the Doris theater, Wilkinsburg, states that business has started off in a very promising manner. High class pictures are shown, with a change of program daily. Music is supplied by a Wurlitzer organ.

Morris Berger Back at His Desk.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Morris Berger, manager of the Specialty Film Co., Pittsburgh, has returned to this city and is again at his desk after a prolonged illness. Mr. Berger was stricken with scarlet fever while on an automobile tour and was confined to a hospital at Detroit for about five weeks. His many friends are glad to know of his recovery and he was tendered a hearty welcome upon his return.

Wolfberg Offices Take More Space.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Harris P. Wolfberg Atractions, Lyceum building, Pittsburgh, has opened an additional suite of attractive offices in order to care for rapidly increasing business. Mr. Wolfberg has just returned from New York, where he closed contracts for the state rights of "To-Day," featuring Florence Reed; "The Mad Lover," featuring Robert Warwick, and "Persuasive Peggy," featuring Peggy Hyland, for the territory of Ohio, western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Brushton Theater Almost Ready.

Brushton, Pa.—Announcement is made by Horne & Wolfe that their new Brushton theater, at Brushton, Pa., a suburb of Pittsburgh, is nearing completion and will be ready for opening about the middle of this month. The house promises to be an exceedingly attractive one and will have a seating capacity of 600.

New Jackson Theater Now Open.

York, Pa.—The new Jackson theater, at York, Pa., was formally opened to the public on Oct. 1. W. M. Barry is manager. The Jackson has a seating capacity of 600.

L. R. Cohen With Quality Film.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Quality Film Company, 404 Ferry street, Pittsburgh, has added to its road staff L. R. Cohen, who was previously connected with this exchange.

O. R. Kurtz Joins General Film Staff.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—O. R. Kurtz, a pioneer film salesman of this city, has joined the Pittsburgh office of the General Film Company. Mr. Kurtz was formerly of the Mutual and at one time was connected for five years with the General. He will look after the city territory.

Auditor Alexander Promoted.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—It is announced that J H. Alexander, auditor of the Pittsburgh Metro exchange, has succeeded Albert W Howell as auditor of the various offices in the Central States. Mr. Howell's resignation took effect Oct. 1.

Jottings of the Trade.

South Wheeling, W. Va.—Two popular moving picture houses of South Wheeling, W. Va., the Home theater, managed by J. H. Fromme, and the Avalon, managed by George Bishop, have been reopened recently after remaining dark during the summer months. Business in both instances is reported quite active.

Wilkinsburg, Pa.—The Grand theater, 822 Wood street, Wilkinsburg, Pa., has been closed by A. J. Barthell, who disposed of his lease. The equipment of the house is for sale.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Samuel Sivitz, publicity manager of the Rowland & Clark theaters, Pittsburgh, has returned to his desk after a prolonged illness.

Kept Audience Content for Hour in the Dark

Electricity Cut Off During Opening of the New Spencer Gem in Frederickton—Steve Hurley Was Able to Keep Audience Amused.

From Alice Fairweather, Standard, St. John, N. B.

FREDERICKTON, N. B.—Rather a notable achievement was carried through by Steve Hurley, who represented F. G. Spencer at the opening of the Gem theater in Frederickton, N. B., Mr. Spencer's new house.

The house was well filled to capacity, the performance had just started nicely when the lights went out and the theater was in darkness for an hour at least. During this time S. C. Hurley, who is well known as a clever entertainer, stepped upon the stage and kept that audience in good humor. Not one left the house, though it was a pretty exhausted teller of tales who saw with rejoicing the electric lights flash on once more. Carl Stowe, the manager of the Gem, can also rise to an occasion, and he took the stage for a short time.

As well as the special feature, "The Law of Compensation," the Gem showed the first chapter of "The Seven Pearls," which took very well. The entire color scheme of the house has been changed, making the walls in a light blue, relieved with sepia and ivory tints.

The screen is set in a border of varying shades of brown surmounted on either side with blue and white marble effect.

The light fixtures are elaborate and can show either white or red light. The ceiling shades are dull white globes surrounded by four circular bulbs. Underneath the balcony ivory tinted bowls have been placed and along the walls dull white fixtures with red lights add greatly to the attractiveness of the theater.

New picture machines and new opera chairs make the Gem in this respect a thoroughly up-to-date house.

The Imperial Theater Commended.

St. John, N. B.—The appeal for soldiers' socks, spoken of last week, where the contributions went to the Imperial theater for collection, was responded to so well that five thousand pairs were obtained, the last hundred through the generosity of two citizens. At the Saturday evening performance the members of the Red Cross Committee occupied a box for the second performance and as W. H. Golding made the announcement, a member of the executive committee arose and in a brief speech thanked Mr. Golding and the staff of the Imperial for the assistance. "It is only another instance," Mrs. Hooper said, "when the Imperial has stood back of a patriotic appeal and done such good service." Mr. Golding, in reply, stated that he was told by his employers to place the house and its resources at the disposal of any such cause whenever possible and that it was a time when it was the duty and pleasure of himself and his staff to do all they could for the boys over there. Both speeches were greeted with warm applause.

New Theaters and Changes.

Richbucto, N. B.—J. S. McDougal, of Richbucto, is opening up a new theater at that place the middle of November. He is waiting until the electric lighting system in the town is installed. The house will seat about four hundred people.

Chatham, N. B.—Harry Rich, of Chatham, ened his new theater and had a success- l first show with "The Battle Cry of ace."

Sydney, N. B.—E. E. Lynn, of the Casino, dney, C. B., has put his theater on an tire policy of open booking and will chose pictures entirely on their merits. He s booked several films from the Specialty.

Bathurst, N. B.—P. J. Leger, of the Opera use, Bathurst, a pretty little theater, has ered the policy of this, changing his ctures only three time a week instead the daily change, as hitherto.

Business Notes from St. John.

St. John, N. B.—There will be in this ter- ory shortly two reels of the Quebec idge pictures made by Pathe. W. C. Mc- ay, of the St. John opera house, has oked these and it is expected that many uses will show them, as they are of most nely interest.

To break a record twice in three days as what happened at A. B. Farmer's The ar, North End, St. John. On Friday of st week Mr. Farmer showed the first isodes of the Pathe serial, "The Double oss Mystery," and broke the record at- ndance at the theater. Monday he start- "The Neglected Wife" and played to en larger audiences. Mr. Farmer gives e credit to the excellence of the serials d the good results from his advertising. makes use of the local newspaper hich has devoted the most space to the tion picture.

Allan Christie, of the Independent thea- and Film Supply Co., is back in St. hn from Halifax, where he has been for e last week. There was shown there in e Arena the British war picture, "The ttle of Arras," under the auspices of the tizen's Club of Halifax. The picture ayed to over twelve thousand people, do- g very well during exhibition time in alifax. Part of the proceeds went for triotic purposes.

R. G. Marsh has recently returned from tour of the North Shore of New Bruns- ck, where he booked the "Seven Pearls" Chatham, Newcastle, Bathurst and mpbellton. The North Shore exhibitors re also much interested in "Les Miser- les," as there is a very large proportion French in that vicinity.

St. John, N. B.—At the Pathe exchange am told that splendid bookings are be- g written for all six serials handled by is office. R. G. March tells me that he Seven Pearls" is to be shown at the mpire, Halifax; the Lyric, St. John; the and, Truro; the Prince Edward, Char- tetown, P. E. I.; the Empress, Amherst, d the Gem, Fredericton. "The Fatal Ring" booked at the Peoples theater, Yar- uth. K. Keltie, of this theater, is pro- essing towards recovery from an oper- ion for appendicitis, though he will not able to travel for some weeks yet. the excepects to have several big fea- res in this territory for release shortly, hong them being "Les Miserables," a ven-reel picture, which made a hit when re some years ago. This is a new copy. Pathe people pride themselves on the ab- lute newness of their films and at the nvention rose to deny a charge of send- g old films to this territory.) Florence ed "In Today" and Robert Warwick in he Mad Lover" are other new features.

F. G. Spencer has booked both Pathe rials and features for his new theater at oodstock. "The Fatal Ring" will be the rial at Woodstock. He also shows "The tal Ring" at the Princess, Truro, N. S.

St. John, N. B.—W. H. Golding of the perial theater has closed a contract th I. Sourkes for the series of pictures oduced by the Educational Film Co. This ries will begin next Monday with the tampede" and the rest of the twelve els will be mixed in with the regular ogram for the fortnight following. One the series, "American Game Trails," as taken in the New Brunswick woods. is a wonderful picture and worthy of t praise.

Buffalo Moves to Control Charity Pleas

Chamber of Commerce Resolves to Withhold Official Recognition from Solicitors Except Those of Proven Institutions.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 North Elwood Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—For a long time Buffalo exhibitors and exchange managers have been a target for so-called charity appeals. If the average business man has a heart as big as the proverbial "half bushel," then the film man's heart must be of mountainous proportions, a fact to which many fund collectors will testify. The solicitors, however, went to extremes and spoiled their own game. As a result a check has been put on their operations, and now the exhibitors and exchange men are likely to have far more money for cigars and gasoline than they have had in a long time.

A resolution governing the recognition of charities by the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce, in which the moving picture business is well represented, has just been adopted. In the future no official recognition will be given to any charity or like cause in any fund solicitation unless the people making the request can prove to the Charities Committee of this commercial body that such a cause has been regularly organized and at work in the city for at least a year. This system, however, will not work against any worthy emergency causes, which may be produced by fire, flood or war.

Slide Tells of Need for Typists, Etc.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Managers of moving picture theaters in this city received a chance to "do their bit" when Marvin S. Burt, in charge of local examinations for positions in the federal service, urged the managers to display films telling of the need for stenographers and typists in the government service. In a letter from the chief of the Civil Service Commission in Washington, Mr. Burt was asked to make a report of the number of moving picture theaters in Buffalo. The managers were urged as a matter of patriotism to lend their theaters to the purposes of the commission.

"Tell the audiences," said Mr. Burt to the exhibitors, "that fighting in this war is not entirely in the hands of the army and navy. There is a great need of stenographers in practically every branch of the service and we want the fact advertised."

New Breglio Theater Opens in Utica.

Utica, N. Y.—G. F. Sellman writes that the new Park theater of Utica auspiciously opened October 8. "The Lone Wolf" was the initial attraction. The house has a ten-piece orchestra, soloists and pipe organ. The theater has been in preparation for more than a year, and, according to the writer, "is truly the finest theater in Central New York." The owner is P. A. Breglio, of Springfield, Mass.

Employees Take Vacation to Pick Fruit.

Lockport, N. Y.—If the theaters of Lockport, N. Y., happened to give service slightly under the 100 per cent. mark during a recent week, it was because some of their employes, recalling Mr. Hoover's advice on conservation, heeded the call to help harvest the enormous peach crop of Niagara County, N. Y. Seventeen other industrial and mercantile establishments of the city similarly cooperated in response to the appeals of the farmers, the farm bureau of the county and the Lockport Chamber of Commerce.

Many Exchanges are Short Handed.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The local exchange managers find it difficult to get efficient help in some departments. Even advanced wages do not always induce the young women to retain their positions. The high wages paid in factories and railroad shops are proving an attraction to the girls. They are evidently following the pace set by some school teachers of Olean, N. Y., who are alleged to have sidestepped pedagogy "to pull down the big money" paid in the railroad shops in that city. Time was when the exchanges were besieged with efficient applicants for positions. In postbellum days the number is likely to be greater than ever before.

BISON CITY BUSINESS NOTES.

Buffalo, N. Y.—N. I. Filkins, manager of the Pathe, Buffalo, is pleased with the following communication, which he received from C. S. Smith, manager of the Shattuck opera house of Hornell: "That 'Seven Pearls,' first chapter, is one beautiful picture and should prove an excellent box office attraction."

Bruce Fowler, manager of the Olympic theater, Buffalo, who features the Pathe service, also wrote a long testimonial, of which this is an excerpt: "Pathe, the house of successful serials, deserves praise. Pathe serials mean overwork for the sign of the S. R. O."

The Family theater of Batavia and the Stone opera house of Binghamton at the request of their patrons have rebooked "Polly of the Circus," said George A. Hickey, Goldwyn manager of this territory.

C. A. Taylor, of the Metro, Buffalo, reports exceptionally big bookings on the "Slacker." It is running for a full week at the Echo theater, Syracuse; at the Grand, Rochester, and at the Universal, Auburn, N. Y.

C. J. Rose, a road man for the Metro, Buffalo, has just returned from a successful trip through the eastern part of the state and reports heavy bookings on the "Slacker," featuring Emily Stevens. Mr. Rose is taking dates up to the first of the year. He also reports an increase in business relating to the coming production, "Draft 258," termed the successor to the "Slacker."

The first of the three episodes of "The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras" was shown at Shea's vaudeville theater, Buffalo, beginning Oct. 1. It was announced that Keith & Albee, vaudeville magnates, had paid for exclusive releases of this film in their own and allied theaters.

Manager Sitterly, of the Popular Film service, is on a tour through the eastern part of the state.

Health Commissioner Fronczak, of Buffalo, has received word that Chicago is in the grip of an acute infantile paralysis epidemic. Exhibitors of Western New York paid special attention to the report because they recall what havoc the plague played with their business a year ago last summer. Buffalo has no cases of the malady at present. The health commissioner has warned parents to use every precaution to ward off the disease. Keeping the theaters and homes free from dust is one of the means suggested to prevent the spread of the epidemic.

The opera house at Fredonia is featuring Hearst's Pathe News.

The Strand theater, Buffalo, has contracted for a two-day run of star productions weekly, featuring Charles Frohman's stars.

N. I. Filkins, manager of the Pathe exchange, Buffalo, reports that the latest serial, "Seven Pearls," is booking faster than any previous serial released by Pathe. "Lonesome Luke," another Pathe production, is running wild, he says, and the road men are unable to take care of the bookings.

Mayor Orders Memphis Theaters Closed

Sunday Shows Must Cease—Police Receive Positive Instructions to Permit No Theaters or Other Establishments to Open on Sabbath.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—Acting under orders given him by Mayor H. H. Litty, Chief of Police James Quinlan, Saturday, September 29, instructed his force to arrest the manager and every employe of any theater or moving picture house which attempted to operate on Sunday in the future. Shoe stores, furniture and hardware merchants, cobblers, etc., also come under this order, but instructions issued to date do not make any provision for cigar stands and soda fountains.

Following Chancellor Francis Fentress' opinion, which dissolved the injunction the theater managers had obtained and which prevented the police from closing these shows, the mayor proceeded to make final arrangements for carrying out the wishes of the court. Plans formulated two weeks ago were intended to be carried out in such a manner that the managers would be arrested and given the privilege of carrying the case to a higher court on appeal. This ruling was to have served as a guide for future action on the Sunday show question, which has created so much agitation recently. However, a misunderstanding occurred and plans were not carried out. No arrests have been made thus far, so far as the last outbreak is concerned.

Knowing that his job will be in danger and that he can be ousted at the hands of the taxpayers if he fails to comply with the law, the mayor has been firm in his latest orders to the police department. "Close the town," is what he said, and both Police Inspector Hayes and Chief Quinlan have signified their intention of carrying out the mayor's orders in every particular.

Houses Must Stay Closed.

Contrary to the custom of the past, the amusement houses will not be permitted to reopen after the managers have been once arrested and have posted a forfeit, according to Inspector Hayes. "That merely is a convenient method for evading the law," said Hayes. "If the law says that they shall close, close they must. Our orders from the mayor are to keep the theaters shut, and we will do it."

When Chancellor Fentress dissolved the amusement men's injunction against the police, it threw the department back on the original orders issued by Mayor Litty several weeks ago. But the mayor had those orders retyped, and included stores, after a petition from retail clerks and small merchants had been received by him Saturday. It asked that all small stores be kept closed Sundays.

Knickerbocker Has Big Week.

Nashville, Tenn.—Manager Wassman of the Knickerbocker had a big week beginning September 24, when he brought a 50-piece band to this theater, to be used in connection with a feature picture starring George Walsh, "The Yankee Way." Another unique feature of the engagement was municipal election night, which came toward the middle of the week. It was practically the only place in town where seats could be had to get the election returns and it made a big hit, especially with the ladies. Admission was raised to twenty-five cents during the engagement of the band.

More Chattanooga Historical Films.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Col. Lewis T. Ginger, of Los Angeles, recently came to this city for the purpose of making arrangements for more Chattanooga films. The historic battlefields of this section will be recorded, including a number of stories on the subject of Indian uprisings following the Civil War. Commercial scenes will also be made, and it is reported that a big production, requiring the services of several hundred actors, will be staged in this city within a short time, and will be placed on film circuits over the country as a national feature.

More Princess Patriotism.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Princess theater has long been conspicuous for its part in patriotic matters, especially when it comes to helping the fighting men along. A short time ago Manager Harry Sudekum donated half the box office receipts for one day to the national soldiers' Library Campaign Fund. Following that up he also contributed half a day's receipts to the Tobacco Fund, now being raised for the men in France. Whenever there is a movement of patriotism on foot, Manager Sudekum can be depended on as being one of the first contributors and supporters of the cause.

Lincoln Theater Adds Vaudeville.

Nashville, Tenn.—It has been decided by the Quality Amusement Company, operating the Lincoln theater for negroes under the new management, to add vaudeville to its moving picture program, which has been prevailing thus far since reopening the house. It is specifically announced, however, that under no circumstances will the pictures be removed, and that high-class films will continue to hold the boards as a leading inducement to the patrons. The Lincoln is located on Cedar street.

War Pictures and Lecture.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—The Lookout theater, at Dyer Field, recently booked "The Eleven Countries at War," a war feature, which was shown under the personal supervision of Count de Besa, lecturer, traveler and war correspondent. The pictures have the endorsement of commanding officers at West Point and other military establishments over the country. The picture runs two hours, being 6,500 feet in length.

Free Pictures to Soldiers.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Feature moving pictures are being shown three times a week at every Y. M. C. A. shack in Chickamauga Park, being free to the soldiers encamped there. The pictures are often accompanied by lectures, and are of such a nature as will tend to elevate the standard of morals at the camp.

Cincinnati News Letter.

From Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati.

McMahan & Jackson Offices Moved.

CINCINNATI, O.—By something of a coincidence, McMahan & Jackson, well-known film men and exhibitors, who are constructing a big theater on Sixth street, have been compelled to move their offices from 18 East Sixth street, where they have been located for some time, to 23 Opera place, on account of the early wrecking of the building to make room for the new Palace theater to be built at Sixth street and Lodge alley. The move was made recently, and the firm has thus secured quarters in the heart of the theatrical district, where it will probably be permanently located. In the meantime, work on the new McMahan & Jackson theater is going on rapidly. A name for the house has not yet been obtained, and will not be until the close of the contest now on for that purpose, in which thousands of names have been submitted.

Musicians and Theaters Get Togeter.

Cincinnati, O.—What threatened to be a serious controversy between the union musicians of the city and the managers of the theaters employing orchestras has been amicably settled, although the de tails of the agreement have not been ma public. The men employed at the Gra the Lyric and the Keith theaters d manded a guarantee of a thirty-week se son, with the right on their part to d termine how many men should be e ployed in each orchestra. This was at fi refused by the managers, and a stri seemed imminent, to usher in the ne theatrical season. However, the setti ment referred to has disposed of the di ficulty.

Usher Wins Praise by Sensible Actio

Cincinnati, O.—Service of an unusu sort, which theater employees should especially well equipped to render to the patrons, caused the arrest of an expe pickpocket a few days ago at the Stra One of the ushers at the front of the hou observed a palpable case of "wedging and without waiting for further acti called two patrolmen, who arrested a m on whom was found a pocketbook sa to belong to the patron who was the vi tim of the "wedge" game. The pickpock was taken to the station for charges be lodged against him. The usher r ceived many compliments on his qui and intelligent work.

Uses Films to Brighten Dark Nights.

Ohio Censor Board Makes Yearly Report

Number of Reels Passed On Is 10,191—Amount Received is $29,207—Reels Rejected Are 291—Eliminations Made From 7,918 Reels.

From M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, O.—Reports of the Ohio Board of Censors, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, have been made and they contain some very interesting information.

The total number of reels censored were 29,207, meaning that $29,207 was the revenue paid by film distributors of Ohio during that year for censoring.

The number of reels approved was 28,716, while 291 were rejected. Eliminations were ordered in 7,918 reels.

The board actually viewed 10,191 reels, which indicates that an average of three prints of each subject was released in Ohio during that year. This does not mean, however, that three prints of each subject was actually released. Many films had only one print and many had more than three prints. For instance, the Mutual had thirteen prints of their Chaplin pictures censored.

The board is well up in their work, it being a rule that no pictures be left over till the following day unless the distributor is satisfied to have it so. At one time the board was behind in the work but this was remedied.

Nate Fleisher, City Salesman for Perfection.

Cleveland, O.—Nate Fleisher, who has been representative for Triangle in Cleveland since coming to the city from Michigan and who has made a host of friends here by his clean-cut business methods and dependability, has been chosen as Cleveland salesman for the local office of Perfection Pictures, better known as the K-E-S-E, Inc. Nate feels that he will do as well if not better than he did with the Triangle.

Equipment Company Reorganized.

Columbus, O.—The Columbus Theater Equipment Company has been reorganized and is now known as the Dwyer Brothers & Co. Leo Dwyer is president and general manager; C. C. Walcutt, vice-president; George C. Merring, secretary and treasurer; Fred. P. Dwyer, sales manager.

The company has acquired the Simplex agency and plans to enlarge its business throughout Central and Southern Ohio.

Trouble in Akron with Operators' Union.

Akron, O.—The trouble between the exhibitors and operators of Akron over the formation of a union and demand for a wage scale, after having been reported amicably settled, has developed into a regular fight. Union operators were locked out at the Ideal, Orpheum, Waldorf, Empress and Dreamland and a boycott was immediately started.

The operators ask for $25 per week per man for 7 hours a day, in theaters which have two shifts totalling 14 hours and $21.20 for evening shows with one matinee. The manager of the Ideal claimed it would increase his operating expenses $5.20 per week and that he could not stand the raise.

The Akron Screen Club, recently organized, is carrying on the fight for the exhibitors.

E. J. Schmidt Now Heads Local Victor.

Cleveland, O.—Max Schachtel, manager of the Victor Film Service, handling the Universal program in Cleveland and Northern Ohio, tendered his resignation last week.

He intends to take a rest of a few weeks and after that will engage in some other enterprise. Mr. Schachtel was with the Victor for about five years and has a large following among the exhibitors of this section.

He is succeeded by E. J. Schmidt, formerly manager of the "Where Are My Children?" and "Idle Wives" companies in Ohio and Indiana. Mr. Schmidt came to this territory from Buffalo several years ago and is well known throughout the state.

Louis H. Becht Plans a New Theater.

Cleveland, O.—Louis H. Becht, one of the pioneer picture men of Cleveland, has sold his entire interests in the new Mall theater to his associates, Messrs. Laronge, Strong and Desberg.

Mr. Becht operated downtown shows for over ten years, and after a trip to California he will erect a big theater in Lakewood, suburb of Cleveland, according to his present plans.

The policy of the Mall will remain the same, Thomas Carroll, assistant manager, succeeding Mr. Becht as manager.

J. M. Cummings Becomes G. F. Manager.

Cleveland, O.—J. E. Flynn has resigned as manager of the Cleveland branch of the General Film Company, to accept a position with Goldwyn and left Sept. 29. He had been with the General for two and a half years here and in Western territory and gained a fine reputation for himself. His new position with Goldwyn will be working out of New York, for the present, as a special representative.

He is succeeded at the Cleveland office by J. M. Cummings, from New York.

E. A. McAuliffe Comes Back.

Cleveland, O.—E. A. McAuliffe has been transferred from the Fox Cincinnati office to the Cleveland branch. Mr. McAuliffe used to be in Cleveland and naturally is glad to be back in the Forest City, where he is being welcomed by his old friends.

Fremont, O.—Carl Miller, owner of two theaters in Fremont, O., was in Cleveland last week and made the startling announcement that that city of nearly 20,000 had never been shown a Fairbanks picture. He booked the Triangle reissues and says, gol darnit, if the natives like him they'll get more.

Jerry Ruck Handling Butterflies.

Toronto, Ont.—Jerry Ruck, the Canadian Universal's gold prize salesman, has been put on Butterfly Features for the Western Ontario territory.

Three Straight U. Features.

Toronto, Ont.—The Hippodrome, Shea's big Toronto theater, has been presenting a goodly number of Universal features. Manager McArdle made it three straight with "Mother O' Mine," "Come Through" and "Straight Shooting," the latter being the picture attraction during the week of October 1. "Come Through" came across well because Herbert Rawlinson is good and because Herbert Rawlinson is an Ontario product, having been a resident of St. Mary's since young boyhood.

Big Receipts from "Intolerance."

Toronto, Ont.—The receipts during the recent eighteen-day run of "Intolerance" at Massey hall, Toronto, totalled $27,000, an average of $1,500 per day. Two performances were given daily. After the Toronto engagement, which was the second extended run for this attraction, Manager William Cranston showed the feature in a number of Eastern Ontario centres simultaneously with local fall fairs.

Suit Over "First Class Theater" Clause

Atlanta's Forsyth Theater Lease Has Clause that Compels It to Cater to the Best People—It Must Now Be Proved That Films Fill That Bill.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Avenue, Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, GA.—A legal point has risen as to whether a motion picture theater is a "first class theater catering to the best class of people." The recent conversion of the Forsyth theater, which has been a vaudeville house since its first opening, into the home of "feature films," brought about the suit.

Asa. G. Candler, Inc., Wednesday filed a petition for an injunction in Judge Ball's division of the Fulton County Superior Court to restrain the Georgia Theater Company and the Amusements Operating Corporation from exhibiting moving pictures in the Forsyth theater. The house was opened Monday, October 1, with a big picture production featuring Annette Kellermann.

Declines to Grant Injunction.

Judge Bell declined to grant a temporary injunction, which would have stopped the pictures and closed the house pending the final hearing, but set the case for October 20, when the theater directors must show that motion pictures are "a first class theater" attraction within the meaning of the lease.

The Candler corporation purchased the Forsyth building some years ago from the Ansley Realty Corp. The theater was built for and leased to Ben Kahn, who formerly managed the old Orpheum theater on Marietta street, and introduced the first good vaudeville to Atlanta.

The original lessor and lessee had surrendered their interests in the property and management, but the terms of the original lease, in the opinion of the property owner, still holds. As shown in the petition, the lease specifies that "Said Kahn" also agrees at all times within the period of its lease or any of its renewals to maintain and conduct it as a first-class theater, catering to the best class of people.

Asa G. Candler, Inc., Fears Pictures.

In its petition Asa G. Candler, Inc., sets forth that: A motion picture house is not a first-class theater, and does not cater to the best class of people, as contemplated in this lease. It is further contended that the exhibition of pictures as the general policy of the house is calculated to destroy the reputation and good will of the property and damage to its owners.

The rental of the theater is set forth as $9,100 a year, the lease running from March, 1915, to March, 1920. The plaintiffs ask that, in case an injunction is not granted the court declare the lease void for breach of contract, and turn over to Asa G. Candler, Inc., the sum of $7,500 now held in the Central Bank and Trust Corporation (Mr. Candler's Bank) as a cash bond for carrying out said contract.

Pictures Are First-Class Attraction.

Attorneys representing the Jake Wells interests said Wednesday afternoon they would defend the suit on the ground that motion pictures are a first-class theatrical attraction, that the best class of citizens attend them habitually, and that many of the most famous theaters of New York and other cities have been converted into moving picture houses.

Savannah, Ga.—The Boy Scout picture, "Be Prepared," which is being filmed in Savannah, Ga., will show the advantages and influences of scout life. Included in the picture are Savannah boys and girls up to the age of 17 years.

The reason for filming the picture in Savannah, according to C. M. Morrison, director of the Juvenile Film Corporation of New York, is the city's favorable climate and its ideal scenery.

The story "Be Prepared" opens with a benefit patriotic lawn party given for the Boy Scouts, in which about 150 children take part. This is followed by a parade in which the scouts go to camp and some of the girls become Red Cross nurses' aides. Some of the other girls prepare to make a visit at the camp and two are captured by bandits. The bandits have already captured two children from a plantation and one of the children makes his escape and takes the news to the camp. The scouts come to get the girls and a battle follows between the scouts and the bandits, in which the scouts are victorious. The picture ends with a sentimental scene.

The scenes for the picture are centered around some of Savannah's best homes.

The picture will be three thousand feet long and will be shown in Savannah about October 1. It is to be exhibited throughout the country.

Need Sunday Shows Near Camp.

Augusta, Ga.—Augusta is in the midst of a fight for Sunday moving pictures with advocates and opposers of the movement arguing. At a recent meeting of City Council an ordinance was passed in favor of allowing the moving picture theaters to open on Sunday, but after deliberation the councilmanic body decided to hold up the ordinance and leave the matter to the Finance Committee, empowering it with authority to act. Feeling is running high among various religious organizations, ministers and church workers. It is understood that the ministers will oppose the innovation, having already begun their opposition through local newspapers.

The Sunday moving picture proposition was broached principally because numbers of militia soldiers are encamped here at Camp Hancock and are having difficulty in passing their Sundays, the day being a full holiday.

Detroit, Mich.—A. S. Hyman, of the Dawn Masterplay Co., 204 Owen building, Detroit, says he has more bookings right now on "Redemption" than he can handle, and that, furthermore, most of his bookings are for two days and up. Mr. Hyman expects soon to announce the acquisition of another big feature for the state of Michigan.

Charles H. Miles Believes in Advertising.

Detroit, Mich.—A man who is making old-time managers and exhibitors "sit up and take notice" is Charles H. Miles, lessee of the Regent and Orpheum theaters. With his combination policy of big features and vaudeville for the one admission fee, he is making both theaters show enormous profits each week. Charles H. Miles is a great believer in advertising and publicity, and he says it's one of the principal essentials in show business. In fact, he says it's the most vital thing for the success of any amusement enterprise. Although the Regent theater is three miles from the center of town, he uses more newspaper display space than any other theater, and he billboards the town in all sections and in all the nearby communities so that no matter where you go in and around Detroit you'll find 24-sheets which call your attention to Pictures and Vaudeville at the Regent."

Charles H. Miles started as a farmer's boy in Pennsylvania. His first amusement venture was in the little town of Hibbing, Minnesota, where for an old debt he took over hotel and theater combined. The theater was in a run-down condition, but by modern show methods the place soon became a money-maker for its new owner. Mr. Miles began to take greater interest in theatricals and took a trip to St. Paul. Here he found a big theater that was not paying and was on the market at a ridiculously low price. He leased the property, made arrangements for vaudeville bookings with an agency in Chicago and was quickly on the road to success. It was not long before the name of Miles became associated in the minds of the theatrical profession with good amusements.

Mr. Miles projected and built a new theater in St. Paul and another in Minneapolis. Then he went to other cities, among them Detroit, where he started the Miles theater, still in operation, playing pictures and vaudeville. His next theater was in Cleveland, which he operates on a similar plan as the Orpheum and Regent theaters, which he has in Detroit. It was three years ago that he took over the Regent, the latter being Detroit's largest theater, with nearly 3,500 capacity. He also has the Grand theater, in Cleveland, which he took over this season, which will be enlarged and a combination policy offered similar to that at his Detroit houses. He believes the Regent, Detroit, will be the best payer financially for the reason that it has the capacity. It is the contention of Mr. Miles that you must have capacity to make money in the amusement business, so that your big advertising and publicity can bear the proper results.

Washington Books George Ade Fables.

Detroit, Mich.—The Washington theater, Detroit, having just completed running all of the two-reel O. Henry stories, has booked the complete series of George Ade through General Film.

Find More Patrons at Increased Prices

Louisville Theaters Continue to Have Better Filled Houses at the Newly Increased Rates—Problem of House Without Near Competitors.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Many moving picture exhibitors in Kentucky, following the evample of theaters all over the country, are increasing the price of admission. Owing to the advancement in the price of film service and the general increase in general cost of operating the theaters, this course was necessary.

With nearly every working man in the country making more money that he ever did before, the patrons of theaters are very willing to pay a bigger price to see the high-class kind of entertainment that most theaters are showing. The leading houses of Louisville have even registered an increased attendance since the prices were raised to 15 cents and 20 cents.

Many of the small town theaters have increased their prices of admission from 5 cents and 10 cents to 10 cents and 15 cents. It is very easy for them to get this amount, especially the towns, which have only one theater, because in most cases the population is not large enough to support a competitive show, while the people are willing to pay the price to have a moving picture theater.

With every branch of trade in this vicinity doing a larger business than ever before and with the number of people to be entertained, increasing in proportion, the managers of the various theaters have booked the best features obtainable and the winter season indeed presents a pleasant outlook.

Theaters Aid Tobacco Fund.

Louisville, Ky.—The two local B. F. Keith photo-play theaters, the Mary Anderson and the Strand, are co-operating with two of the local newspapers in the Soldiers' Tobacco Campaign. In each theater a glass bowl, securely padlocked, and with an opening to permit the dropping in of money, tobacco, cigars, cigarettes or tobacco twists is set on a table decorated with the national colors and surrounded by signs calling attention of patrons to the plan to make our boys in France happy. The tobacco feature is a "stunt" of the theaters themselves and already enough "smokes" have been dropped in to fill a large box. Lantern slides are also shown on the screen, calling attention to the fund.

Former Film Man Indicted.

Louisville, Ky.—Three indictments have been returned against Percy L. Smith, former manager of the Mutual Film Corporation's branch office in this city. One of the indictments charges Smith with embezzeling funds of the corporation amounting to $1,225.39 during 1916 and part of 1917. The other two indictments charge Smith with uttering forged instruments, or in other words with indorsing three checks and cashing them at the Hotel Henry Watterson.

Lee Goldberg Announces Big Films.

Louisville, Ky.—Lee Goldburg, president of the Big Features Rights Corporation, has announced that his organization will have control of the productions issued in Kentucky and Tennessee by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. These productions will include the new "Petrova" and "Chaplin" pictures, the first of which will soon be released. Mr. Goldberg has booked "The Whip," featuring Irving Cummings. This is a picture which should appeal to the great number of racing enthusiasts, who are in Louisville for the fall races.

Coal Shortage Closes Picture Shows.

Mt. Sterling, Ky.—The seriousness of the coal shortage was demonstrated in this locality recently when the electric lights and electric service was cut off, causing the picture shows to close and give return tickets to large audiences and miss entirely one performance. The coal shortage was so great that to conserve the supply the switch was pulled on the outlying districts served from the Lexington, Ky., plant. This occurrence has an added touch of gravity when it is considered that Mt. Sterling is but a short distance from the eastern Kentucky coal fields.

Notes of Interest to the Trade.

Nicholasville, Ky.—W. C. Jackson, manager of the Savoy theater, who has for several Sundays operated his moving picture show, has acceded to the wishes of the church-going people and will not operate any more on Sunday, although he had the majority of the council and, as he believed, was within his legal rights in opening his place of amusement on that day.

Hartford, Ky.—The Star theater recently gave free admission to the drafted men who were called into immediate service. This is a patriotic act that is being generally observed all over the country.

Louisville, Ky.—The Casino Theater Company changed hands Oct. 1. In the future it will be conducted under the management of M. Switow, who also owns the Shawnee and Highland Park theaters.

Louisville, Ky.—The nation-wide food conservation campaign is being conducted locally by a war committee, headed by Lee Goldberg and F. M. Sackett. All of the local theater managers have proffered their aid in advertising the campaign. Slides and pictures will be shown at the various theaters and time will be given between shows for short talks by men appointed by the committee.

Louisville, Ky.—Under the caption, "Have you been talked about," the management of the Mary Anderson theater has been advertising the photoplay, "Babbling Tongues." The clever wording caught and held the interest of more readers than the average announcement. The recent showing of "The Deemster" at the above mentioned theater proved to be a record breaker as far as drawing big crowds is concerned and made a deep impression upon the great number of people who saw it. As an added feature and in conjunction with the picture Miss Norma Gregg, a musical comedy star, sang several popular songs.

Coal Becoming the Big Factor in Indiana

Many Theater Managers Have to Face the Possibility of Scant Coal Supply—Small Capacity of Bins in Some Theaters a Factor.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—When Kin Hubbard, in his Abe Martin sayings in the Indianapolis News a few nights ago, said: "Some folks don't care just so th' nickel theaters have got their coal in," he paid a tribute to the popularity of the motion picture theaters, but no doubt had no idea of the trouble the majority of the Indianapolis exhibitors are having in "getting their coal in."

In fact, the coal situation in Indianapolis at the present time is one of greatest interest to the exhibitors. A number of the local moving picture theaters rent their heat and others furnish it themselves. The former have been notified of an increase in rates because of the increased cost of coal, and the latter are having considerable trouble in getting coal.

The Indianapolis coal market just now is face to face with the fact that the demand this year is more than likely to be in excess of the supply, and the exhibitors realize the fact that if they don't get a move on some of them are going to be left without a full supply. The cool weather during the last week has awakened them to this fact and most of them have proceeded to get busy.

The one important thing confronting this section of the country at present is the labor situation. It is known that the mines in this territory have been losing men steadily, first, to the army; second, to the cantonments, and third, to the munition plants and railroad shops. Those who remain are already so well paid that they have no disposition to work long or hard, and if anything are demanding more pay.

Taking everything in consideration, the city and county is in a desperate situation for coal, without any relief in sight. All of which means that when coal weather and the big demand comes, the price of coal is likely to go out of sight. Few theaters in the city have storage capacities for large quantities, thus giving the managers of these houses a serious problem to think about.

Ready to Start on Terre Haute Theater.

Terre Haute, Ind.—Word was received Tuesday from F. H. Gruneberg, president of the Bankers and Merchants Theater Company, who is in Chicago, that the plans and specifications for the new Terre Haute theater, to be built at Eighth street and Wabash avenue, have been completed. He said bids for the work will be asked by October 15, and work on the theater started at once.

Lyric at Newcastle Reopens.

Newcastle, Ind.—The Lyric theater, on North Main street, closed for several weeks, will reopen its doors next Saturday, October 6. The management of the Lyric has announced that hereafter the theater will make a specialty of comedies. Programs will be changed daily and the admission price will remain at 5 cents.

Film Shows Making of Shells.

Indianapolis, Ind.—A three-reel motion picture, obtained by the Indianapolis branch of the National Metal Trades Association and the Associated Employers of Indianapolis, through Machinery, a New York trade paper, was displayed Thursday evening in the auditorium of the Odd Fellows building and attracted a large crowd. The picture showed the method of manufacture of shells and other munitions of war now being made in this country.

Marion Will Soon See New Theater.

Marion, Ind.—Marion's leading business and professional men have joined hands and are preparing to erect a beautiful new motion picture and vaudeville theater on the site of the old A. M. E. church on Fifth street, between Washington and Boots streets. Work on the new building will be started in a few days, according to an announcement made this week.

The company that is to build the new house, which is known as the Royal-Grand Theater Company, filed incorporation papers with the secretary of state last week, announcing its intention of engaging in the motion picture business. The capital stock is announced at $150,000. The directors are George D. Lindsay, editor of the Marion Chronicle; James P. Rushby, superintendent of the Osborn Paper Company; Lewis O. Poe, a farmer; Robert Kiley, a banker; Isadore Fiebleman, a director of the Circle theater at Indianapolis; Frank Solvon, an Indianapolis hotel proprietor, and Miss Dolly Spurr, present manager of the Royal-Grand theater.

The theater will be built along the latest lines of theater construction—modern in every respect, absolutely fireproof; will have a balcony and will contain the very finest of upholstered chairs. It will have a rest room with all the modern conveniences and will be handsomely decorated throughout. A five-piece orchestra will be one of the features of the daily program.

Miss Dolly Spurr, the popular and successful manager of the Royal-Grand theater, will have full charge of the operation of the new theater.

Will Closing Sunday Shows Help Churches?

Exhibitor in Owosso, Mich., Says He Would Be Satisfied to Close on Sabbath if He Were Convinced of Its Real Value.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

OWOSSO, MICH.—Manager Fred Patterson of the Lincoln theater does not think that closing of moving picture theaters on Sunday will send all the photoplay devotees scurrying to the churches. "If I was convinced that out of every two hundred persons who now attend Sunday theaters, ten would go to church if the shows were closed, and if you could tell me what the other 190 were going to do, I would be satisfied," he told a group, including many ministers who were considering the Sunday closing question.

A petition bearing the signatures of 1,099 persons mostly women has been presented to the city commission. E. S. Brewer of the Strand theater does not believe this petition is a true guide to the wishes of Owosso citizens and declares that he would like to see a referendum on the question.

Even if these petitions were granted by the city commission they could do little toward stopping a Sunday show. The only action the city could take according to City Attorney Miner would be to start civil suits against the exhibitors, and then only $10 could be collected from the owners of the shows. In addition, however, it could bring suits against each and every person who attends the shows, but the folly of such procedure is apparent.

The intolerance of some of the prime movers against the Sunday shows is evidenced by Mrs. T. B. McGee, wife of a local minister, declaring that fruit stores, cigar stores and in fact everything should be closed on Sundays.

A natural result of an issue of this kind is the suggestion of municipal censorship and this was proposed at the meeting.

Michigan Theater Notes.

Tecumseh, Mich.—Faron S. Anderson has sold the New Royal theater to H. S. Waring, who will conduct it, retaining Wesley Clark, who has been associated with Anderson in the operation of the house. A number of changes will be made in the interior and it will be redecorated throughout.

Houghton, Mich.—A new moving picture theater, to cost $50,000, will be erected here by local business men, it is announced. The plans which have been drawn call for a house seating 1,000 persons. The front of the building will be devoted to an ice-cream parlor and tea-room, while the basement will be occupied by a billiard hall.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—The Community theater at Howard City, the Star at Rockford, the Happy Hour at Sparta and the Cozy at Ludington have booked the Grand Rapids Herald Pictorial News which is being put out by a local newspaper.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—The Majestic Gardens entertained all the drafted men at a showing of Mary Pickford in "The Little American."

Present Day's Great Need for Film Shows

La Crosse Tribune Gives a Few Thoughts on the Benefit and Necessity of Picture Shows to the Average Man—Especially True Today.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

LA CROSSE, WIS.—In these days when unseeing editors of small newspapers are urging the cessation of photoplay attendance as a patriotic duty it is a relief to find papers of such standing as the La Crosse Tribune finding the moving picture a necessity. The editor went out, saw a good film and returned to write the following:

"Many sober-minded citizens regard the 'movies' as sheer waste. In terms of beef and bread they seem unproductive, but at a time when the world's power is measured in terms of human efficiency it is probable that they bring much granum to the children. The abstract proposition that men and women make money by idling their time in picture houses may be absurd, but we may fetch it into the realm of definite fact by reading the stethescope of the family physician. The man and woman of today are going through life 'on high,' and the pace kills. He who stands the clip must have diversion to relieve the tension. It must be something to absorb the mind to the exclusion of even sub-conscious business worry, something to take the man out of himself and give complete nerve relaxation. Air and exercise are indispensable, but the tired brain must have something more interesting that monopolizes and excludes.

"We have in mind nothing so cheap, so accessible as the 'movies,' to afford relief from the wearing process that accompanies hours on end of mental strain. And who shall say that the rested and refreshed intellect does not go back to work with its earning capacity measurably enhanced! Indeed, this editorial, for example! Note the free-swinging phraseology, the elegance and conclusive logic of one who has just parted with Douglas Fairbanks and William Farnum."

Two Film Men Will Help Censor.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Henry Trinz, of the Columbia theater, and Ernest Langenmack, of the Colonial theater, have been named by Mayor Coan as members of the Citizen's Commission on Motion Pictures as the local board of censorship is known. They were recommended by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association. They succeed Judge N. M. Neelson, who is too busy with draft board duties to censor pictures, and Jacob S. Grauman, who resigned to go into the film business.

Wisconsin Theater Jottings.

Sturgeon Bay, Wis.—Howard Lavassor, who was connected with the Crystal theater during the time it was operated by Harvey Stock, has leased the building and the equipment and will conduct it as a feature photoplay house. The theater, which formerly was operated by Arthur Ball, was closed several months ago.

Merrill, Wis.—The Grand recently had a Family night, when parents and all their children under twenty-one years of age were admitted for a single twenty-five-cent fee.

Oshkosh, Wis.—The Colonial theater, which formerly was devoted to theatrical attractions, has opened as a moving picture house, under the management of Harry Chappell, who also operates the Palace theater.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Albert E. Schaenleber, who conducts a moving picture theater at 2340 Vliet street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The Alhambra theater has a number of new auto boxes in which smoking is permitted. They were given a trial by members of the Milwaukee Film Men's Association, who were the guests of Manager George Fischer at a showing of Elsie Ferguson in "Barbary Sheep." Manager Fischer also did a kindly act when he had as his guests at a show sixty-five youngsters, members of a class for defective children.

Arcadia, Wis.—Clarence Barlow is now sole owner of the Unique theater, having purchased that house.

Rio, Wis.—W. F. Bridges has purchased the half interest of Wilkie Collins in the Princess theater.

Marinette, Wis.—The Ascher theater was closed for a week for redecorating. When it reopened it was under the name of the Strand.

Superior, Wis.—Two reels of moving pictures will be used every Sunday evening by Rev. H. F. Ferry, pastor of the First Presbyterian church. His sermon will be appropriate to the films. One of the first subjects shown was "A Concrete Romance."

Wilwaukee, Wis.—The Wisconsin State Fire Prevention Association is sponsoring a moving picture, "An Unbeliever Convinced," which is spreading the propaganda of fire prevention. The picture was shown at the Princess theater in this city.

Prairie State News.

Dallas Theaters Go Up When Block Burns

Queen and Newport Theaters Gutted on September 27—Blaze Starts in a Grocery Store and Loss Amounts to Thousands.

By Douglas Hawley, The Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, TEX.—For the second time within a year E. H. Hulsey, of the Hulsey chain of theaters in Texas, has suffered loss by fire through his theater building proved itself absolutely fireproof, and is to rise, like the Phoenix of old, more beautiful than ever from its charred though indestructible walls. On the night of September 26—or rather early morning of September 27—fire completely gutted the Queen theater, a Hulsey house, and the Newport theater, the latter conducted by J. D. Wheelan. The blaze started in the rear of a big retail grocery shop in the same block, and entailed a loss of about $200,000, of which Hulsey sustained $60,000 and Wheelan $25,000. Hart, in "The Gun Fighter," had been shown the night before at the Newport. It was this same picture which was being shown at the Old Mill—another Hulsey theater—when it was gutted by fire earlier in the year.

The Queen fire broke out after 2 a. m., hence there was no danger to theater patrons. Staunch fire walls protected the Queen building thoroughly, the loss coming as the result of the blaze jumping over roofs and burning through. The handsome organ was completely ruined, as well as the magnificent mural decorations, seats and other interior finishings. A report by the city fire marshal was highly complimentary to the Queen management, declaring that had the fire come during the progress of a performance, the audience would have been subject to no danger, thanks to its fireproof construction.

Business in South Texas Looks Bright.

Beaumont, Tex.—Hershel Barr of the People's theater, Beaumont, called on Dallas distributing houses during the last week, and reported conditions in South Texas "looking up." The rice crop has begun to move, and high prices are being paid for the first fruits of the field. Everybody's in an optimistic mood, he declares.

Calvert, Tex.—Henry Oscar, of the Queen theater, Calvert, Tex., was another South Texas manager in Dallas during the week, reporting satisfactory business.

Sweetwater, Tex.—Mr. Murphy of the Sweetwater theater, Sweetwater, Tex., declares his west Texas section isn't suffering from drouth, and that everything looks good.

Paris, Tex.—C. J. Mussulman, of the Grand theater, Paris, called during the last week, reporting business good, and that he was taking a short vacation for the first time in many months.

Woman Operator Not Eligible to Union.

Dallas, Tex.—The motion picture operators' union won't have Miss Louise Millett, Frenchwoman, as a member—at least not yet. Formal application was made by the young woman, who recently came to this country from her La Belle France, to the local union. She stood her local technical examination, and everything looked all right. But the international officers of the union wouldn't stand for it. The local union has been advised that she was not eligible, because she hadn't served the required apprenticeship. The young woman received her primary training in her native country.

Bess Whitehead's Film Articles Please.

Dallas, Tex.—Lately [illegible] treated to some sure enough [illegible] of moving picture stars. Lots and lots of "stuff" has been and is written about the members of the movie firmament, and lots and lots of it is read. But there's something different about reading matter written about movie people by a person whom you know personally. Bess L. Whitehead, connected with the Hulsey theaters in Texas spent several weeks in California during the summer. She is a capable writer, and is now giving in a local paper some of her personal impressions of the people she's seen. The articles are proving highly popular.

Rex Amusements to Build Fine Theater.

Grand Junction, Colo.—Owners of the Majestic theater and Manager Charles Decker made announcement of a new house to be built on the site of the Majestic. Leases have been signed and work of construction will begin early in winter. Messrs. W. H. Swanson and H. T. Nolan came to Grand Junction on Sept. 24 and completed arrangements for a new theater that will cost approximately $100,000 and will seat 1,400 persons in the most comfortable chairs ever brought into the section. The building may be four stories in height, and it is planned to have a private ballroom on one of the floors for private and invitation dances. The front design is said to resemble that of the Rialto and Strand theaters in Denver.

F. L. Williams Will Cover Kansas for Jewel.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The Jewell Productions announces that F. L. Williams will cover the Kansas territory for the company. He was formerly with the Wichita Film and Supply Company. Other additions to the force of the new office are Miss Mildred Gay, as bookkeeper, and Earl F. Wynn, in the poster and shipping department. This office announces that "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" will open at the Columbia theater in Kansas City Oct. 14 at an admission price of 25 cents. This picture will be followed by "Come Through." These pictures, in addition to "Pay Me" and "The Sirens of the Sea," have been passed by the Kansas State Board of Review and the local censor board. The local office has been finished and will be open to the public Oct. 1.

W. C. Ansell Joins Goldwyn Sales Forces.

Kansas City, Mo.—W. C. Ansell has been added to the sales force of the Goldwyn pictures office. He was formerly with the Art Drama Co. and also with the World Film. He has had considerable experience as an exhibitor in this territory. He takes his new position Oct. 1 and will work in a Kansas territory.

A Most Extensive Follow-Up Campaign

Kansas City, Mo.—The Kansas City Feature Film Company will soon begin a most extensive advertising campaign. The plans for this are to send 2,900 mailings to the exhibitors in this territory, and each will receive one every day for one month. C. L. Matson, advertising manager of the company, has arranged for a small pamphlet covering all of the features of the company's work to be placed in the hands of every exhibitor in this territory regardless of whether he is a Paramount Art Craft exhibitor or not.

Guy R. Ainsworth Will Represent Metro.

Kansas City, Mo.—Guy R. Ainsworth has been made Missouri representative for Metro Pictures. He held a similar position in Boston, Mass.

Newman and Blawitz Buy Theater.

Moberly, Mo.—Frank Newman, owner of the Royal and Regent theaters, has bought the Fourth Street theater at Moberly, Mo., in partnership with J. H. Blawitz, formerly traveling salesman for the Paramount Company. A lease for ten years on the theater has been obtained. The new owners take charge Oct. 1. $3,500 will be spent in improving the theater, most of which will be spent on the installation of a new box office, a ladies' rest room and toilet.

Exchange and Business Newslets.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Universal Film Supply Company announces that bookings on the serial, "The Red Ace," have been obtained for one hundred and ten days. This end of the work of the local Universal office is being handled by Harry H. Young.

Kansas City, Mo.—L. B. Douglass, publicity manager for the Universal, has arranged a four-page herald for the use of the exhibitors in this territory. He has already sold 75,000 of these heralds to seventy-five or eighty houses in this territory. These heralds contain the programs of the theaters, their policy and suggestions by the management, in addition to coming announcements of serials, Butterfly features and other Universal pictures. These heralds are designed especially for the exhibitor, and the Universal advertising is practically negligible in comparison with that of the exhibitor.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Kansas City Bluebird office announces that contracts were received last week from the following theaters for the Century Comedies, featuring Alice Howe: The Strand, Salina, Kan.; the Electric, Emporia, Kan.; the Royal, Newton, Kan.; the Golden Bell, Ellsworth, Kan.; the Empire, Chillocothe, Mo., and the Star, Warrenburg, Mo.

Minneapolis Film News Items Last Week

Benjamin Judell Announces That First National Exhibitors Circuit Films for Near-By States Will Be Released Through Universal.

By John L. Johnston, 704 Film Exchange Bldg., Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Benjamin Judell has announced that in the future all of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit films, including Chaplin's and Petrova's, will be released through the Minneapolis-Universal offices instead of through the Saxe exchange. Mr. Judell has taken over the booking sheet on "On Trial" from the Saxe exchange and is preparing for forthcoming Petrova releases through the Circuit. Mr. Judell has secured George Fosdick, former Vitagraph booker, to officiate in a like capacity for the Universal and Harry Hellwig, former booker, has been sent out to patrol a road beat. Mr. Judell has also announced that he will book "Purity," featuring Audrey Munson. He owns the rights to this feature for several Northwest states personally.

Movements of Local Film Men.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Reports from the local film area place stress on several changes in the ranks of film salesmen. Harry Muir, formerly with the General and Universal, has been drafted by the Standard-Art Drama's exchange and will see service in and around the Twin Cities. Mr. Ctombaugh has also enlisted Joe Gardner, former Selznick and Favorite salesman, and he will be interned in Southern Minnesota and Northern Iowa.

Jack Corbett has resigned as assistant to Manager Michalove, of the Triangle, and returned to New York for duty. F. O. Nielson, of the same exchange, is enjoying a two weeks' furlough in New York City.

Manager E. C. Davies, having completed the writing of words to a ballad entitled "Mother o' Mine," has appointed A. J. Shearer corporal of the guard for the Dakotas for the Saxe exchange.

Grenadier George W. Malone, of the Metro exchange, has returned from a two weeks' patrol of Western Wisconsin with a good financial gain for his concern.

Personal Notes of Interest.

Minneapolis, Minn.—J. George Feinberg, of the Theater Equipment, has started a business trip through the Dakotas, Iowa and Nebraska.

William Alfred Steffes, of the Minneapolis Northern theater, also of the film firm of Green & Steffes, has gone to New York to attend a meeting of the American Exhibitors' Association. Through some effective work Mr. Steffes was able to take along with him a list of prospective members that would do credit to any organization.

Members of the Northwest branch of the National League gave a dinner recently in honor of David G. Rodgers, National organizer, who began the second lap of a national organizing campaign last week.

Manager S. N. Robinson, of the Film Library & Exchange, has gone to Milwaukee to open a second branch exchange to distribute Christie comedies.

H. E. Pierce, of the Pierce exchange, has gone on a second trip through Northern Wisconsin in the interests of his productions.

Manager R. A. Botts, of the Grand theater at Carrington, N. D., has returned to his abode after several days in Minneapolis where he booked "The Barrier," "The Crisis," "The Slacker" and "The Lone Wolf."

Among Northwest Managers.

M. P. W.—Why is it I can't get a steno. for new Supreme branch exchange here? Don't think dry and blue sky laws have anthing to do with it.—Lee A. Horn.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Mary McAlister, the youngest of the Essanay stars, will appear in person at the Strand here Oct. 5 and 6 in connection with the showing of "On Trial."

Manager Calvert, of the New Garrick, began a good four days' business with Douglas Fairbanks' "Man from Painted Post," Sunday, Sept. 30.

Manager Chawles Branhan of The Strand has returned from Milwaukee. He has postponed the showing of "A Mormon Maid" one week.

Manager C. L. Peavey of the Paramount exchange has booked "A Bedroom Blunder," the first Paramount-Sennett comedy, in the Minneapolis Strand.

Owing to a fast increasing business, Manager Joe Schwartzbine of the Pathe exchange has been forced to add several people to his already large office staff. Schwartzbine reports an unusual demand for his serials and war pictures.

The Lochren Film Service has completed the making of two series of slides for the government, to boost Liberty Loan sales, and is now at work on a series of slides to boost food conservation.

While in the city last week David Gruenberg of the XL Films exchange at Great Falls, Mont., announced his engagement to Miss Peggy Bank of Minneapolis. He also secured the rights to book "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" and "Ignorance" in Montana. While here recently E. J. Frye, Mr. Gruenberg's partner, was married.

Manager Larso of the General exchange has installed a Motiograph projector in his projection room.

Manager Ralph Bradford of the Goldwyn exchange is suffering from a strained wrist, "acquired" while hauling in a six and a half-pound bass from a nearby lake last week. The fish is now being varnished.

Manager Bovyer of the Hippodrome, St. Paul, has booked "The Fighting Trail," to follow up "The Fatal Ring."

Manager Mick of The New Palace, St. Paul, is running O. Henry releases through the General.

Manager Burke of the Westcott exchange has booked "Intolerance" in the Metropolitan, a legitimate theater, for a two weeks' return engagement, beginning October 7. At the Metropolitan, St. Paul, the week of September 30, "Intolerance" enjoyed a good business at fifty to a dollar prices.

Advices from the Dakotas state that President Hartman and General Manager Hamlin of the Associated Theatres, Inc., are meeting with much success in their campaign to get their new organization started off right. North Dakota's "quota" of theaters is nearly completed, according to reports.

"The Public Be Damned," which Manager James A. Keough of The New Lyric, Minneapolis, displayed the first half of the week of September 30, was loudly praised by the Minneapolis Journal in its review section Monday, October 1.

Patriotism Plus Publicity Brings Crowds

Manager Sheridan of Des Moines Pathe Exchange Works Up Great Interests in War Films—Makes Them a Boost for "Smokes."

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES, IA.—The week of Sept. 23 the Royal theater showed the pathe pictures, "The British Tanks in Action." This might sound like dull news had it not been for the pepful initiative of L. A. Sheridan, manager of the local Pathe office. Mr. Sheridan for a couple of weeks before the showing of the "Tanks" pictures worked like a Trojan for big publicity on them and he secured it. He gave the Tribune editors and advertising men a private showing of the pictures and asked them to help out in the publicity campaign by making a big drive for the "Smokes for Our Soldiers" campaign which the Tribune is enthusiastically carrying on over the state. Messrs. Van Dyke and Hightower of the Royal theater were only too anxious to give a big part of the receipts to the "Smokes" campaign for the publicity the theater would get. So the big drive started.

For a week and a half before the 23d, the Tribune carried front page announcements of the "Tanks" pictures and in every posible way played up the pictures. On Saturday, the 15th, a private showing of the picture was given to General Plummer of the big local training camp and his staff. They were enthusiastic in their praise of the picture and their verdicts were used to further boost the picture the following week. Then Mr. Sheridan did begin to get busy. He aranged for a parade of some 3,000 soldiers. City officials and officers from Fort Snelling in charge of the National Army at Camp Dodge were included. The parade took place at noon on Saturday the 22d and imediately afterwards the pictures at the Royal were shown. Needless to say the streets were jammed with onlookers and no picture ever shown in the city before received such publicity. The Royal was crowded all the week, the Tribune and the Pathe received all kinds of publicity and L. A. Sheridan felt that he had put the "Tanks" over in Des Moines just about right.

Mystery in Disappearance of Knoxville Film Man.

Knoxville, Ia.—A mystery surrounds the disappearance of H. M. Stern, manager of the Grand theater in Knoxville. Mr. Stern disappeared recently and no one, known, saw him go or knows of his whereabouts. Opinions differ on whether the man was out of his mind or has been the victim of foul play. It was not money affairs, because he left a substantial amount of money in the bank at Knoxville and is known to have been doing good business. The Grand has been closed for four days and at the present writing the whole town is shrouded in mystery over his disappearance.

Jesse Hartman in New York Triangle Office.

Des Moines, Ia.—It will be of particular interest to many of the Iowa film people to know that Jesse Hartman, formerly roadman in Iowa and Nebraska for different firms, is now in New York City, in the Triangle office. This office is under the supervision of C. R. Price, former manager of the Mutual Exchange in Omaha.

Well-Defined Rumors of Two New Houses.

Des Moines, Ia.—Two well-defined rumors of new houses have come to Des Moines film people. One is to the effect that a large house is to be erected in Fort Dodge by a local capitalist. It is said that the site has already been acquired and that plans have been drawn up. The other is most authentic in spite of the fact that no public announcements have been made. Plans have been drawn up and the site acquired for a new house in Webster City for a fine house to seat 1,500 people.

S. Goldflam Now Covering Nebraska.

Des Moines, Ia.—S. Goldflam is now covering Nebraska in the interest of the A. H. Blank Enterprises. His headquarters are in Omaha.

Fred Martin in Iowa for Triangle.

Des Moines, Ia.—Fred Martin, well known to Iowa exhibtors, having been salesman through Iowa for Metro, is now covering Iowa for the Triangle. Mr. Martin also was conected with the Metro in Kansas City just previous to this last position.

H. Meirstenier Handling New Serial.

Des Moines, Ia.—H. Meirstenier, who for a long time was head of the serial department in the local Mutual exchange, is now handling the new Paramount serial "Who is 'Number One'?" for the local branch of the Kansas City Feature Film Co.

Abe Frankel Will Build New Theater.

Des Moines, Ia.—Abe Frankel, manager of the Casino and Majestic theaters in this city and who will begin the erection of the new photoplay house on Locust the first of October, was in Kansas City on business last week

Prairie City Theater Changes Hands.

Prairie City, Ia.—W. D. Mahaffey, of Eddyville has sold the American theater in Prairie City to Ralph Walker.

Bluebird Finds Fords Keep Business.

Des Moines, Ia.—The Bluebird Photoplay Company in this city have purchased a couple of Ford Roadsters for their salesmen, in order to see more customers every week with less expense. D. B. Lederman has been trying out the cars all summer with four of his roadmen and finds that where on the average of twelve customers could be reached by the old method, not less than thirty can be dealt with using the motor cars. He has purchased another one and now has five on the road constantly.

Dodge Film Opens Office.

Des Moines, Ia.—The Dodge Film Co. have opened an office on the corner of Fourth and Locust in the Cohen building, with Lawrence Prosser in charge. The Dodge Film Co. are making pictures of the training Camp Dodge and are finding a ready market for them over Iowa, a part of Illinois, Minnesota and North Dakota, where everyone is interested in the soldiers training here. The films are released a reel a week and 10,000 feet of film have already been finished. Guy Woods did the camera work and the Superior Film Company of this city attended to the finishing.

Ralph Fridlington Becomes Mid-West Shipping Clerk.

Des Moines, Ia.—Ralph Fridlington is now acting as shiping clerk at the Mid-West Des Moines office.

News of Film People Coming and Going in Des Moines.

Des Moines, Ia.—W. M. Bell, manager of the Mid West office in Kansas City, was in Des Moines over Sunday last week, conferring with A. M. Blank.

A. Kahn, salesman for the Mid West in Iowa, has just returned from a most successful two weeks' trip and reports the late fall and winter outlook a big improvement over the early fall and summer.

George Brownley, of the Omaha Triangle exchange, was in Des Moines last Sunday on business.

H. Beanblossom of the Star in Newton, W. A. Matlock of the Princess in Ames, W. A. Middleton of the Rex in Iowa Falls, Jos Gerbracht of the Twin Star in Ames, J. H. Lake of the Garden in Iowa City, and Frank Bryant of the Plaza in Waterloo were all callers at the A. H. Blank office in Des Moines last week.

Mr. Ballantyne of the Mutual exchange reported that Tom Arthur of the Cecil in Mason City, W. E. Roby of Truro, and G. H. Peterson of the Grand in Story City were callers last week.

I. Lesserman, general manager of the Laemmle Film exchanges, was in town last week and spent a couple of days with D. B. Lederman of the local office.

James Denton of the Virginia in Boone and M. Levin of the Star in Washington were visitors at the Metro office last week.

Mr. Anderson of Brown and Anderson, managers of the Princess in Boone, came down last week to see about an early booking of W. Christy Cabanne's newest Metro feature, "Draft 258." Mr. Anderson reported that Mabel Taliaferro is the most popular star in Boone, that is, feminine star, and that people after seeing "The Slacker" are eagerly waiting Cabanne's next picture and especially so since Miss Taliaferro plays the lead.

Sam Harris, of Ackerman & Harris, is making an eastern business trip.

T. Trotter, of Grass Valley, Cal., was a recent visitor here to purchase projection equipment.

Walter Preddey has installed a repair shop in connection with his machine and supply business, this being in charge of Otto Habekos, formerly of the Elite theater.

Ralph Quive, manager of the local branch of the Greater Vitagraph, is home from a vacation spent in the east.

C. A. Meade, special Pathe representative, was here recently on his way to Seattle.

The Poppy theater, on Sixteenth street, which has been closed for a long time, has been opened by Louis Levin. It seats about 400.

The Select Pictures Corporation has taken over all the Selznick pictures formerly handled by Sol Lesser, including four featuring Clara Kimball Young.

Northern California Newslets.

Martinez, Cal.—C. B. Johnson and L. W. Eaton have formed a partnership and plan to erect a moving picture theater on Main street.

Clovis, Cal.—A. C. Weaver has disposed of the Rex theater to Fred Conley.

Senora, Cal.—The new theater of J. H. Knowles will be ready for occupancy about the first of December. It will seat 800.

Manteoa, Cal.—A theater with a seating capacity of 400 is being erected by Stephen Pelton, of San Jose, Cal.

Oakland, Cal.—Phil Doll has purchased the interests of his partner in the Home theater and is now the sole owner.

Blythe, Cal.—L. B. Todd has purchased the Electric Airdome and will install considerable new equipment. The theater will be remodeled and occupied as soon as the weather becomes too cool for open air shows. Charles Jones, the former owner of the place, is now in the army.

Film Men See Color Pictures.

Merced, Cal.—A number of San Francisco film men and Valley exhibitors journeyed to this city recently to attend the first public showing of the Douglass color pictures at the Elite theater, among these being Louis Reichert and Fred Voigt, of the Metro; Herman Wobber, of the Paramount; Morris Lowrey, representing the Triangle; John A. Kraker, representing the Greater Vitagraph; A. C. H. Chamberlin, of Madera, and George Bailey, of Turlock. Following the exhibition of the pictures Manager Charles H. Douglass, of the Elite theater entertained his guests at a banquet.

E. H. Emmick Home Again.

San Francisco, Cal.—E. H. Emmick, of the Peerless, has returned from a stay of several weeks at the Los Angeles branch and will remain here for some time. He has purchased the business of the De Luxe Film-Lasky Co., this being the third concern he has bought out since engaging in business here. His local assistants, H. Solmson and B. Schwartz, have been drafted, but have not been ordered to training camp.

Sol. L. Lesser Returns Home.

San Francisco, Cal.—Sol. L. Lesser, head of the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., has returned home from New York, in care of a nurse, and is rapidly recovering from the illness he contracted there. It will probably be several weeks before he is able to attend to business and he will start for New York again as soon as he feels able to undertake the trip. His brother, Irving Lesser, manager of the Los Angeles branch, was here for a short stay recently.

Goldwyn Business Big.

San Francisco, Cal.—Manager C. M. Simmons, manager of the local office of Goldwyn, is being swamped with letters from exhibitors telling of the record business being done with the first two releases, "Polly of the Circus" and "Baby Mine." Both of these were shown locally at the Tivoli theater in September to record crowds. During October this house will present "Fighting Odds" and "The Spreading Dawn." Exhibitors are eagerly awaiting a trade showing of the "Manxman" and the Marie Dressler comedies. The latter will have their premiere presentation at the Strand theater, which has a seating capacity of about 2,000.

Problem of Help Grows Acute on Coast

High Wages Is Only One Phase of the Situation—Scarcity of Young Men Felt at Both Theaters and Exchanges—Other California Notes.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The managers of moving picture houses are not only being called upon to pay increased prices for film service and supplies these days, but are finding that their help are demanding higher wages. The janitors employed in these places recently served a notice that they were expecting a wage of $3,50 a day, commencing October 1, and the question of granting this is being considered by the United Motion Picture Industry of Northern California, it having been thought advisable to bring the matter up before this organization. It is understood that the moving picture operators are preparing to ask for an increase in salary and that the film inspectors, most of whom are women, are considering the formation of a union with the idea of demanding a substantial wage increase.

Help is becoming very difficult to secure at any price and many theaters in this territory are now employing lady ushers. Many of the young men employed in the various exchanges have been drafted for military service and exchange managers are advertising for help, with indifferent results.

Two Exchanges Drop Poster Departments.

San Francisco, Cal.—Several of the local film exchanges are closing out their poster rental departments and placing their advertising matter in the hands of the Western Poster Company, which makes a specialty of handling posters and slides. The California Film Exchange recently decided that its state right department should not be burdened with poster renting and all mounted posters for "Come Through," "Mother O'Mine," "Even as You and I," all Jewel Productions, Bluebird specials and Century comedies may now be had only from the Western Poster Company. The M. & R. Film Exchange has taken a similar step and there are but one or two of the large exchanges that are now handling mounted posters.

American Company Working at Golden Gate.

San Francisco, Cal.—J. R. Crone, studio manager for the American Film Manufacturing Co. at Santa Barbara, arrived here recently with a company headed by Mary Miles Minter and pictures will be taken on San Francisco Bay and around the city.

Improves Theater and Raises Prices.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Haight theater, conducted by Sam Levin, has had new chairs of an improved type installed throughout and a minimum price policy of 15 cents has been inaugurated. For the past eight months this admission price has been charged on Wednesday and Thursday and it has been found that this can be easily secured, as the house is a fine one, having been remodeled less than a year ago, and a careful selection of pictures is made.

Claude L. Langley Retires from T. & D.

San Francisco, Cal.—Claude L. Langley, for years directing manager and treasurer of the Turner & Dahnken circuit, which conducts the largest chain of moving picture theaters in the west, has disposed of his interests in this concern to his former business associates and has left for the east. Mr. Langley had been connected with the firm for about eight years and many of the larger houses opened by it were the results of his effort and planning. J. T. Turner, vice-president and general manager of the concern, has taken over the duties of treasurer and the other work formerly handled by Mr. Langley is now being cared for by Secretary E. B. Johnson.

Independent Film Exchange to Expand.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Independent Film exchange is planning to open a branch at Los Angeles in October and a little later will open offices in other Coast cities. It is now handling the stock of film owned by the Pacific Film exchange and regular purchases will be made in the future. The Pacific Film exchange is now controlled by Harry Hunter, who has purchased the interests of his former partner, Henry Thuman, who has gone to Portland, Ore., to look after other business interests.

Latest Perfection Release a Winner.

San Francisco, Cal.—George Schlessinger, manager of the Pastime theater, Bakersfield, Cal., is the proud father of a baby boy, born a few days ago at San Francisco, on the date of the release of the first George Kleine Perfection picture. The management of the local George Kleine exchange sent a message of congratulation on the arrival of the first Schlessinger baby and expressed the hope that he would always be perfection. Word was received a little later that the lusty youngster had been named George Perfection Schlessinger and that he was a winner, like the films of this name.

Express Company Grants Concession.

San Francisco, Cal.—Through the efforts of the United Motion Picture Industries of Northern California, the express companies doing business in this city have modified their orders in regard to the afternoon pick-up of film and will have wagons on Film Row until almost five o'clock.

Select Pictures Manager on a Trip.

San Francisco, Cal.—Ben S. Cohen, district manager for the Select Pictures, has left for Seattle, Wash., to superintend the removal of the branch there into its own new building. Before returning home he will visit Denver, Los Angeles and other points where exchanges are maintained, remaining from a week or ten days in each place. The "Lone Wolf" has been booked over the entire T. & D. circuit, with the exception of the Tivoli opera house of this city.

The Roll of Honor.

San Francisco, Cal.—Ralph Marks, of the Acme theater, formerly secretary of the Exhibitors' League of San Francisco, is now training at American Lake, Wash.

Phil Weinstein, the popular booker for the Metro Pictures Corporation, will leave for American Lake on October 6.

J. A. Kraker, road man for the Greater Vitagraph Company, will leave for the army camp at American Lake on October 6. He recently completed a trip through the interior with the "Fighting Trail," booking this from Sacramento to Porterville. Benard Skinner, shipping clerk for this exchange, has already left for the camp.

Gerard Sullivan, shipping clerk for the General Film Company, will leave for American Lake early in October. He has been with this concern ever since it entered this field.

E. O. Child Visits Los Angeles.

San Francisco, Cal.—E. O. Child, manager of the local branch of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., made a brief trip to Los Angeles recently to confer with Business Manager C. R. Seelye, who is on the Coast for a short stay.

Suburban Business Hurt by Free Admissions

Exhibitors Near Portland Are Complaining of Vaudeville Theaters That Admit Children Free and Give Away Prizes.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Suburban exhibitors are a little wrought up over the persistence of certain vaudeville interests in the city admitting children free to their regular shows on certain days. Free admission to children came into vogue a long time ago, but exhibitors had been in hopes that the plan was merely temporary to popularize the vaudeville shows. Now, however, patrons of the picture theaters in the suburbs have been inquiring when they, too, were going to admit their children free. One combination vaudeville and picture theater is giving away free balloons to children on Saturday to induce the attendance of parents with children. The big seating capacity of the theaters in question makes the free admissions and prizes profitable.

Exchanges, Portland Wants You!

Portland, Ore.—In the club rooms of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon a gathering of exhibitors was discussing the distribution situation in the territory. The men agreed that several exchanges not now represented were particularly desired here and named those they thought could do business with profit with Portland as headquarters. These were Kleine-Edison, Metro, Fox and World. Some distributors, while not having a regular office here, do have permanent representatives.

Brings Big Advertising Right Home.

Portland, Ore.—C. M. Hill, manager for Paramount, is making much of the full-page Paramount advertisement that recently appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. He is urging the exhibitors using Paramount service to call the attention of their patrons to the issue of the Post in which the advertisement appeared as being the theater's advertisement. Dr. Cram, of the Walla Walla, Wash., Arcade, first used the plan, running a six or eight-inch column asking his patrons to refer to page 65 of the Post, where the advertisement concerning the Arcade's pictures was to be seen. The scheme was very novel.

Exhibitor Brings His Own Private Seat.

Portland, Ore.—Apparently the unupholstered seats in the viewing room of the Pathe exchange do not fit well to the portly form of W. W. Ely, genial manager of the Hippodrome, for he has installed a comfortable padded opera chair in the Pathe office for his own use. Shortly after a long viewing session, Manager Kofeldt of the exchange received the chair with the request that it be installed for Mr. Ely's use hereafter. The request was granted.

Leonhardt Gives a Party.

Portland, Ore.—Harry Leonhardt, Western manager for Goldwyn, was a recent visitor in Portland, and while here gave a little party to some of the press boys and theater managers at the Claremont tavern. Present were E. R. Redlich, Metro; J. J. Parker, Majestic theater; James Cassell, Oregonian; A. M. Cabler, Telegram; C. E. Couche, Couche Agency, and W. A. Graeper, Union avenue theater. Everybody is congratulating Mr. Leonhardt on the timeliness of the party; the Claremont was pinched two days later.

Portland Firms Consolidate.

Portland, Ore.—The Service Film Company and the Empire Film Service have consolidated and will operate from the store of the first named company at 393 Oak street. W. A. Stone, now of the Empire Film Service and at one time with the Service Film Company, will head the consolidated business as president and general manager of the company.

The new Service Film Company is negotiating for a line of feature films, added to which it will conduct the supply business of the old company. A repair department, in charge of G. K. Hartung, has already been added to the business of the concern. Mr. Hartung was formerly manager for the Gaumont Company in Canada. Mr. Stone has been in the film and supply business in Portland about eight years. A new film vault has been installed to take care of the film end of the business.

G. F. Reports Good Business.

Portland, Ore.—W. E. Matthews, manager for the new Portland General Film Company's office, reports most gratifying business during the few weeks the company has been established here. He says he finds the Portland and Oregon exhibitors a fine bunch of fellows to do business with and that many of his regular releases are booked solid already. Mr. Matthews is anticipating a big increase in business when the new General features are ready for Portland distribution.

First Portland House Organ Appears.

Portland, Ore.—What is undoubtedly the first real house organ issued by a film exchange in Portland has appeared from the Film Supply Company's exchange under the title of "Reel Stuff." The new publication is directed by Dean Collins, famous all over Oregon as a balladist and versifier. Mr. Collins left the Portland Oregonian to take up his new work. "Reel Stuff" will have to do strictly with Universal and affiliated products, and Mr. Collins plans a lot of local matter for it and has outlined an editorial policy intended to be instructive to exhibitors.

"Monty" Leaves the World Film.

Portland, Ore.—R. C. Montgomery, road man for World Film in Portland territory for some time past, has left that organization to become affiliated with Triangle out of Seattle. His first trip was into the Montana territory.

The World Film Corporation will hereafter be represented in Portland by F. A. Bernardo, who will be on the job in and around Portland, making his headquarters at one of the local hotels.

New Grants Pass Theater Rumored.

Portland, Ore.—A well founded rumor has come to Film Row that George Hunt, now picture magnate of southern Oregon, is about to branch out further and that he is contemplating building a new theater at Grants Pass. The town already has two theaters. Mr. Hunt recently acquired the Vining theater at Ashland.

Universal Auditor in Portland.

Portland, Ore.—John McClean, auditor for Universal, made his annual visit here during the latter part of September and reported all business improving. The entire Northwest is booming as far as Universal, Bluebird, Longacre and allied products are concerned, says Mr. McClean, and he, as examiner of the books, ought to know. Mr. McClean has visited Denver, Salt Lake, Butte, Seattle, and his next point of call will be San Francisco.

Brief Oregon Film Items.

Portland, Ore.—Breaking all records, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" closed its first Portland run of 11 days Sept. 29.

Jack Tillman, booker at the old G. F. office, is again booker for General in the new exchange.

Ward Coble, of Bend, Oregon, was a recent visitor in Portland, attending his wife, who was ill in a local hospital.

W. A. Meade, special representative for Pathe, was a recent visitor en route to San Francisco.

New Shopping District Theater in Seattle

John Hamrick, Now Managing the Rex, Intends to Build Theater With Seats for 400—Will Appeal to Transients With Ten Cent Shows.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—John Hamrick, manager of the Rex, a Second avenue motion picture theater, will open a new house early in October at 416 Park street. The new house will have a capacity of about 400 and will be named The Regent. Mr. Hamrick will retain the Rex and will show the best of his first runs there, bringing them later to the Regent. Those films which have been particularly successful in Seattle will appear for even the third and fourth run at the Regent. Ten cents will be the admission price. The new theater will be farther uptown than the Rex, nearer the center of the shopping district, which is fast moving northward.

This will be the fourth motion picture theater that Mr. Hamrick has opened in Seattle. The first was the Queen Anne theater, built in 1911, which was one of the first neighborhood houses opened in Seattle. Two years later he built the Colonial on Fourth avenue near Pike, just about a block from the location of the new Regent. The Colonial was the first theater to be built in this part of the downtown district, which is now the motion picture center, and for a long time it was the largest and finest motion picture theater in Seattle. Then, two years ago, Mr. Hamrick bought the Rex and has operated it very successfully, although it was the smallest of the first class downtown theaters.

Strand Takes New Life This Season.

Seattle, Wash.—The newly-decorated Strand theater, which opened this week with Goldwyn service, has taken on a new lease of life with its two big attractions, viz., "Polly of the Circus" and the Cherniavsky orchestra. Every one is talking about the wonderful music and how glad he is to see Mae Marsh once again, and the Strand's new white front with the orange silk curtains at the doors piques the curiosity of the passer-by so that he generally wants to see what other changes have been made inside. He is not disappointed when he enters and sees the artistic effects of blue velvet carpets and orange silk curtains, combined with ivory colored tiling in the foyer, and the orange lighting fixtures with corresponding decorations in the auditorium.

New Selling Force for Triangle Office.

Seattle, Wash.—George M. Mann, general representative for Triangle, is spending several weeks in Seattle reorganizing the local office. Mr. Mann has installed as manager Charles A. Bryant, who gained his experience in the film business in Philadelphia in a private exchange. The three new salesmen are R. C. Montgomery, formerly traveling for World out of Seattle; F. A. Tipton, formerly McClure salesman in Salt Lake City, and E. H. Casten, recently salesman for General out of Salt Lake City, but before that Seattle Pathe salesman. Leon Bories, veteran exchange man of the west, and until recently manager of the General in San Francisco, is to take the post of efficiency expert for the Seattle territory.

Ben S. Cohen Signs Big Contract.

poration, spent several days in Seattle this week. Mr. Cohen is very proud of the results of his visit. Among other things which he accomplished was the signing of the biggest contract for pictures in the northwest. It was a contract with Jensen and von Herberg for the entire output of the Select Pictures Corporation for the four states of Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho.

"Polly" Breaking Records.

Seattle, Wash.—J. J. Parker, manager of the Majestic theater in Portland, Ore., visited the Goldwyn and other exchange offices in Seattle this week. He was feeling particularly good over the success he was having at his house with "Polly of the Circus." It had broken all his house records and was still "going some."

Seattle Exchange Personals.

Seattle, Wash.—After a several weeks' stay in Seattle, Harry Leonhardt, Coast division manager for Goldwyn, left this week for San Francisco.

W. W. Armstrong left for Denver this week to handle Goldwyn and special productions under the Goldwyn banner.

W. S. Nelson, formerly office manager for the Greater Features Company, is now booker in the Seattle K-E-S-E office.

H. B. Dobbs, formerly salesman out of the Seattle World office, is now traveling out of the Seattle for Metro.

C. H. Feldman, formerly salesman for General out of Seattle, has been engaged by C. F. Hill ,Goldwyn manager, as special representative for the Rex Beach productions.

License Inspector Threatened Vainly

Vancouver Theater Shows "Damaged Goods" Without Hindrance—License Inspector Says He Lacks Power to Prevent It.

By Charles S. Thomson, 645 Burrard St., Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—The controversy which raged for a time around the proposed showing of "Damaged Goods" in Vancouver has apparently subsided. The big stick which was waved by the license inspector has decreased considerably in size, and it now appears unlikely that any attempt will be made to suppress the picture. After the new censor had passed the film for exhibition and the license inspector declared his intention of overruling the censor's decision, the latter's threat was conveyed to the attorney-general, but that official declined to enter further into the dispute.

In an interview he said: "As far as my office is concerned, the matter is now out of my hands. An appeal was made to me against the decision of former censor C. L. Gordon, who had rejected the picture. After witnessing the production myself I decided that although it was an unpleasant subject, and one which I would not voluntarily go to see a second time, nevertheless I could see nothing in it that would be hurtful to the morals of the community. In fact, its very unpleasantness teaches a strong moral lesson, and on that account I recommended that the censor reconsider his veto. Rather than do so, Mr. Gordon resigned his office, giving place to Walter Hepburn. The picture was then submitted to the new censor in the ordinary way and met with his approval. So far as the Government is concerned, the matter is ended. If any city official feels it incumbent upon him to prevent the picture from being shown, that is a matter which the City of Vancouver must decide for itself."

Threat Not Followed by Action.

On hearing of this, License Inspector Jones publicly said that he would cancel or suspend the license of any theater that tried to present "Damaged Goods" to the public, but recent events have made this look like a mere threat, calculated to scare exhibitors away from the picture. In spite of the inspector's mandate, the Globe theater booked the film, and the city is now decorated with twenty-four sheets advertising the fact. Seeing that he could not intimidate exhibitors from taking action the inspector has considerably modified his tone. To an interviewer he said, "While I am still of the opinion that the picture is not a fit one for public exhibition, I do not think the city license department will be able to prevent it from being shown. Last year we refused to allow the play to be presented on the stage, but this film has been passed by the provincial moving picture censor, and if the city took the matter into court in face of this, I do not think we should be successful in our application to have it banned. We should have to prove that it was a lewd exhibition, and on that point many different views would be held. So much would hinge on personal opinion." With this statement the inspector let the matter drop, apparently not realizing that by his admission that it was purely a matter of personal opinion he was unconsciously condemning the whole policy of censorship and suppression.

All Theaters Must Use Separate Tax Tickets.

Vancouver, B. C.—The Government of British Columbia drew its first instalment of revenue from the War Tax Act when Manager Jas. Pilling, of the Orpheum, Vancouver, purchased five hundred dollars worth of tax tickets for his advance sales. Although the attorney-general tentatively gave his consent to allowing the fixed program theaters to stamp the amount of the tax on each admission ticket, the Government has since decided that, owing to the difficulty of checking up on such a system, every theater must follow the same rule of selling a separate tax ticket with each admission. It has also been decided that the tax tickets can only be sold when admission tickets are purchased; that is, the public will not be allowed to obtain tickets in quantity for future use. They will be done up in bundles to the value of twenty dollars each, and these bundles must be purchased by the theaters and sold only as required.

Extra Ticket Boxes Needed.

Each theater will be required to provide an extra ticket box, as it is to be a rule that the destroyed tax tickets must be kept separate from the destroyed admission tickets. The duty of inspecting the theaters to see that the act is being properly carried out is to be taken over by the city police, who will be at liberty to enter any theater at any time and check up the doorkeepers and ticket sellers. For the extra trouble and expense incurred by the theaters in the handling and collecting of the tax, the government will grant a percentage of the revenue to the theater owners. This will be paid in the form of a cash discount of from three to ten per cent. at the time the tickets are purchased. The handling of the tickets will be entrusted to the provincial censor, and they will be sold over the counter of his office only.

Clemmer Children's Matinees Resumed

Spokane Theater Pioneer House of Special Children's Programs Begins Third Season—Is in Charge of Mrs. J. T. Burcham.

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1811 Eleventh Ave., Spokane, Wash.

SPOKANE, WASH.—The resumption of the children's matinees at the Clemmer theater, Saturday, Sept. 22, was naturally hailed with delight by the little folk who have been attending them more or less regularly for the past two years. The event has a much wider significance. The Clemmer pioneered in the field of children's matinees on the theory that the regular programs were not keyed for juvenile appreciation; the youngsters, as eager consumers of pictorial offerings, were entitled to their own programs.

After two years many moving picture theaters are conducting these matinees and the producers have recognized them and are producing photoplays particularly selected for youthful enjoyment. No little credit for this development can be placed at the door of the Clemmer theater. Dr. H. S. Clemmer and Mrs. J. T. Burcham, of Spokane, have worked together in the cause and are seeing their labors bear fruit.

Mrs. Burcham has made a special study of children's programs for several years and has interested both exhibitors and producers in catering to the demand she declared existed. She interested Dr. Clemmer in the idea and it has proved commercially profitable in Spokane, although Dr. Clemmer declares it worth while apart from the fact that box office returns sometime exceed the cost of the service. This season Dr. Clemmer has given Mrs. Burcham carte blanche in booking the attractions for the children's matinee. Mrs. Burcham's interest in better programs for children has been nationally recognized and she has been named film librarian of the national juvenile motion picture board, and in that capacity represents Oregon, Idaho and Washington on the board. As film librarian her duties have thrown her in constant touch with the producers, who in many instances have asked her for lists of books and stories she regards as suitable for juvenile minds.

Land Leased for Washington Studio.

Spokane, Wash.—The Washington Motion Picture Corporation, the new Tyrone Power film enterprise, has secured a three-year lease on 15 acres of land in Minnehaha park. Plans are now being drawn for a 164-foot stage. After several days of negotiations the deal was closed at a special meeting of the park board. The film company will pay $100 a month for the first year and $150 a month for the next two years. The lease covers the dancing pavilion and buildings in the park, which have not been used to a great extent since the park board acquired the property a few years ago.

W. W. Zent, president; Harold Hooker, secretary; Allen Meisenheimer and C. J. Ward represented the film company in the negotiations. Nearly the full membership of the park board was present. After reaching an agreement the necessary papers were ordered drawn and were closed by the payment of $600 advance rent by the film company. As a further condition the film company is to pay all water charges, taxes, lighting and other expenses.

Daughter Born to Joseph Cotter.

Spokane, Wash., or Baker, Ore.—Joseph Cotter, local moving picture magnate, of Baker, Ore., will be obliged, henceforth, to put more effort into his business and will probably also be required to tackle home duties. Announcements are just out of the arrival at the Cotter home on Wednesday, Sept. 19, of Katherine Margaret Cotter, aged one minute, and no doubt, before this appears Joe will have learned that the duties of a proud father include walking the floor in the middle of the night.

Specially Noticed Hits.

Spokane, Wash.—Among the pictures which drew well at the Lyric were: Mae Marsh and Robert Harron in "Hoodoo Ann," Harry Watson, Jr., in "The Ladder of Fame," H. B. Warner and Dorothy Dalton in "The Raiders," Clara Kimbal Young in "Happy-Go-Lucky." Emily Stevens in "The Slacker" and Wallace Berry in "Cactus Nell."

General Film to Move Exchange.

BALTIMORE, MD.—This week is "moving day" for the General Film exchange, which for some years has been located at 402 West Lombard street. The new location will be in the Wilson building and the rooms that will now be occupied by them are better arranged and better located than the old location. L. Rosenthal, who has recently taken over the management of this exchange, is a live wire and has many up-to-date ideas regarding the arranging and conducting of a film bureau. He states that facilities will be so arranged that bi-weekly private screenings may be given in the offices for the benefit of exhibitors.

Exhibitor Compliments Universal.

Baltimore, Md.—Bernard Depkin, Jr., supervising manager of the Parkway Theater Company interests, operating the Parkway, Strand and McHenry theaters, recetly sent a very complimentary letter to P. Oletzky, manager of the Baltimore Film exchange, handling the Universal output. Mr. Depkin's letter stated in part: "Your news and magazine service is the best thing in that line produced today. The subjects in 'Current Events' and 'Universal Weekly' are right up to the minute and I would be lost without your service."

Petersburg (Va.) to Have Large Theater.

Petersburg, Va.—The large store building which is located at 16 North Sycamore street in this city has now been leased to W. J. Rahily and it is understood that the property will be converted into a modern up-to-date moving picture theater with a seating capacity of 1,500. A typhoon ventilating system is to be installed.

Parkway Benefits Help Soldier Welfare.

Baltimore, Md.—On Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday afternoons, September 18-21, a series of benefits were arranged at the Parkway theater, 3-9 West North avenue, by the recently formed Welfare Association of the One Hundred and Seventeenth Mortar Battery. This association was formed to provide comforts such as tobacco, sweaters, mufflers and candy. Julian Eltinge in "The Countess Charming" was the attraction.

Several Baltimore Theaters Raise Prices.

Baltimore, Md.—The schedule of prices at both the Garden, at Lexington street and Park avenue, and the Loew's Hippodrome have raised their rates of admission for the winter. Manager Wasky of the Idle Hour on North Howard street has announced that Friday and Saturday will be feature days and on these nights 10 cents will be charged. Paul Emmert of the West End theater, Baltimore and Gilmore, began on Monday, Oct. 1, to charge 10 cents for matinees and 15 cents for nights.

Cripples Entertained at the Walbrook.

Baltimore, Md.—When it comes to doing a little cheering up for crippled children, or any children, Thomas D. Goldberg, manager of the Walbrook theater, 3100 West North avenue, knows how to do the thing right. On Friday afternoon, September 28, he had forty of the little crippled tots from the Kernan Hospital for Crippled Children attend the Walbrook.

Miss Rankin May Speak at Empire Theater.

Frederick, Md.—Through the courtesy of F. Lester Smith, proprietor of the Empire theater, in this city, the third annual adult Bible class demonstration will be held in this playhouse on Sunday afternoon, November 4. Efforts are now being made to have Miss Jeannette Rankin, Congresswoman from Montana, come to Frederick and address the women during the affair.

Philadelphia Film Happenings Last Week

New War Film "For the Freedom of the World" Shown to Brilliant Gathering—"Baby Mine" Under Ban—Other Interesting Notes.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—A war picture, "For the Freedom of the World," portraying scenes of army life and the motives that accentuate deeds of valor and courage, was shown Sunday night, September 30, in honor of the officers and men of the United Service at the Metropolitan opera house, Broad and Poplar streets. The entertainment, which more than two thousand men attended, was under the auspices of the United Service Club. The picture was under the personal direction of Stanley B. Mastbaum. When the orchestra blazoned forth the air of "God Save the King," several hundred Britishers and Highlanders, under the leadership of Colonel St. George Loftus Steele, stood at attention till the last strains had died away and then burst forth in three mighty cheers which shook the opera house.

While "For the Freedom of the World" shows the grim and ugly side of war, it contains at the same time a little love story, written and scenariorized by Captain Edward Bowers Hesser, of the Canadian Army. Many of the scenes are laid in Betzwood, outside of Philadelphia, while several stirring marching scenes have the hills and plains of Canada as a background.

Special boxes were reserved for the Red Cross, the Emergency Aid and the Navy League.

Cedar Theater's Benefit to Buy Ambulance.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Manager Arthur Taylor of the Cedar theater announces that a special benefit performance will be given on Wednesday, October 3, for the American Ambulance Red Cross. Through the courtesy of J. S. Hebrew, manager of the Greater Vitagraph Co., "The Girl Phillipa," starring Anita Stewart, was to be shown. The entire proceeds of this day will be given towards the purchase of a Ford field ambulance, completely equipped, which will cost in the neighborhood of $1,000.

F. E. Samuels New General Film Manager.

Philadelphia, Pa.—F. E. Samuels, of New York, who arrived here last week as the new manager of the General Film Company, succeeds Percy A. B. Bloch, known as the general efficiency man, who successfully developed a large clientele for the General Film program. Mr. Bloch leaves with the best wishes of all concerned to take up his new duties as manager of the New York exchange.

Chestnut Hill Is Name Chosen for Theater.

Chestnut Hill, Pa.—Walter J. Jacobs of the (now called) Chestnut Hill theater had a voting contest, the outcome of which resulted in selecting the above name. In making the decision, Mr. Jacobs was assisted by his patrons, who cast over 500 votes. This theater was previously known as the Belvidere.

Four More Theaters Raise Prices.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Sherwood, Baltimore, Cedar and Palm theaters, have increased their charges of admission from 10 cents to 15 cents. There is a general movement here for higher prices of admission and many more photoplay houses are expected to follow in line.

A Successful Woman Exhibitor.

Germantown, Pa.—Mrs. J. J. Courdouff, of the Manheim, in Germantown, is one of the few women who can boast of having successfully managed and conducted a first-class motion picture house. Her skill in booking pictures is also second to none. Most any day Mrs. Courdouff can be seen driving her big car along film row, where she drops off at the various exchanges and makes her selections.

Theater at Shamokin to Open Nov. 15.

Shamokin, Pa.—J. S. Higgins, who is building a new and up-to-date theater here, which will be named the Majestic, announces that he expects to make November 15 the opening day. A beautifully decorated interior is now in the course of completion. The house will have a balcony and a tier of mezzanine boxes around the house. It will have a seating capacity of about 1,200.

H. H. Hustler to Manage the Grand.

Philadelphia, Pa.—H. H. Hustler, well-known among theatrical circles, has been appointed manager of the Grand theater, at Seventh and Snyder avenues. The house opens under the new management with a New Bartola organ, and with many improvements, including a new indirect lighting system and a beautiful stage setting.

Notes from Mutual Film Office.

Philadelphia, Pa.—E. G. Evans, of the Washington Mutual office, arrived here last week at the same time, with M. J. Sullivan, of the home office in Chicago. They are both on the errand to promote Mutual welfare business and will stay here for some time. B. S. Tolmas, who resigned a short time ago, is now in New York, and John F. Gill is at present temporarily in charge d'affaires. George Ross and Jerome Safron, traveling Mutual road men, are now at the Philadelphia headquarters and will shortly start on their respective routes.

Manager Lynch Gets Two Roadmen.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Robert Lynch of the Metro last week secured William J. Madison of the Fox and F. J. Marro of the Perfection Pictures as road men for his exchange.

"Skinner's Baby" Under Census Ban.

Philadelphia.—"Skinner's Baby," a photoplay which received a remarkable reception at the Strand theater in New York and at a good many leading theaters throughout the country, has been banned by the State Board of Censors from being shown in Pennsylvania. A. G. Buck, manager of the Perfection Photoplay Exchange, is at a loss to interpret the reason for this refusal, and has appointed David Smythe, attorney, to thrash out this matter in the courts. Although a special review was given for the benefit of Frank Shattack, the chairman of the board, no satisfaction could be obtained, outside of the fact that he considered the prenativity theme of the story as objectionable.

L. J. Kelley Now Booker for Perfection.

Philadelphia, Pa.—L. J. Kelley, for many years one of the leading solicitors in selling advertising space for newspapers, has resigned his position with the Evening Telegraph to book the Perfection program in the city.

Business and Personal Notes.

Philadelphia.—Edward Hinds, of the Savoy theater, Tamaqua, paid a visit to the Perfection Pictures exchange last week and booked up with George M. Smiley for the Conquest program.

Philadelphia.—F. W. Buhler, of the Central Market St. Amusement Co., has returned from his vacation happy and smiling and is full of enthusiasm, making preparations for the presentation of D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance" at the Victoria.

KALEM.

THE SIGN OF THE SCARF (An Adventure of "Grant, Police Reporter").—The cast: Tom Grant (George Larkin); Mary Neal (Ollie Kirkby); The Spider (Robert Ellis); His Accomplice (Harry Gordon); "Slipper Margaret" (Mary Taylor-Ross). Story by Robert Wells Richie. Directed by Robert Ellis.

Grant, police reporter on The New York Chronicle, chances to meet Mary Neal upon her arrival in New York. He tells her the way to the hotel where she desired to stop. She gets into a taxi, driven by an accomplice of the Spider, and is taken to the Spider's apartment, where she is held a prisoner.

Arriving at the office, Grant is shown a clipping that Mary Neal, sole heir to a vast fortune, has been found and will arrive in New York today. Grant goes to the hotel to interview her, and is shown up to Miss Neal's room and is astounded to find another woman posing as Mary Neal.

Mary ties a white scarf in her window and writes on Grant's card: "Am a prisoner in room with a white scarf in the window," and drops the card out of the window. A newsboy takes it to Grant, who starts to find the window.

The Spider has learned Mary's plan, and determines to remove her from the house. Grant sees the scarf in the window in time to trail the Spider's accomplice and the girl to a house in the suburbs. He rescues Mary by climbing a tree and leaping to the roof of the house. He overpowers the man left to guard her, and hurries back with Mary to the attorney's office just as "Slippery Margaret," posing as Mary Neal, is about to get possession of the bonds. "Margaret" is placed under arrest, and Mary thanks Grant for bringing her first experience in New York to a happy termination.

THE MAN WITH THE LIMP (An Adventure of "Grant, Police Reporter").—The cast: Tom Grant (George Larkin); Marie Le Blanc (Ollie Kirkby); Count Leone (Harry Gordon); Colonel Smithton (Cyril Courtney); Ethel Smithton (Mrs. Welsh).

Grant, police reporter, saves little Billy from being run over by an automobile and takes him to his mother, Marie Le Blanc, in their room in a poor tenement. He is surprised when Marie suddenly shoves him in a closet. He hears footsteps of a man with a limp and then the words, "Be ready to light out this afternoon!" The man leaves, and Marie begs Grant not to ask any questions.

Returning to the office, Grant is assigned to interview Colonel Smithton, whose house was robbed. He meets the colonel's daughter, Ethel, and her fiance, Count Leone, and discovers footprints outside the window which shows that the robber was a man using a crutch.

Grant returns to the tenement to investigate his clue. Marie admits the man with the limp is her husband. She hears him coming again, and shoves Grant into the closet. But Grant accidentally makes a noise. The man hears it, forces Grant to come out and ties him up. Then accusing his wife of treachery, he ties her to a chair. He takes Billy and leaves.

Grant manages to free himself and release Marie. She tells him that her husband planned to leave on the three o'clock boat for South America. Grant reaches the pier, lassoes the mast of the steamer and swings on board. He is brought to the room engaged by the man described by Grant and is astounded when Count Leone walks out. Billy runs up and exclaims: "Come and look at the water, daddy!" Grant then understands. Colonel Smithton's jewels are found on the Count, and he is placed under arrest, while Grant takes little Billy back to his mother.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

THE INDIAN SUMMER OF DRY VALLEY JOHNSON (One of the O. Henry series—4 Parts).—The cast: Panchita O'Brien (Jean Paige); Dry Valley Johnson (Carlton King); Mrs. O'Brien (Anna Brody). Directed by Martin Justice.

At the age of thirty-five Dry Valley Johnson, who looks upon women as a nuisance, sells his sheep ranch for a fortune and goes away for a life of ease and to encumber the earth as an idle, slovenly bachelor. When some one gives him a strawberry to eat he find a hobby. He starts a strawberry patch in his garden. One day, in chasing a flock of children out of his patch, he comes upon nineteen-year-old Panchita O'Brien, the daughter of the widow next door. Panchita audaciously continues to eat the stolen fruit and takes her time about escaping.

"Dry Valley" is smitten with what is known as the Indian Summer of the Soul; purchases some hair restorer and orders clothing from the city. Arrayed in a jay-bird blue tennis suit, ox-blood shirt, and brown shoes which pinch his feet, Johnson startles all Santa Rosa by affecting youthful mannerisms, and calls upon Panchita. His courtship continues until he finds her mimicking his peculiarities and dress before her little brothers and sisters. Enraged he returns home, tears off his clothing and dons his old sheep ranch suit. When Panchita appears in quest of her lover he orders her home. Thoroughly embittered "Dry Valley" returns to his backyard with a renewed interest in strawberries.

In the gloom of early dusk he finds Panchita approaching through his patch. Roused to sudden wrath by the remembrance of his humiliation, he cracks his whip and orders Panchita to return. Panchita ignores his threats and continues to advance, while the enraged "Dry Valley" strikes at her with his whip. Without flinching the girl advances with outstretched arms. Light dawns on "Dry Valley," and he finds the Indian Summer, or Springtime, for which his soul has longed.

ESSANAY.

A JITNEY ELOPEMENT (Chaplin Picture—2 Parts).—Chaplin is the favored suitor of an heiress. The girl's father, however, insists upon marrying his daughter to a poverty-stricken count, who demands $1,000,000 in addition to the girl. Chaplin calls and is mistaken for the count. The father hands over the money. While the three are at dinner the real count arrives. There is a lively encounter, in which the count, Charlie and father take part. The fight is carried into the open, where several cops take part, only to be given a series of knock-out blows by Charlie. Finally Charlie and the girl reach an automobile. Then the chase begins. Through mud-holes, over ruts, and across formidable obstacles the two autos race at break-neck speed. When his machine reaches a dock, and Charlie is overtaken, he uses strategy to get rid of his enemies. He backs his car suddenly, pushing the pursuing machine and its occupants into the lake.

THE FABLE OF ALL THAT TRIANGLE STUFF AS SIZED UP BY THE MEAL TICKET (George Ade Fable—Essanay—Two Parts).—The cast: Joe (Rod LaRocque); Effie (Marguerite Clayton); his new boss (William F. Clifton); her mother (Marion Skinner); Williston Fosbrook (R. Paul Harvey).

Once there was a heavy draft employe named Joe, who lived in a cold storage dispensary called a hash house. His bread pudding was dropped in front of him by the landlady's daughter, Effie. Joe's fellow-toilers regarded him as a mush-head because he stuck around over time. Joe got his promotion just when the wise Jimmies got the sidewalk. Effie looked to Joe like a million dollars' worth of woman. Joe looked to her like a bushel of oats, until he began to pull down at the works, then she and her maw suddenly fell to the fact that they were harboring a live one.

Joe and Effie were married. Then one day the boss got the pipp and Joe took the reins. Effie, now in for highbrow stuff, regarded Joe as a handicap to her career. She could not help compare him with a literary gink she worshipped, who advised her to unhitch from Joe and marry him. While such a sympathy party was being staged one night Joe trotted in on them. Effie erupted all. Joe told the literary guy to stop trembling and there would be no scandal. He induced him to get his locks shorn next day, then took him before Effie. She took one look at her hero minus his Sampsons, then snuggled up to Joe.

Moral: Many an aviator would look foolish sawing wood.

THE FABLE OF THE FILM FED FAMILY (George Ade Fable—Essanay—Two Parts).—The cast: Bucyrus Dunwell (Rod LaRocque); Alpheus Wiggamore (Bobby Bolder); Mrs. Wiggamore (Marion Skinner).

In one of the doubtful states was a city with more area than population, where lived the Wiggamores. The main provider for the domestic plant was one Adolphus Wiggamore. Randolph, the first born, was employed in a bank. The daughter, Maidie, was undecided whether to be a barefoot dancer or a trained nurse. Then there was a kid brother. The Wiggamores saw no use in going to the theater, but kid brother went against the movies every time he could dig up a jit. Then daughter slipped when she saw a poster with the name of her favorite star.

About this time Mama Wiggamore was put on a club committee to investigate the movies. Then papa decided to do a little investigating himself. After a taste of the movies the Wiggamores found excuses to go often. Finally the cook got the habit, and the Wiggamore bill for electric lights took a sudden slump, for the entire family sidles out to the nearest movie theater every night.

Moral: The principal ingredient of real entertainment is the absence of talk.

FALCON FEATURES.

THE CLEAN GUN (Four Parts—The cast: Jack Algers (Stanley J. Preston); Dean Grayson (Edw. Jobson); Matie Norton (Kathleen Kirkham); Senator Norton (Robert Weycross); Edw. Brantonx (Wm. Marshall); Doctor Bristow (Harl McInroy); Stephen Crawfield (Chas. Edler); Della Markham (Louise Sothern). Directed by Harry Harvey.

Jack Algers, a young society man, wholly dependent on his millionaire uncle, becomes engaged to Matie, daughter of Senator Norton. His uncle, Dean Grayson, who does not approve of the boy's butterfly existence, declares he will not provide money for him on which to marry. In the meantime Stephen Crawfield, an old friend of Senator Norton, although reputed wealthy, is hard pressed and, needing a large sum of money immediately, proposes to Matie but is rejected. He later overhears Jack's proposal and Matie's acceptance and is jealous.

At a hunting party given by Senator Norton on his grounds Dean Grayson is shot and killed. Della Markham, a young society woman, in love with Crawfield, sees the man who shot Grayson, but keeps it to herself. A gun exactly like Jack's is found concealed in an old tree stump. Jack gives his gun and the one found in the stump to Crawfield, warning him not to mix the weapons as the gun which fired the shot will not show a clean gun barrel. Crawfield changes the gun, however, and Jack is arrested. Crawfield renews his attentions to Matie and Della warns him that she will not stand for his marriage to the Senator's daughter, declaring that she saw Crawfield shoot Dean Grayson. The senator and Matie overhear this conversation and Crawfield is promptly arrested as the murderer. Whereupon Jack is set free and all is well.

THE LADY IN THE LIBRARY (4 Parts).—The cast: T. Huntington Forbes (Jack Vosburgh); Mildred Vandeburg (Vola Vale); Augustus Vandeburg (Robert Weycross); Mrs. Vandeburg (Ella Pitts); Simonds (William Reed); Mrs. Merriweather (Ruth Lackaye); Rev. Alfred Clemons (Harl McInroy); The Mother (Jessylee Roberson); Meeda Jones (Jane Pepprell); "Spike" Jones (Barney Fury); Gerald Courtney (James Warner); "Jap" (Moru Kuan); Dan (W. N. Carter). Directed by Edgar Jones.

Mildred Vandeburg has built a hospital in the slum district and devotes her time to helping the unfortunate, while T. Huntington Forbes, her fiance, cares only for horses and sports. Mildred, realizing how far apart their interests lie, breaks the engagement, although recognizing Forbes' good qualities.

Employed in the hospital as head nurse is Meeda Jones, whose husband, Spike, is a notorious criminal. Spike commits a theft and induces his weak brother, Dan, to sell the jewels. Dan is killed in the attempt to arrest him, and the shock causes the death of his wife, who leaves a baby girl. An idea strikes Mildred. One night, on his return from his club in a slightly inebriated condition, Forbes is informed by the butler that there is a "lady in the library" to see him, and going he discovers the baby, who has been sent there by Mildred. His heart is touched, and for love of the child he gradually gives up his horses and clubs.

Spike Jones learns the whereabouts of the baby and conceives the idea of kidnapping it and holding it for ransom. This he attempts to do, but is overtaken by Mildred and Forbes. After most unpleasant experiences at the hands of Spike, Mildred and Forbes rescue the baby, and all ends happily, with the renewal of their engagement.

SPARKLE COMEDY.

THE WRONG WRIGHTS (One Reel).—Joe Wright and Jim Wright, married salesmen and old-time friends, register at the same hotel in New York unknown to each other. Joe, a newly-wed, sends a loving telegram to his wife and the bellboy, whom he has not tipped, adds "follow me" to the message. Meanwhile Jim Wright goes out to see the town. Mrs. Joe, on receipt of the telegram, starts for New York at once and Mrs. Jim, always suspicious of her husband, decides to trail him. The bellboy takes them both to the wrong rooms and Mrs. Jim, hearing a splashing in the bath room, is about to enter when she sees a woman's picture on the table. Joe, in the bath room, hears a strange woman's voice and remains in the bath room under a cold shower.

Meanwhile Mrs. Joe, in Jim Wright's room, promptly goes into hysterics at the sight of another woman's picture and awaits her hubby with an umbrella. When Jim returns to his room after a gay night, Mrs. Joe pounces on him and the noise rouses the entire hotel. When the lights are turned on Mrs. Joe discovers her mistake. The clerks realize the error that has been made and hasten to the other Wright's room and get there just as Mrs. Jim is opening the bath room door. Explanations follow and finally the wrong Wrights find themselves in the right rooms.

JAXON COMEDY.

FROM BAD TO WORSE (One Reel).—Pokes and Jabs, having served their sentence at hard labor, are discharged. Pokes resolves to go straight, while Jabs returns to his crooked associates. Pokes, in order to qualify for a position open to a married man, seeks a wife at a matrimonial agency. There is only one aspirant to double harness available at the time, Jennie, a servant at the prison warden's home, but she is so homely that Pokes loses his nerve and flees.

Next he advertises for a wife and Jennie, seeing the ad, answers it, enclosing a photograph of the warden's wife. Pokes starts out for his intended bride. Meanwhile Jabs and his gang have framed up a big job and when Pokes arrives at the warden's house in search of his future wife, he runs into Jabs. Jabs congratulates Pokes on his return to the crooked path and has him hold the bag while he collects the loot.

At this moment the warden returns and bursts in upon them, and as a "safety first" precaution, they dive through the window, followed by the warden's bullets. They take refuge in an old barn which proves to be a den of bomb throwers, who are just starting out on an expedition. They are forced to carry the bombs to the house of the intended victim, who proves to be the warden. Refusal being useless, they plant the bomb and are getting away when the warden appears at the window and throws the bomb after them.

Pokes and Jabs, in their frantic effort to escape, go straight back to the anarchists' den. The bomb follows and explodes. After an aerial ascension and a long drop Pokes and Jabs regain their senses in the same warden's office who informs them they are just in time to try out the new gallows.

VAMPING REUBEN'S MILLIONS (Two Parts—Oct. 17).—The cast: Hick Reuben (Bob McKenzie); Dub L. Cross (Chester Ryckman); Jim Nastic (Eddie Barry); Deuben's Daughter (Eva Novak); Mortgage Holder (Harry Larrine); Miss Gettem (Catherine Young). Directed by Dick Smith.

Farmer Reuben is a good judge of horses but a poor one of mortgages. He played the ponies and his jockey's name was Dub L. Cross, and he lived up to it. On his farm was Jim Nastic, whom everybody ill-treated, including Eva, Reuben's daughter. Jim hated Cross and planned to get him fired and ride in his place. So when it was time for the race, he sneaked into the paddock and hung a lot of weights under Reuben's horse's saddle.

Jim revealed the deadly scheme he had put up on Cross to Reuben and got the job of riding the horse, as he had planned. But Cross was determined on revenge. He fixed the scales so that he could pull a string when Jim got on them, and then have him declared overweight. This plan he carried out just before the race, so that Jim was disqualified. Eva offered to ride the horse to victory.

Foiled, Cross still was determined on revenge. He found out the secret joint which Reuben was running for playing the ponies in defiance of the law. He hired a vampire to tamper with Reuben's honor and reveal the secret to the police. This she did. The police raided the place, but Reuben escaped. Cross escaped, too, and there was a chase through the streets, Reuben in a Ford and the cops on bicycles. Numerous houses were torn down and many citizens maimed before the prey was caught.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE.

ISSUE NO. 41 (Oct. 19).

The first number on the Screen Magazine, 41, is a demonstartion by the National Association of Masters of Dancing, held recently in New York City. The new one-step, fox-trot and waltz are shown us as they will be danced by the "correct" this winter. The new Polka Militaire is the novelty of the season.

The Nature Study number shows how the action of the water wears portholes in the rock beds of rivers and streams. A small pebble in a depression starts the hole, and the stone is ground round and round until a deep cavity is hollowed out.

A school for motormen is maintained by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, and pictures of the activities of the pupils form a part of Number 41. After fifteen days' training the novice becomes a graduate operator and is given his car.

Mrs. A. Louise Andrea, the Screen Magazine's cooking expert, shows how to make kneadless bread much more quickly than it can be done by the old method.

A Miracle in Mud by Willie Hopkins, the sculptor, completes the reel.

WHO DONE IT? (One Reel—Rel. Week of Oct. 15).—The cast: Bill (William Franey); Gale (Gale Henry); Her Brother (Ed Baker); Manager (Milburn Moranti); Book Agent (Charles Haefli); Inspector (Milton Sims). Scenario by R. A. Dillon. Produced by W. W. Beaudine.

Jealous Bill returns from business, and following his usual snooping custom, he peeks through the window to see how his wife is getting on in his absence. There is a man with her! He picks up a club hidden in a geranium patch, rings the front bell, and then rushes to the back door to wait for the intruder. Gale hears the bell, and knows that it is her husband. She hustles her visitor—who is only the gas man come to read the meter—out of the back door, where Bill tries to land on his bean with the club. The gas man escapes.

Going back to the front door, Bill peeks through the window again and finds a book agent with his wife. Then he gets his biggest club and prepares to play the same trick, this time with success. Gale's brother is a movie star. While Bill is beating up the book agent, he arrives, and invites Gale to go with him to see his latest picture. Bill sees them disappearing and follows. He enters the theater and sees the brother, on the screen, beat up four husky men. Bill decides to get a gun to do up the newest "home breaker," so he purchases one at a neighboring pawn brokers. Returning, he shoots at the picture of Gale's brother displayed in the lobby. The manager sees him and gets wise. He dashes into the theater.

"If there is any gentleman in the audience with another man's wife, he'd better beat it," cries the manager in a stage whisper. "The husband is outside shooting up everything."

There is a rush, and in two minutes the theater is empty.

Bill rushes home and is just about to shoot when Gale tells him that the man is her brother. Then she and the actor set upon Bill, and the cops, who have been summoned, follow suit. From a jealous, domineering husband Bill becomes as meek as a lamb.

THE MAGIC JAZZ-BO (One Reel—Rel. Week of Oct. 15).—The cast: Dave (Dave Morris); The Ingenue (Gladys Tennyson). Scenario by A. F. Statter. Produced by Alfred Santell.

Dave, the swiftest waiter in Ho-Bohemia, is of a suspicious nature anyway, and the whiskers to the two mytserious persons talking in a whisper nearby had already put him wise to the fact that they were anarchists. There was a pretty girl at the next table, and he could not get it out of his head that their plotting somehow meant danger to her. He was so distraught that he negleteed his customers, and was finally fired from the beanery. He followed the two mysterious men.

They arrive at an athletic field, where sports are taking place. The two men conceal themselves in the bushes, and begin to fire the magic jazz-bo pellets that they had invented at the athletes, by means of a small gun. The "dope" has the desired effect, and the athletes are slowed to a walk, and sail through the air over the hurdles. Dave hears them plan a meeting for that night.

Dave is on hand. He fixes a board from a tree outside the window to the windowsill. He sees them hang a bottle containing the pellets to the chandelier. Skating down the board on his roller skates, he crashes into the room and snatches the bottle as he flies. Then he discovers that the house is the home of the pretty girl. He tells her that he has saved her from the deadly Jazz-Bo. But she calls him a thief and joins the chase after him. He loses one skate and they are gaining. Then it occurs to him to throw some Jazz-Bo at his pursuers. He does so and they are slowed down at once.

Dave reaches the bank of a river just as the anarchists shoot the bottle of Jazz-Bo in his hand. It explodes in a cloud of smoke, and Dave is thrown into the water. He sinks and then rises so slowly that he is drowned on the way up.

THE TEMPLE OF TERROR (Two Parts—Rel. Week of Oct, 15).—The cast: Arthur Vail (T. D. Crittenden); Millicent Vail (Eileen Sedgwick); Jack (Fred Church); Mara (Nellie Allen); Gonga (Sam Appel). Written and produced by W. B. Pearson.

Arthur Vail receives an offer from the Government to finance an expedition into Africa. He suggests to his daughter, Millicent, that she and Jack spend their honeymoon with him. They agree, and a short time later the expedition starts. In Africa, Mara has become queen of the village in which there is a mysterious idol in the temple. She rules with a hand of iron. A native tells her that the full moon is near and asks who is to be the sacrifice. He is told that he must find a white person or be the sacrifice himself.

Vail's party leaves for the interior, but the two men leave Millicent with Gonga, the leader of the natives, thinking it will not be safe to take her farther inland. After a day's march, Vail and Jack arrive at Mara's village and find their way to the temple, where they are taken prisoners. Mara notices Jack's youth and good looks and covets him. She mentions her lions' den where she sacrifices all white people and then tells him that their only means of saving their lives is for Jack to marry her. Jack laughs and she slaps his face. Just then Millicent is brought before Mara. When the girl screams, Jack starts up in horror and Mara understands the situation. She orders Millicent sacrificed. The natives carry Millicent to the temple where the lion den is; Vail and Jack accompany the Queen.

Meanwhile, Charlie, the elephant belonging to Vail and a great favorite of the whole party, has wandered away from camp and has approached the village. He hears Millicent's screams and enters the temple as Mara is torturing the girl with the sight of the hungry lions. Mara's natives flee in terror, but Mara pushes Millicent into the den. Seeing this, Vail and Jack overpower their guards and try to get into the den. Charlie takes up a rope that was around Milicent and lets it down into the hole. Millicent starts climbing up the rope, while Mara, seeing what is happening, draws a knife and starts toward Charlie, who is pulling up the rope. Jack and Vail enter the room and Jack grabs Mara's arm as she is about to strike Charlie. Jack and Mara fight and the latter is thrown into the den. Coming from the temple, Vail, Jack and Millicent mount Charlie and hasten away.

WILD AND WOOLLY WEST (One Reel—Rel. Week of Oct. 15).—The cast: College Boy (Eddie Lyons); His Chum (Lee Moran); Co-Ed Charmer (Edith Roberts).

The girls are indignantly setting out on a hike, as the boys of the co-ed college have annoyed them by saying that they can't manage a trip alone. Eddie tells the boys that they better not let the girls get away with it, as they will never hear the end of it. Lee gets an idea.

The girls were preparing their lunch and enjoying the freedom of the male attire they had donned for the hike, when suddenly from out of the bushes came a bloodcurdling yell. The next moment they were all captured by a band of bad men, and rushed to a neighboring ranch. Here they were put to work milking cows, feeding chickens, etc. Hot and exhausted, the bad men declare that all hands must bathe in the creek. This is too much. The girls cannot decide what to do. The bandits, meantime, begin to make high hoss of taking off their guns first. This gives Edith an idea. Grabbing the nearest gun, she signals to the others to follow suit, and the boys find themseives backed into the water, where they are forced to take off their property whiskers and reveal their identity.

GOLD SEAL.

THE TAMING OF LUCY (Three Parts—Rel. Week of Oct. 15).—The cast: Lucy Spalding (Belle Bennett); Clayton Spalding (Morris Foster); John Damer (Val Paul); Mrs. W. Brown (Betty Schade). Scenario by Giles Warren. Produced by Charles Swickard.

Lucy Spalding had just heard from her brother Clayton that, unable to meet his gambling debts and threatened with expulsion from the club, he had "borrowed" some securities from the bank in which he was employed, and raised a loan on them. The bank has discovered its loss, and given Clayton, in consideration of his position in society, twenty-four hours to replace the bonds. Clayton came to Lucy and asked for a loan and Lucy turned to her dearest friend, Mary Brown, in whose country house she was a guest. Among the house party was Mrs. Brown's brother, John Damer, a ranch owner from the West, who had fallen in love with Lucy, and longed to take her back to his ranch in Wyoming. He overheard her appeal to Mrs. Brown, and begged her to refuse Lucy's request, seeing the opportunity he had been looking for. Lucy was desperate when she heard that Mrs. Brown must refuse to help her. The temptation to accept the hand of the rich Westerner was too great. She did not love him, but she saw an opportunity to save her brother. She told him that she did not care for him. They set out, after a hurried wedding, Clayton accompanying them, for Wyoming.

The place struck Lucy as dreary in the extreme. Meals for all the ranch hands were under her charge, and she had to supervise the Chinese cook, who resented her interference. Lucy had almost made up her mind to leave the place when her birthday came. But when her birthday came her husband gave her a horse and the boys presented her with the saddle for it. She set off for a ride with them. When they arrived at the saloon, they invited her to "celebrate" with them, but she refused. She asked of an old man the way to the station, and set out with the idea of taking the train back east.

Three rough characters saw the unprotected woman riding alone, and followed her. When the boys came out of the saloon they thought that she had gone home, but were very uneasy when they found that she was not there. John became alarmed and set out with Clayton to hunt for her. Lucy had come to a wash-out in the road, and falling from her horse, the three men captured her and carried her to a shack. They proceeded to play cards for her. John arrived just in time with the cowboys, and the three desperadoes found short shift. That evening when Lucy had recovered from her experience John told her that she was right in saying that this sort of life does not agree with her and that he will institute divorce proceedings. Lucy retorts that she does not want a divorce and that she loves him. Just then Clayton comes in.

"Pretty good scheme of ours, eh, John? Worked, didn't it?" he said, with a grin, while Lucy stared in astonishment, and John signaled him to be silent.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE GRAY GHOST (Episode No. 16—"From Out of the Past—Two Parts—Rel. Week of Oct. 8).—The cast: Morn Light (Priscilla Dean); The Gray Ghost (Harry Carter); Wade Hildreth (Emory Johnson); Marco (Eddie Polo); Arabin (Howard Crampton); Jerry Tryon (Lou Short); Cecelia (Gypsy Hart); Commissioner (Sidney Dean).

"Whoever gets this knife may use it!" were the closing words of the 15th chapter, as The Ghost and Hildreth prepared for mortal combat behind locked doors.

A few minutes later the Ghost staggered out, bleeding, and Morn Light gave a cry, for she thought that Hildreth had been killed. She rushes to the door, and sees him lying there, but he has only fainted and quickly revives. The Ghost is attended by his men, and it is seen that he can live but a short time. Suddenly he enters, apparently as well as ever.

"We have been tricked!" cries Morn Light.

Just then the police and Marco rush in. They take the wounded Ghost and his men in charge, and then enter the small room. The Ghost confronts them with drawn revolver. With a smile he takes the necklace from his pocket and hands it to Morn Light. Then he staggers and drops into unconsciousness as in the other room the Ghost faints.

"My power is gone!" he cries. He then explains that he and his brother are twins. Years before he had stolen Morn Light from Carlo and brought her up. His brother had fallen in love with her, and he, fearing that his revenge would be thwarted, got his brother to commit all sorts of crimes. Now that his brother is dying, his power is gone, and he collapses.

At last Morn Light comes into her own, and she and Hildreth plan to marry on the spot and carry the necklace back to her father, guarded by Marco.

THE RED ACE (Episode No. 1, "The Silent Terror"—Two Parts—Oct. 15).—The cast: Virginia Dixon (Marie Walcamp); Patrick Kelly (Bobby Mack); Pierre Fouchard (L. M. Wells); "Steel" Heffern (Charles Brindley); "Dutch" Kate (Miriam Shelby); Dr. Hirtzman (Harry Archer); Red Fawn (Yvette Mitchell); Sergeant Winthrop of the N. W. M. P. (Larry Peyton); Little Bear (Noble Johnson). Written and produced by Jacques Jaccard.

Dr. Hirtzman, head of the foreign Secret Service, is seeking to help the enemies of the United States, by keeping the supply of platinum from Lost Hope Mine in Canada from reaching the government. U. S. officers raid the premises of Dr. Hirtzman, and discover the platinum. The doctor escapes, and the officers think the Dixon family, owners of the mine, to be guilty. Patrick Kelly brings Virginia Dixon a message from her brother at the mine, saying everything has gone wrong since they undertook to supply the U. S. Every shipment is stolen and the messenger killed. Their father has disappeared. Richard is sending his Indian, Little Bear, to notify the Mounted Police, but in case anything happens he is burying the metal on hand.

Richard while writing the directions of the hidden platinum for Virginia, hears strange sounds. As he steps outside, the "Silent Terror" drops from the roof, and they struggle. The Terror tears the paper from Richard and leaves, thinking him dead. Richard causes an explosion, closing the mine entrance. At the headquarters of the N. W. M. P. Sergeant Winthrop is receiving a telegram ordering him to hold Richard and James Dixon for treason. Little Bear arrives and Winthrop sets out for the mine.

When he arrives at the frontier hotel, run by Pierre Fouchard, who is really an enemy to his country, Red Fawn, Little Bear's sister, is telling Fouchard, Steel Heffern and "Dutch" Kate of the death of Richard. Virginia is visited by the Secret Service, who accuse her father and brother of treason. She declares they are true and loyal, and the victims of foreign machinations. She declares her intention of going to Lost Hope herself.

Her maid hears her telephoning about her trip to Canada, and informs Hirtzman. He attacks her chauffeur, and one of his men takes the man's place. Virginia discovers that they are going in the wrong direction and Kelly, drawing his knife, forces the chauffeur to stop and then knocks him from the machine. The train has already left, but they pursue and gain upon it. Virginia works her way to the front, and gets ready to make a jump for the train.

BUTTERFLY PICTURES.

"'49-'17" (Five Parts—Oct. 15).—The cast: Judge Brand (Joseph Girard); Tom Robbins (Leo Pierson); Ma Bobbett (Mrs. Witting); Lady Ann Bobbett (Donna Drew); Col. Hungerford (Harry Rattenbery); "Gentleman Jim" Rayner (Jean Hersholt). From the story by William A. Cook, "The Old West Per Contract," in The Argosy Magazine. Adapted for the screen and produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin.

Old Judge Brand decides to reconstruct Nugget Notch, located in the wilds of the West, and abandoned years ago when the gold petered out. He sends his secretary, Tom Robbins, out there to start things going. Tom leaves, and after a search of two months he discovers "Castle's '49 Camp," which is at present penniless. Tom arranges with Castle and the "Camp" starts for Nugget Notch.

Tom Robbins is attracted by Lady Ann Bobbett, and they become the best of friends, but "Gentleman Jim" Rayner warns Pa Bobbett to keep Lady Ann away from the tenderfoot. Quarters are apportioned; the Bobberts are to run the general store and "Gentleman Jim" has charge of the gambling hall. In spite of their efforts to rehabilitate the gambling den, saloon and general store, the Judge is disappointed when he alights from the stage, because they do not shoot his silk hat off his head. The Judge begins to shoot things up and Rayner, in the confusion, accidentally drops a nugget chain, which Robbins picks up and returns. Rayner is angry over the incident.

Later the Judge notices the nugget chain around Lady Ann's neck. Bobbett tells the Judge that the chain has always belonged to Lady Ann, whose real name is Lorena Adams. The Judge says that the necklace belonged to his old partner and that he has spent years looking for Hugh Adams' daughter to give her her share of his fortune. That night Lady Ann asks the Judge to advance her fifty thousand dollars. She says Jim Rayner is threating Pa Bobbett and that the latter was about to kill himself when Ma Bobbett stopped him. The Judge promises to pay the money to Jim if it is necessary.

The next morning a cowboy shouts that the safe has been "busted open" and that all the money is gone, as well as the entire stock of guns and ammunition. Rayner appears with two guns, and orders everyone to dump out their cash. Warning the people to remain in the house for twenty minutes, Rayner rides to the hotel, where he forces Lady Ann to mount a horse and ride away with him.

Upon the Judge's instructions, Tom and the boys leave, carrying a lasso. On a rock trail above that on which Rayner and Lady Ann are riding, Tom and the Judge wait. The Judge swings the lasso over Rayner, scooping him off his horse. Tom rushes down to Lady Ann, while the Judge slides down the rope on top of Rayner and ties him up.

Rayner makes a full statement. Then the Judge tells the story. Twenty years ago Reyner, Bobbett and a stranger played cards together, when Rayner cheated and the stranger drew his gun; Bobbett pulled his gun and fired; the stranger dropped and the others grabbed up their baggage and fled. "Gentleman Jim" has held the stranger's death over Bobbett's head ever since. But the stranger was the Judge himself. Bobbett now says that Jim Rayner made him say that Lady Ann was Lorena Adams. The Judge tells that Lorena Adams was found five years ago.

"But Lady Ann will look just as pretty in a bride's veil, eh, Tom?" he adds, slyly.

STAR FEATURETTE.

THE CROSS-EYED SUBMARINE (Two Parts—Rel. Week of Oct. 15).—The cast: Prince Ducker and Captain Nebo (William Franey); His Angel Wife (Gale Henry); His Daughter (Lillian Peacock); Charlie Denvere (Milburn Moranti). Written by Jack Cunningham. Produced by W. W. Beaudine.

Prince Ducker and his friend, Charlie Denvere, went down to the beach to try out the submarine model invented by the prince, and then back to the boat itself. Inside they started a little game. Denvere thought he saw a chance to get rid of Ducker, so he informed the cops that the Prince was running a little game on the sly. Ducker was hauled off to prison, and Denvere attempted to make the Princess his own. In the scuffle she was pushed into the tank and drowned. Denvere seized her little daughter and set sail in his yacht.

Ducker escaped and later discovered the tragedy. He immediately changed his name to Captain Nebo, and set sail in the submarine. Denvere had a terrible time, as he was forever haunted by the shade of Princess Ducker. The little Princess was the only one who enjoyed herself, as she had a fine time on a desert island. One day a couple of guys dropped in from a balloon. One was a hero and the other a villainous sailor. The Princess at once fell in love with the hero.

Captain Nebo was cruising in search of Denvere. One day he saw a rowboat in the offing, and exclaiming, "Go and find out who belongs to that magnificent yacht," he sent two of his sailors with their patent diving suits through the water. They came up on the island, where they found Denvere himself. He had recognized the island, and had visited it to see if the little Princess was still alive, and became lost in the jungle. The two sailors came up with him just as he was explaining to the villain sailor that he was Denvere, and begging to be taken to his yacht. The sailors return and inform Captain Nebo that his enemy is at last in his path. The Captain plans to blow up the yacht as soon as Denvere has returned to it.

In the meantime the villain sailor has stolen the little Princess and taken her to the yacht. Denvere is continually haunted by the shade of Princess Ducker, and he really does not mind very much when the whole thing is blown out of the water. The shade of the Princess is blown up into the clouds, and comes to life again from the shock. She falls and enters the submarine, which happens to be on the surface. The hero, who has sought the yacht to rescue the little Princess, and the little Princess herself, and just being introduced to Nebo, who recognizes his daughter, when the Princess appears. Nebo gives one look at her, puts on his patent diving suit and goes out alone into the ocean.

WHEN LIZ LET LOOSE (One Reel—Rel. Week of October 15).—The cast: Liz (Evelyn Selbie); Bill (Harry Griffith); Sal (Mrs. Hernandez). Scenario and production by Ruth Ann Baldwin.

Liz takes up her big flower basket and goes off to her station for the day's work. Bill, her husband, loafing along the street, a shilling in his pocket, sees a strapping hussy with a feather in her hat, and invites her to have a little drink with him. Several little drinks follow when Sal, Liz's pal in the flower-selling business, happens to see him and tells Liz about it. Liz makes for the hussy. A fight is started. Liz is arrested and gets fourteen days. After serving her sentence, she goes home, where she sees Bill, calmly smoking before the fire. His attitude arouses her anger, and she pelts him with piece after piece of crockery. Then she leaves with her flower basket.

Liz is heartily welcomed by Sal, and that day business flourishes. Bill saunters up and hears Liz telling about the morning affray. When Liz returns that night, Bill is the picture of humble contrition. He has cleaned up the kitchen and prepared a meal. Liz enters without a word, watching him while he drags out his bag of tools, and sets the alarm clock at 5 A. M. At the supper table, Bill pours out the tea, and places food on her plate—then stands awkwardly, first on one foot, and then on the other, scratching his head. Liz watches him in open-mouthed amazement and suddenly pulls him into a chair, giving him a push that nearly floors him. Then she kisses him as the picture ends.

THE BEAUTIFUL ADVENTURE (Empire—Five Parts—Oct. 15).—The cast: Helene De Travillac (Ann Murdock); Madame De Travillac (Ada Boshell); Count Michael D'Eguzon (Edward Fielding); Andre, his son (David Powell); The Countess D'Eguzon (Kate Sergeantson); Valentin Le Barroyer (Edgar Norton); Jacques Segurin, his uncle (Carl Sauermann); Jeanne (Vera Fuller Mellish).

Helene De Travillac, a sweet little French girl, loves her handsome counsin, Andre D'Eguzon, but a scheming aunt has engaged her to Valentin LeBarroyer, a methodical, statistic-loving "stick," but wealthy. On the wedding morning Andre suddenly appears on the scene and pleads with Helene. She hesitates—a little, tears off her veil and flees with her lover to her old home in the country. There her grandmother makes the natural mistake of thinking Andre is the husband. The resulting complications are amusing.

Finally arrives the discarded Valentin, hunting for his bride. When he finds her he proves himself a man, and "The Beautiful Adventure" ends happily for the lovers.

THE CALENDAR GIRL (American—Five Parts—Oct. 15).—The cast: Mildred Manning (Juliette Day); Philip Gordon (Ashton Dearholt); Madame Lizette (Carlissa Selwynne); George Martin (Lamar Johnstone); Paula Ware (Kathleen Kirkham); Elvira Merriwell (Ruth Hanford); Tom Andrews (Sherry Hall); Willy Rand (John Dough); Mrs. Manning (Cora Drew); Mazie (Fritzie Ridgway). Directed by Rollin S. Sturgeon.

Mildred Manning, known as Middy, is an apprentice in Madame Lizette's fashionable shop. Her beauty is discovered by Madame's brother, George Martin, and she is made a model. One afternoon she tries on a rejected bathing costume and by a touch here and there makes it a creation. Madame sends her to the bathing beach to carry out a clever advertising scheme. She is pursued by a reporter and an advertising solicitor, the latter of whom has a commission from Madame to photograph the girl for calendar advertising.

In her flight the girl takes refuge in a motor car. Philip Gordon, a western lawyer, enjoying a vacation in the east, gets into the car and drives off. Middy, fearing exposure, tells him she lives in a fashionable residence and makes her escape by the servants' gate. Gordon gets the address, and when the reporter writes a story about the mysterious heiress at the beach, the young lawyer makes an appointment, only to find out that he is calling on an aged spinster. Middy is sent to the spinster's home and complications ensue. Middy objects to the use of her picture on a calendar and quits Madame Lizette. She raises money to sue to prevent the use of her photograph for advertising purposes when Gordon, tracing her through the calendar, takes the case for her. The complications into which she has become involved at the spinster's home were easily explained and Middy went west as the young lawyer's bride.

JERRY'S JAM (Oct. 18).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Peggy (Claire Alexander); Father (Sam Allen); Boozy Ben (Lester Le May).

Jerry is in love with Peggy. Her father objects to his courtship and favors a foreign gentleman, who bears the title of count. Peggy's birthday arrives, and the Count sends her a beautiful bouquet. Jerry is financailly unable to send her a suitable present, but chances on an auction where unclaimed freight of an express company is being sold.

He buys a trunk filled with silks and furs. From an absent-minded spectator he procures the necessary money to pay for his purchase, and hastens away to get an express man to deliver the package. While he is gone the trunks, of which there are several, are accidentally switched, and into an empty trunk a boozy individual falls and decides it is a good place for a nap. The wrong trunk is delivered to the girl's house. Jerry seeks safety in flight. At the corner he meets a motor cop, and seizing a motocycle dashes away. Father summons the police.

Eventually dashing down a hill Jerry sees before him a small shack marked "Powder House—Danger!" Unable to curb his speed he dashes through the walls. There is an explosion and Jerry volplanes through the air, eventually falling through the roof of the police station and landing on the sergeant's desk. They find that the individual in the trunk is not dead but merely intoxicated. The sergeant, in sampling the deadly carbolic acid, finds that it is merely Bourbon. Jerry makes love to the girl. Father discovers them in an embrace and vows vengeance as the picture fades.

cove. Father sets the dog on him as he is half way up the porch and Jay makes his escape by bribing the butcher boy to seduce the dog with a choice steak.

Father tells the young man that he may have the girl if he can get into the house. The lovers make arrangements over the 'phone. Joy organizes a fake fire company and Billie starts a conflagration in a punch bowl.

Jay is recognized through his disguise just as he is saving the fair maiden from the flames. Father chases them both into the house and pretends to call the police. Instead he summons a clergyman who masquerades as a policeman and while Billie is bidding his sweetheart a fond farewell, the minister emerges from his disguise and the ceremony is performed, father proving himself a man of his word.

FOR SWEET CHARITY (Oct. 16).—Billie takes it upon herself to raise $500 for charity, much against the advice and pleadings of her fiance. She starts her subscriptions in the building in which Jay's office is located, and as she proceeds from office to office, meets with a variety of unwelcome invitations to lunch and dinner. Despairing of procuring the subscriptions she goes to Jay's office and reports her experiences, whereupon he proceeds to administer reprimands to the offending individuals. He eventually settles a damage bill and police court account for some $500, in addition to the check for $100 which he turns over to Billie for "Sweet Charity."

GAUMONT.

REEL LIFE NO. 78 (Oct. 25).

The Rocky Mountain Jay: Because it hangs around the cook tent, this bird has been called the "camp robber." It lays its eggs in the winter time, and therefore they are in great demand as curiosities by the museums. In this picture, taken on the snow-clad crest of the continent, Enos A. Mills, the author-naturalist, directs an expedition where to locate the nest.

Then and Now; or, How High Living Cost Wins the Race: When grandfather was a boy his wages were less, but the dollar bought considerably more than it does to-day. An entertaining comparison of earnings and expenditures in 1848 and 1917 is made possible by clever double exposure.

Queer Trees of Trinidad: Three unusual trees are photographed. One of these was planted by King George V when he was a boy. The saman, or rain-tree, is so large that it takes a trolley car more than a minute to pass it. The third is a twin tree, a freak of nature, one fully grown tree growing on the top of another.

Dining on Wheels—How the American Traveler is Fed: The great railway systems now pay as much attention to the commissary as to any other branch of the service. Cooks and waiters are trained in special schools. Consequently, the traveler dines as well and as economically at a mile a minute as he does at the best hotels.

The Apparel and the Man: An animated drawing from "Life," which proves that man is not always what he seems.

Not Guilty: In this animated drawing from "Life," the violonist should have drawn the old shoes instead of Tabby.

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS NO. 79 (Sept. 29).

An Eastern Port. Another destroyer satisfactorily undergoes its speed trials. Many more are coming to rid the seas of U-boats. Subtitles: Ruthlessly this swift little warrior will hunt these demons of the deep. "All's well on the Atlantic" will soon be the sentry's cry.

New York City. One hundred alien enemies are seized by Government agents in a general round-up of suspected German spies. Sub-title: All alien enemies who aid or give comfort to America's foe will be summarily dealt with.

Parlez-Vous Francais? "Oui, oui," answer the soldier boys on Governor's Island, and they scramble to learn more French in the camp's school. Sub-titles: They will not be total strangers when they get "over there." Three cheers for their brave French allies.

London, England. Civil War veterans resident here celebrate the opening of "Eagle Hut" for the benefit of United States troops in England. Sub-titles: Admiral Sims, Commander of America's destroyer fleet, now guarding the ocean highways. The boys already "over there" are lionized by the poilus.

New York City. Mr. J. A. Berst, general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., signs a long-term contract with Miss Fannie Ward, the popular star, for her appearance in Pathe plays.

Esparto, Cal. The woman's land army helps to harvest the 100,000 tons of almonds in the immense orchards of the Golden State. Subtitles: Assorting the almonds for the hulling process, which separates the kernel from the shell. The nuts are steamed and then set out in the sun to dry. Ready for the market.

San Francisco. Human flies are daring, but J. P. Linthicum takes first prize when he scales a fourteen-story structure blindfolded. Subtitles: Up the side he slowly gropes his way, and then "over the top" he climbs, true to the spirit of American manhood.

Spartanburg, S. C. The National Guard camps are now in full swing; the engineers are rapidly preparing for the great tasks ahead. Sub-titles: Surveying the land and wig-wagging to headquarters from a handy elevation. The Guardsmen gathering logs to build a bridge. They soon hope to bridge the Rhine. The traveling machine shop does all the quick repair work in the field, and is very useful. On the march.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS NO. 80 (Oct. 3).

San Diego, Cal.—Neat and orderly—is the motto of the U. S. N., and Jackies at the Training Station frequently undergo inspection. Subtitles: Each man in trim—his outfit spick and span. Joy mingles with duty, and local girls given open-air dances for the Jackies.

New York City.—The West greets the East, and the metropolis extends an enthusiastic welcome to the visiting envoys from Japan. Subtitles: The "Fighting 69th," now the 165th of the "Rainbow Division," escorts the Mission to City Hall. Americans and Japanese—brothers in arms for the common cause. The Mission also vistis the great Miltiary Academy at West Point.

Robertson Rock, Ont.—After more than two years of ceaseless effort the steamer, Western Star, is at last saved from the might of the seas. Subtitles: A large coffer-dam had to be built to facilitate the raising of the vessel. Little remains of the decks.

Plattsburg, N. Y.—Uncle Sam is preparing his army for modern trench fighting, and the boys spend many hours a day learning to "dig in." Subtitles: Making an "approach trench" through which the men can safely reach the front lines. To support the sides, a revetment, or retaining wall, is made with a hurdle of woven twigs. Often this revetment consists of heavy wire covered with burlap. The end of a perfect day.

New Orleans, La.—Swept by hurricane winds, the waters of Lake Pontchartrain rise in violent fury and dash over the massive sea walls. Subtitles: A deserted road.

All for the Cause, is Colonel Roosevelt's inspiring message to the soldiers of the National Army when he visits Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill. Subtitles: But yesterday they were civilians. Now they are America's warriors in Liberty's struggle. General Barry, Commander of the Camp, introduces the Colonel. "You represent the mobilized manhood, courage and patriotism of America."

Buy a Liberty Bond.—The second Liberty Loan campaign is on. America calls upon her people to stand behind the soldiers in the field. Subtitles: Volunteers placard New York City with patriotic posters. A big demonstration is held at City Hall, where Mayor Mitchell speaks in aid of the Campaign. The Army behind the Army. Now is the time for loyal citizens to show their patriotism. BUY A LIBERTY BOND.

THE PAINTED DOLL (5 Parts, Oct. 14).—The Cast: Ivan Kreslof (Ivan Mozakin); His Wife (Mme. Lesinko); Tanya Lensky (Tanya Fetner); Her Husband (P. F. Sharoff). Written by A. Pawzakin. Directed by Cheslor Sabinsky.

Tanya Lensky was bored with the simple and innocent life she was leading, and longed for the luxuries of the rich. As her husband was in poor circumstances, he was unable to gratify her wishes. Tanya's husband was employed by Ivan Kreslof, a rich steel magnate, who was disgusted with society because it was quickly drawing his wife further and further away from him.

Kreslof had some particular plans which he wanted drawn, and he intrusted the work to Tanya's husband, promising him that if he was successful he would increase his wages. This being his first big opportunity, Tanya's husband determined to prove himself worthy of the confidence placed in him. So as not to lose any time Tanya's husband worked on the plans in his home. Nearing the end of his work he phoned Kreslosf and asked him to call at his home. Kreslof called that evening. There he met Tanya and was struck by her beauty.

Infatuated with Tanya, Kreslof called again, and as her husband was busy finishing the plans, he suggested that Tanya take a ride with him. Innocently she accepted his offer. Kreslof realized that Tanya's husband was in the way, so he devised a scheme to get rid of him. Explaining that the branches were in bad condition Kreslof sent him on a tour of inspection. During his absence Kreslof bought Tanya beautiful clothes and set her up in an elaborate establishment.

Tanya's husband returned and learned the bitter truth. Enraged he goes to Kreslof with the intention of killing him. As he was about to plunge the dagger into the back of Kreslof his butler rushed in and interfered. This was his chance. As the butler turned to leave the room Kreslof stabbed him, and when the police arrived he accused Tanya's husband of the crime. As he was a man of great power and influence, Kreslof was able to send Tanya's husband to prison and later have him executed.

Convincing Tanya that when his wife returned from Paris he would secure a divorce, she rested easily in her lavish surroundings. When his wife wrote and stated that his son was returning from college, this overturned all the plans. Going to Tanya he showed her the letter and explained that it was impossible for him to live up to his agreement. It was only then that the light dawned upon her that she had only been a plaything. Walking over to a large picture of herself she exclaimed, "Only a painted doll," and fell to the floor lifeless.

Kreslof tried to forget everything, but the thought of being a murderer very near caused him to go insane. Unable to stand it any longer he confessed to his wife. Fearing that her name would be ruined and that it would ruin the prospects of her son, she said there was only one way, and that was to take his own life. Her advice proved to be fatal. Kreslof was found dead in his room.

THE FATAL RING (Episode No. 16, "The Double Disguise"—Two Parts—Oct. 21).—The preceding episode left Pearl in the hands of Carslake and his men. After a fight, Pearl again secures the upper hand and is about to obtain the setting from Carslake when one of the gang, jumping from a high wall on her back, overcomes her. Carslake and his followers bind and gag her and, covering their trail as well as possible, carry her to the edge of her estate and throw her into a dangerous quick-sand. Tom, who has recovered from the blow which knocked him insensible in the fight in the armory room, rushes out seeking Pearl. He is followed by the guests at the masquerade ball given by Pearl to announce her engagement to him. He locates Pearl when all but her hands have been drawn down into the quick-sand. Hanging head downward from the branch of a tree which extended over the quick-sand, Tom manages to grab Pearl's hands and moves her part way out from the quick-sand.

With the aid of the guests he rescues her and they all return to the house. Cicely Lloyd, Carslake's friend, who has been taken for Pearl and wounded by one of Carslake's henchmen, recovers and demands the violet diamond from Pearl, Tom and the Spider, the latter having arrived to help Pearl. At a conference, which is overheard by Cicely, through the aid of Pearl's maid, who is in Carslake's employ, Tom, Pearl and the Spider plan to recover the Violet Diamond from the Priestess of the Order of the Violet God, who took it from Cicely. Cicely escapes from Pearl's house and meets Carslake at his underworld hiding-place. Carslake is furious when she tells him she lost the Violet Diamond but makes plans of his own when she reveals what she overehard. Pearl, carrying out her plan, manages to overpower the Priestess and secures the Diamond. Impersonating the Priestess she leads the followers of the Violet God to Carslake's underworld hiding-place to recover the setting. Carslake has disguised himself as one of the followers of the Violet God and, separating Pearl from the others, among whom are Tom and the Spider, also disguised, he demands the Violet Diamond. Pearl manages to break away from Carslake and hides herself on a pile which is being driven into the earth by a pile-driver. Tom and the Spider follow after Pearl and Carslake just as Carslake discovers Pearl's hiding-place and starts the pile-driver down on her head.

THE SEVEN PEARLS (Episode No. 6, "The Abandoned Mine"—Two Parts—Oct. 21).—Ilma and Harry are about to be drowned in the cellar of Perry Mason's home when the floor of it caves in and they drop into the shaft of an abandoned mine. Perry, who knows about the mine, has also taken refuge in it and is struck on the head by some of the debris. He is knocked unconscious and loses his memory. Wandering around in the mine he finds Harry and Ilma and attaches himself to them. He takes one of the Pearls in his pocket and, after playing with it for a while, throws it away. Ilma picks it up, recognizing it as one of the pearls she is seeking.

Wandering around in the mine, Harry, Ilma and Perry follow a figure with a light and come to a counterfeiters' den in the mine. Realizing their danger Harry makes Ilma and Perry conceal themselves and he also hides from the gang of counterfeiters, who are returning to their den. Perry, thinking it some sort of a childish game, comes from his hiding place and shows the gang members where Harry and Ilma are hidden. Realizing that Perry is harmless the gang allows him to wander around but bind Harry and Ilma and decide to put them out of the way for fear of being betrayed to the police by them. As the leader is about to shoot Harry, Perry, who has gone into their storeroom, returns with a can of nitroglycerine in his hand. The leader threatens Perry who, realizing from childish experiments that the substance in the can will explode, makes as though to throw it at him. The gang hastily backs out of the den and Perry throws the can of nitroglycerine after them. There is a terrific explosion and Perry, Ilma and Harry are knocked senseless by falling timbers.

RASPUTIN, THE BLACK MONK (Five Parts—Oct. 8).—The cast: Gregory Novik later known as Rasputin) (Montague Love); Inez (June Elvidge); Rodin (Arthur Ashley); Ilda (Rodin's daughter as a child) (Violet Axzell); Ilda (Robin's daughter as a grown-up) (Lillian Cook); Prince Felix (Irving Cummings); Mme. Vasta (Julia Dean); Princess Sonia (Pinna Nesbit); Czar Andre (Hubert Wilke); Czarina Katherine (Florence Beresford); Paulus (Charles Crompton); Kerensky (Henry Hull). Directed by Arthur Ashley.

Gregory Novik (afterward Rasputin) is a strange, ambitious young brute, devoid of conscience and gifted with a virile hypnotic power. Gregory is of Russian peasant origin. He is disliked by his fellow-villagers.

Gregory is passionately in love with the wife of Inez Rodin, a revolutionary leader. Disguised as a monk, Gregory leaves the village for adventure. A member of the Russian secret service strikes an acquaintance with him. Under the influence of liquor Gregory is persuaded to betray the band of revolutionists of whom Rodin is chief. The pretended monk this man started to design and build Motion Picture Projectors, for the firm of Blackton & Smith (which later became the Vitagraph Company).

In 1899 he took charge of the projection at the Eden Musee.
During his nine years' connection there he was constantly busy experimenting; tried out every possible device; discarded the unfit and held fast to that which was good.

As a result, the Eden Musee was acknowledged at that time to have the finest projection in the world—so good that when Charles Urban came over (about 1903) he said: "You are projecting my pictures better than I can do it myself in London."

In 1908 he started the Edengraph, in connection with R. G. Hollaman, who was president of the Eden Musee.

In 1909 Francis B. Cannock (for it is he) was joined by Edwin S. Porter, and the two together invented and designed the Simplex.

leads the way to their meeting place, and Rodin and the poor villagers are captured.

Gregory is then persuaded by his new friend to go to Petrograd. There Gregory, now known as Rasputin, inaugurates a new cult and finds ready followers among the superstitious and dissipated.

He preaches that not to yield to the cravings of nature is evil, and his converts include many court leaders and others prominent in Russian life. Madam Vasta, the Czarina's favorite lady in waiting, is one of those fascinated by Rasputin. When the young Czarowitch becomes ill and the doctors hold out no hope for him, Vasta urges the Czarina to call in Rasputin.

"I can save the boy's life," declares Rasputin, when he arrives, "but I must be always near him."

The Czarowitch becomes well and Rasputin is established in his own apartments in the palace. Such influence does he gain that ten years later when fellow-conspirators fear their plans may reach the ears of the Czar, Rasputin in derision shouts that he is the Czar.

The world war breaks out. Rasputin sees the chance for still greater power, provided only he can cripple the Russian army and work with Germany. He organizes a plot among the various ministers to cripple the army in the field—one minister to stop the food supply, another hindering the supply of ammunition, a third sowing discontent among the soldiers, and so on. Rasputin's ever lustful eyes see Princess Sonia and desire is kindled in his heart. But Sonia does not fall a victim to his hypnotic power. She repulses him and tells her husband of Rasputin's insulting advances.

Ilda Rodin, a baby at the time of Rasputin's attack on her mother, has grown to be a beautiful young woman. She is brought by Vasta to Rasputin's apartment in the palace. As Rasputin catches Ilda in his arms a message comes from the Princess Sonia for Rasputin to come to her at her room. Rasputin locks Ilda in a room and goes to Sonia. The message proves to be a plot, for when Rasputin arrives revolutionists seize him and prepare to send him away, a prisoner. At this moment Rodin, escaped from Siberia, and crazed by the thought that Ilda is in Rasputin's power, rushes in and kills the black monk. At night Rasputin's body is lowered into the river.

The Czar, frightened by the revolutionary tendencies indicated by Rasputin's death, signs a decree dissolving the Duma. The announcement is read to the Duma and a panic ensues among the people. Kerensky comes to the front and pleads with the Duma members to remain in session and disregard the Czar's decree.

Kerensky's eloquence wins. The Duma remains in session. The symbols of the Czar's rule are removed and the revolution is inaugurated. The Czar is arrested and exiled. And the play ends happily for its deserving personages, as the day of Russia's long-sought freedom dawns clear and bright.

SHALL WE FORGIVE HER? (Five Parts—Oct. 15).—The cast: Grace Raymond (June Elvidge); Neil Garth (Arthur Ashley); Oliver West (John Bowers); Uncle John (Capt. Charles); Tom (Richard Collins); Dick (Arthur Matthews); Paul Ellsworth (Herbert Barrington); James Stapleton (George MacQuarrie); Nellie West (Katherine Johnson); Joan (Alexandria Carewe). From the play by Charles Sarver. Directed by Arthur Ashley.

Grace Raymond and Neil Garth have grown up together and are sweethearts. Grace is innocent and affectionate. Neil drinks and is not particularly honorable. Neil tells Grace that he is going West to make his fortune and that when he does so he is going to write to her to come on. Grace consents.

A year passes, and Neil has become a drunkard and a gambler. He writes to Grace that he has become prosperous and he urges her to come out and join him. She writes that she is coming. Neil, upon receipt of her letter, turns the woman out who has been his companion in his shack.

Grace is disillusioned by Neil's appearance and the hovel to which he takes her. "But where is the minister who is going to marry us?" she questions before going into the house. Neil replies that the circuit rider will not be around until next Sunday. He quiets her fears and she enters. Inside Neil roughly catches her and kisses her. Grace declares that she is going to leave him. But outside three of the rough men who had seen her arrive, catch sight of her leaving the hovel and make after her. In terror Grace returns to the shack. There Neil tells her that she must choose between the three men and himself. She decides to stay with Neil.

A year later she has come to loathe the sight of Neil. One day Grace sees James Stapleton, a miner, struggling across the desert toward her. Stapleton is nearly dead from thirst and exhaustion. Grace takes him in. He shows her the sack of gold he has hoarded and says that it is going to set him up in business back East. Grace glances up and sees Neil peering through the window at the sack of gold. Realizing that Stapleton's life is in danger she hides him in the garret of the home. He promises to befriend her whenever the opportunity presents itself. Stapleton escapes when Neil comes to get his gold. Finding Stapleton gone and realizing that Grace has aided him to escape, Neil rolls up his sleeves to punish her. Grace knocks him senseless with a blow on the head with a bottle. Then she escapes.

Back East Grace enters a mission conducted by Paul Ellsworth. In the course of her work she meets Oliver West, with whom she falls in love. They are married, but she does not tell him of her past. West's eyes, a year later, trouble him and the doctor tells him to give them a rest or otherwise he will go blind.

Neil finds Grace and demands money, otherwise he will tell her husband her secret. Grace has just had a story accepted by a magazine and she endorses the check over to Neil. The mission minister advises her to tell West everything, but Grace dares not do it for fear the shock will make him blind. She tells her husband that she has lost the check.

After a week of debauchery, Neil writes to Grace for a hundred dollars. She does not give it to him. Joan, West's cousin, finds the note and gives it to West. Grace denies knowing anything about it. Neil comes and tells him everything. Grace says that it is true, but that she was an innocent victim. The shock makes her husband blind. He orders her out of the house.

Grace sells another story and uses the money for an operation on her husband's eyes, but arranges it so that he does not know where the money comes from. Joan administers an overdose of medicine to the baby and it nearly dies, but Grace happens to come to the house opportunely and nurses the infant back to life.

Grace is at her wit's end because she fears that her husband will never allow her to remain. She thinks of Stapleton. The minister brings him. The operation on West's eyes is successful. "Where is my baby?" is his first question. "The baby is with its mother," his sister replies. West is angered. "She saved baby's life after Joan had intentionally given it an overdose of medicine which almost caused its death," declared West's sister.

At this point, Stapleton, who has completely cowed Neil, brings him in. Neil grovels before Grace and, fearful of the punishment Stapleton will mete out to him if he does not tell the truth, tells the real story of Grace's experience in the West. West is amazed and horrified to hear of the things his wife was forced to endure and he gladly takes her back.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES CORP.

THE GHOST HOUSE (Five Parts—Lasky—Oct. 1).—The cast: Ted Rawson (Jack Pickford); Lois Atwell (Louise Huff); Alice Atwell-King (Olga Grey); Jemery Foster, the Gardener (James Neill); Spud (Eugene Pallette); Dido (Mrs. Lewis McCord); James Clancy (Horace B. Carpenter); Mrs. Rawson (Edythe Chapman); Mary Ellen Clancy (Lillian Leighton). Directed by William C. De Mille.

The old home of the Atwells is said to be haunted, and Jeremy Foster, the gardener, who is at the head of a notorious gang of thieves, does his best to keep the superstition alive. Old Atwell, upon his death, leaves the house to his great-nieces, Lois Atwell and her married sister, Alice Atwell-King, a widow. Being poor and out of employment, they decide to live in the house in spite of the gossip about its being "haunted."

Young Ted Rawson is being initiated into a nearby college fraternity, and part of his initiation demands that he spend a night in the haunted house, the occupation of which the boys are as yet unaware of. In the meantime, Spud, Foster's nephew, and two companions have robbed a bank, and Spud, with the money in a satchel, hides in the garret of the haunted house. The two young girls and the baby retire early, but they are soon aroused by Ted Rawson entering through a window.

SPEER ALTERNO CARBONS

Have Revolutionized Alternating Current Conditions

Intense Illumination. Noiseless Projection.
Wanderless Arc. Perfect Operation.
No Change in Carbon Holders.

The operators' difficulties, which included a wandering light, ghosts in the picture, sputtering of the arc, and a noise almost intolerable, have all been relegated to by-gone days.

The adoption of SPEER "ALTERNO" CARBONS, merely necessitates the proper placing of the carbons in the upper and lower holders. No new housing, no additional lamp jaws, no adapters—simply the same equipment used for other carbons.

The exceptional advantages and possibilities now afforded for alternating current counteract the arguments formerly used for the installation of elaborate and expensive apparatus for the changing of alternating current to direct. Operators and projection experts now declare that perfect projection is obtainable with alternating current equipment.

were given her by officer Clancy, a former neighbor, Lois catches Rawson and handcuffs him to a chair. This noise arouses Spud from his drunken sleep in the garret, and going down through the darkened house, he sees Lois and her sister in trailing white negligees and thinks they are ghosts. He runs to the little cabin of his uncle, the gardener, forgetting the stolen money.

Lois believes that Ted is a housebreaker, but she permits him to assist them when the baby is suddenly attacked with croup and, after a hard fight for the child's life they all fall asleep in the chairs. Early the next morning, before the girls awaken, Ted escapes and has his mother call on the girls and their colored cook, Dido, that afternoon. His mother persuades Alice and the baby to stay with her that night but Lois refuses to leave as she is hoping against hope that her "burglar" will come back and explain the mystery, as she cannot believe he is a thief.

In the meantime, the three crooks are demanding that Spud find their share of the loot, but he refuses to enter the "haunted" house again. Foster, his uncle, decides to make-up as old Atwell and frighten the girls away from their house. He meets Lois, who refuses to be frightened and is attacking her just as Ted returns. Ted locks him in a closet. Lois goes upstairs to hide the money which she found in the garret and, while she is gone, the three crooks enter from the garden and overcome Ted, although he puts up a good fight.

Lois, hearing the noise, puts on a long white robe, and comes creeping down the stairs. The robbers are terror-stricken and fly from the house, only to run into officer Clancy and some other policemen who have come to see how the girls are getting along. Lois, who had believed until now that Ted was the thief and the bank robber, is made more than happy to learn his true identity. The thieves are locked up.

A MAN'S LAW (Five Parts).—The cast: Ruth (Ruth Sinclair); Jules La Clerc (Irving Cummings); Jim Vance (Arthur Morrison); Mackenzie (Roy Applegate); Baby La Clerc (Baby Applegate).

Ruth, a young orphan living with her foster father, Jim Vance, a rough mountaineer, who had no idea of life and how it should be lived. Jules La Clerc, also a mountaineer, of whom nature might be generous enough to say "he was a man." Through a mysterious cry in the night Jules makes the acquaintance of Ruth. After caring for her through her great sorrow, Jules promises to take her to his friend Mackenzie, at the Du Bois Settlement, where her life will be a continuous ray of sunshine. She refuses, saying there is a shadow.

At the Du Bois settlement, the union of Jules and Ruth takes place. Six years elapse, and God has given them his greatest gift—a baby girl. Jim Vance, through his usual bad habits, is ordered out of La Croix Settlement. Now Jules and Mackenzie become partners, in order to enlarge the interests of the trading post.

At midnight a sound is heard by Ruth at the cash drawer. As she goes to investigate, she finds it is Jim Vance, who tells her that if she squeals, he will betray her secret. The next morning Mackenzie makes the discovery and blames Jules for stealing the money. A struggle takes place, in which Ruth intercedes, saying that she saw a man leaving the scene of the theft. Jules disbelieves Ruth and goes in search of the man. At the village tavern, Jules finds his man, Jim Vance, and starts a chase. The darkness of the night causes Jules to lose his trail. The following morning Vance, lighting a cigarette, causes a fire in the woods, which puts Jules on his trail again. After a strenuous chase the men meet face to face. Jules, victorious, faces sunshine with his wife and child forever.

ASHES OF HOPE (5 Parts, Oct. 17).—The cast: Gonda (Belle Bennett); Jim Gordon (Jack Livingston); "Ace High" Lawton (Jack Richardson); "Flat Foot" (Percy Challenger); Belle (Josie Sedgwick). Directed by Walter Edwards.

Gonda was a woman of Paluski, a western settlement in the gold country, where life was in the raw. She typified the savage abandon of the land, commanding the homage of the camp. Into this atmosphere came Jim Gordon, who did not participate in the activities. Wonda made a bet with Jim Lawton, the gambler, and one of her greatest admirers, she could interest the indifferent stranger. Lawton was to buy her a new dress if she won.

One night Gonda lured a man to drink and then to spend his money. The miner started to shoot at her, calling her "The Devil's Decoy." Gordon stepped in front of her, and the miner, hesitating, was disarmed. She later tried a make him drink. He smashed the whiskey glass from her hand. A miner saw the incident and commanded Gordon to apologize. He knocked the gun from the miner's hand and defied all his friends. A fight followed. When hit from behind with a bottle he fell. Gonda saved his life.

When she took him to his cabin she told of her love. They lived happily together until the desire of motherhood awoke in Gonda. Gordon discouraged it. Then a letter came telling Gordon he need not be a fugitive as he had not killed the man he attacked in the east. His wife wrote, enclosing her baby's shoe.

Gordon left a note of farewell without saying good-bye to Gonda. On the trail he was waylaid and robbed. Gonda was infuriated at him. She returned to the old life in the dance hall. Gordon needed money. He returned and held up the dance hall where Gonda worked, was identified and arrested. Gonda saved him from hanging by bargaining to give herself forever to gambler Lawton in exchange for Gordon's life. She did so for Gordon's baby.

WILD SUMAC (5 Parts, Oct. 14).—The cast: Wild Sumac (Margery Wilson); John Lewis, Sergeant R. N. M. P. (Edwin J. Brady); Lupine (Frank Brownlee); Armand DuFere (Wilbur Higby); Pierce DuFere (Ray Jackson); Deacon Bricketts (Percy Challenger). Directed by William V. Mong.

Jacques, a big-hearted woodsman of the Canadians of the Northwest, whose hasty action with a gun had driven him into fifteen years' exile, finds a half-breed, Lupine, wreaking vengeance on the family of DuFere. Lupine kills DuFere's son and tries to fasten his guilt on Sumac, a girl whom he had stolen in infancy after murdering her parents, DuFere's brother and sister-in-law.

Sergeant Lewis, of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, in the district looking for Jacques and the DuFere murderer, holds Sumac on the circumstantial evidence which Lupine has cunningly provided. She is seized by the people, and is about to be burned as a witch when Jacques, after trapping Lupine, rescues her from the flames. Through Lupine's squaw DeFere learns that the girl is his own niece. At the same time Lewis discovers that Jacques is the man he seeks, and the woodsman, confident of his early release, takes with him Sumac's promise to wait for his return.

ONE SHOT ROSS (5 Parts, Oct. 14).—The cast: "One Shot" Ross (Roy Stewart); Mary Sheridan (Josie Sedgwick); Jim Butler (Jack Richardson); "Shorty" (Louis Durham); Mr. Sheridan (William Ellingford); Briggs (Leo Willis). Directed by Cliff Smith.

A vigilante of the west, known as "One Shot" Ross, travels east on a stage which is held up and robbed of its gold chests. Without his guns he is knocked unconscious in a hand-to-hand conflict, and is cared for by Mary, daughter of a ranch owner, whose place is near the outlaw country.

The ranchman goes out to search for stray cattle, discovers one of his daughter's suitors in the act of dividing up the gold with a gang of rustlers, and the secret dies with him. When "One Shot" hears of the murder he impersonates a half-witted flunkey in order to get work on the outlaw's ranch. In a series of exciting adventures he collects his evidence, outwits the gang, and resumes his journey in company with Mary, who had been held captive by the outlaw.

GEORGE KLEINE SYSTEM.

THE APPLE-TREE GIRL (Edison-Perfection Pictures—Five Parts—Oct. 1).—The cast: Charlotte Marlin (Shirley Mason); Margaret (Joyce Fair); Ma'Me Bazin (Jessie Stevens); Neil Kennedy (Paul Perez).

Charlotte Marlin is left an orphan when young. Her only fortune being bonds in a dairy company and a little farm. Charlotte's aunt consents to help care for her and she is taken to their home at Penfield, where Charlotte meets her cousin, Margaret, who is considered the prettiest girl in Penfield, Charlotte on the other hand is homely. Willis Hayland, considered the wealthiest boy in Penfield, is interested in Margaret, and when Neil Kennedy, a poor boy, and Charlotte show their fondness for each other, it is only at the expense of ridicule from Margaret and her friends.

Graduation day comes at the school, and Charlotte, as well as Kennedy, pass with honors. Margaret barely passes. Nevertheless, on the day following, Margaret is featured in the local paper and her picture is printed because of the part she took in a play presented by the graduates. Charlotte's name is scarcely mentioned, and Margaret teases her. It is then that Charlotte tries to influence her life's destiny by trying to realize three problems, viz.: 1st. "How can I made everybody like me?" 2d. "How can I make myself famous?" 3d. "How can I marry a millionaire?"

Charlotte is barely started on her way to live up to the first of these three problems when the dairy company from which she derived her small income, fails. There is nothing left but the little farm. When the position of school teacher of the Marlin school is offered her, she accepts it gladly.

Charlotte succeeds with her first problem, for she learned that all she had to do was to like everybody else, and they would like her and in short time she became the idol of her pupils and everyone in Marlin Mills. Meanwhile Margaret marries Willis. Later Margaret reveals her true personality and Willis is sorry that he married her.

Charlotte's second sum is more difficult to accomplish than the first, and it is only after a year has elapsed that she is started towards mastering her second problem. Her inspiration was a newspaper article concerning a champion woman golfer, and she decides that golf is the thing that will make her famous. After considerable practice, Charlotte masters the game. Kennedy, who has not forgotten Charlotte, calls on her and is offended when she refuses his proposal, for Charlotte's third sum is that she marry a millionaire.

During vacation time Charlotte joins the New London Golf Club. The professional at the club is impressed by her performance and mentions her to the president as a desirable canidate for the coming world's championship tournament. The tournament is held and Charlotte wins the championship.

Many millionaires are members of the club, but few prove desirable. Perry Graham, however, appeals to her. The problem is how to meet him. She does so through hitting him on the head with a golf ball—supposedly an accident. The stroke was harder than intended and Perry falls to the ground. Charlotte fears she has killed him, but Perry is revived and Charlotte nurses him.

Perry falls in love with Charlotte, but Charlotte discovers many traits in him that she does not like. When Perry declares himself, she refuses him. They are on horseback—Perry has the bad taste to insist, but Charlotte tells him that love means more to her than money, although she did deliberately hit him with the golf ball because she thought she wanted to marry a millionaire—but she has decided to do otherwise.

Perry tightens his grasp on Charlotte's horse's rein which he is holding. The horse shies and runs away. Kennedy, happening along opportunely, save Charlotte's life. The old love revives and Perry is a disappointed witness to the beginning of the happiness which comes to two old friends.

Marie tells him that if she had the means she would wage battle against the oppressive tenement lords and carry on a campaign of reform.

To test her, Lloyd, whom she knows as Strange, has his lawyer transfer a fortune to her. Marie thinks the money is a legacy from a long lost relative. The girl goes to New York and does what she vowed she would do. She concentrates her fight on Lloyd and his tenements.

Ogden Deneau, Lloyd's business rival, associates himself with Marie, claiming interest in her work, but really to crush Lloyd. But Marie also has old scores to settle with Deneau, and in her plan to ruin both of these financiers enlists Strange's aid. Strange, or Lloyd, helps her gladly, and on the evening of the day the great coup is to be made, meets her. He tells Marie that Deneau is bankrupt. When she asks about Lloyd, he informs her of the deception he has practiced. At first she is furious. Later, she hears his explanation of the test nad finally agrees to start life over again with him, a life not to be marred with sordid tenements.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, INC.

THE SPOTTED LILY (5 Parts, Oct. 1).—The cast: Yvonne Lamour (Ella Hall); Sonia Maroff (Gretchen Lederer); Jean Duval (Victor Rottman); Father Anatole (Charles Hill Mailes); Angus Leeds (Wilton Taylor). Directed by Harry Solter.

Captain Franz, on a hiking trip through Brittany, seeks a night's lodgings at the home of Yvonne Lamour's parents. He becomes seeks to induce the girl to follow him to Berlin, but she disdains his advances. Yvonne loves Anatole, a village youth, but follows the dictates of her religious bent and enters a convent. Anatole enters holy orders and remains in the town where Yvonne lives in the convent. Their peaceful land is invaded by Prussians.

Learning that Yvonne is in the convent, Captain Franz invades its sacred walls and threatens the inmates. Upon his promise that he will spare the other nuns Yvonne goes with him and leaves Father Anatole to mourn. After the war Yvonne returns to the village and seeks out Father Anatole. To his care she entrusts her babe, begs him to call her Yvonne and to always protect her. The mother dies happy in the priest's promise to devote his life to the care of the child.

The years pass and Yvonne grows to girlhood, loved by Jean Duval, a village youth, whose musical soul absorbs what ambition he possesses. Father Anatole sees only good in Jean and believes that Yvonne's happiness centers in the shiftless youth.

Again war devastates the land, and before the advancing soldiers Father Anatole flees, taking with him Yvonne and Jean. The priest determines that Yvonne shall not suffer her mother's fate and goes with his two charges to America. Jean continues his shiftless ways; Yvonne devotes herself to Father Anatole, and thus the three live in modest quarters upon the scant savings the priest had brought from his homeland.

Funds becoming low, Yvonne proposes that she and Jean sing and play in cafes to earn their living as well as to support Father Anatole, now in declining health. The girl finds her own services in demand, but the cafe keepers are not impressed with Jean's "highbrow" melodies. Jean, hungry and at last desperate, pawns his violin and buys food. Yvonne has followed him to the pawn shop and secures the pledge-ticket by stealth from his pocket.

One day while in the park Jean attracts the attention of a woman who had been on shipboard when the refugees crossed to America and had listened with delight to his violin playing. She invites Jean to visit her home, and there she begins exercising the influence of her charms upon the shiftless youth. Yvonne suspects Jean, and follows him to the home of the woman.

On the day Father Anatole dies Yvonne seeks work for herself in a cafe where she had been told she might sing at any time she chose. When the guests of the place had showered her with enough money to meet demands the girl arranges for Father Anatole's burial and then redeems Jean's violin from pawn. She takes the instrument to the house where she knows she will find the youth, delivers the violin to its owner, and then Jean awakens. Yvonne's action deeply touches his selfish heart. He leaves the woman who has so fascinated him and goes with Yvonne to a life of promised happiness.

Nevertheless, Don Carlos remaine Lawton's friend and the two men leave to in spect the lost cinnabar mine. On this trip th men fight over the manner in which Lawto won the girl and Lawton is killed.

Don Carlos returns to Mrs. Lawton and tell her her husband has disappeared. That nigh Mrs. Lawton dies after giving birth to a daugh ter, Nan. He takes the child and buries him self on an isolated estate near the mine where he is for years blackmailed by "Cut Deep" Rawls and "Shoestring" Drant, who know o the death of Lawton.

The outlaws who killed Don Carlos and stol half the chart of the location of the mine, seiz Yaqui Joe, Don Carlos' old servant, and seek by torturing him to make his reveal the location of the mine, which now belongs to Nan. They tie him to a tree and prod him with knives and burn his feet hoping to force him to speak.

THE LOVE DOCTOR (Five Parts—Oct. 8).—The cast: Dr. Ordway Brandt (Earle Williams) Blanche Hildreth (Corinne Griffith); Stephen Elliot (Webster Campbell); Dr. John Cutler (Evart Overton); Rose Deming (Patsy De Forest); Claire Deming (Adele De Garde); Hildreth (Frank McDonald). Written by George P. Dillenback. Directed by Paul Scardon.

Dr. Brandt is a surgeon noted for his marvelous skill in brain surgery. He is in love with Rose Deming, a young girl in whom sex instinct apparently is not developed. On the other hand he is the object of deep infatuation on the part of Blanche Hildreth, the young wife of an invalid husband, who abandons all restraint in her efforts to attract him.

Rose is injured in an automobile accident, and her only chance for life depends on an operation for concussion of the brain. It is then that Dr. Brandt conceives the idea of transferring to her brain cells from the brain of Blanche, hoping thus to rouse in the former the love which he feels for her. By drugging a cup of tea, he gets Blanche into the same hospital with Rose and in secret and perilous operations inter-changes brain cells.

Science, however, overshoots its mark. Rose becomes the girl of unrestrained passions. She responds to the doctor's feelings and they become engaged, only to fall madly in love with another and run away with him, leaving the surgeon to the tender sympathies of the other subject of his scalpel.

Months follow and detectives find Rose in a resort in the slums. Her sister and friends take her away, her mind blank and within a few hours of death. Dr. Brandt, his skill as a surgeon taken from him by grief and remorse, is summoned to the hospital. His former assistant sees in an operation a chance to save Rose.

"Remove all moral weakness from her brain and return it to mine," he orders the surgeon. Rose lives many contented and useful years in a convent and Dr. Brandt becomes the husband of the woman he had sought to save from the gutter.

Flickerless Light with this Lamp

NATIONAL MAZDA

It has been certain from the beginning that there would one day be a NATIONAL MAZDA lamp with which motion pictures could be projected at a practical cost.

Here it is.

This lamp gives an absolutely flickerless light!

It sharpens and steadies the pictures. Once focused, it requires no adjustment. It leaves the operator "nothing to watch but the film," and he is therefore able to devote all his attention to giving you better pictures.

It reduces the fire hazard. It does not, like other illuminants used in projecting pictures, contaminate and overheat the air in the operator's booth and threaten his health.

And it saves money, besides. It saves two-thirds of your current, saves on condensing lenses, saves on carbons, saves on adjustments and repairs.

Because of these many advantages, NATIONAL MAZDA will rapidly supplant the older light-sources in motion picture projection—just as it has supplanted them practically everywhere else.

For full information about this new lamp or for help on any theater lighting problem, write your supply house or Nela Specialties Division, National Lamp Works of General Electric Co., 138 Nela Park, Cleveland, O.

WHITE
A. C. Special Carbon

For Motion Picture Work

No Expensive Change in Lamp Fixtures Required to Obtain Pure White Light and Noiseless Operation with Alternating Current

The new White A. C. Special Carbon for motion picture work has proven conclusively that alternating current can still be used to great advantage where D. C. is not available. This new carbon eliminates entirely the old roaring noise of the A. C. arc.

Their introduction has insured the best light for motion picture work without the installation of expensive transforming apparatus. Take out the old A. C. carbons, put in the new White A. C. Specials and the improvement is immediately apparent. No more eye fatigue, no more roaring noise. Perfect screen definition for every picture and every audience satisfied.

Nothing will convince you of the economical possibilities of these carbons better than a trial. A. C. operators the country over recognize them as the final solution of the A. C. problem in motion picture work.

Write for our new booklet describing these White A. C. Special Carbons the National-Silvertip combination is the standard everywhere. Silvertip means perfect projection the country over.

With these two carbons, both unique in their fields, and designed especially for use with A. C. and D. C., we can fill every carbon requirement in the motion picture industry!

"The Co-Respondent"

Produced by Ralph Ince from the stage play by Alice Leal Pollock and Rita Weiman, and now running at the Broadway Theatre, New York.

"The Co-Respondent" will be rightly termed twice acceptable because it was accepted first by Jewel Productions and next by the Broadway Theatre.

Acceptance by The Broadway means that everything in valuing a picture that can be done has been done. The box-office then tells the story.

"The Co-Respondent" is an unqualified success A Broadway Theatre success. Ask the box-office—read the papers.

The appealing character to whom Elaine Hammerstein adds her own natural lovableness is that of a girl agonizingly placed at the mercy of an outraged wife and an unscrupulous husband—while Duty insists on such exposure of her curious misfortune as Love will never tolerate.

"The Co-Respondent" is, in every sense of the word, a box-office play.

UNIVERSAL DRAMAS

Released Week of Nov. 5

"The Ghost Girls,"

Three-reel Gold Seal, featuring lovely Donna Drew will prove a strong attraction. The "ghost girls" is a boarding school society whose members agree that the girl who has the greatest adventure during vacation shall be president the next term. Donna is a scapegrace and is suspended for a prank. She meets with adventures in the city that will keep your audiences keyed up to the climax which includes a charming romance.

"There Goes the Bride,"

with J. Warren Kerrigan. So all your girl patrons will envy the bride in this charming two-reel Victor comedy-drama which is full of pep and action. J. Warren proves himself a regular guy and gets the girl, you bet. This will play to capacity.

"The Strange Accomplice"

Lena Baskette Feature, two reels, gives that charming little actress-dancer a wonderful opportunity. Her strange accomplice is no other than Joe Martin, the "monk," and a wicked crook forces them to enter and rob wealthy homes. How Lena found a home and was cleared of a suspected theft by the sagacity of Joe leads up to a climax that is a regular punch. This is a distinct novelty. Book it.

The One Best Bet of the Week

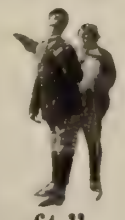
NEAL HART in "The Trail of No Return" with Eileen Sedgwick makes this two-reel 101-Bison the one best bet of the week by virtue of an unusually strong story and a series of swift dramatic actions. Neal is a stranger in the camp and when Joe starts to take the tenderfeet, Eileen and her father, into the bandits' country, ostensibly to see a mine, Neal's enmity casts suspicion upon him. Joe steals the travelers' valuables and Neal, the stranger, is accused. The picture has to do with Neal's heroic rescue of the party and his final vindication. It is full of the real atmosphere of the West and has punch and pep enough for a much longer subject. Book this by all means.

The equal of many a high priced five reel feature and better by far than a lot of them.

Greatest on Earth—UNIVERSAL Comedies

Released Week of Nov. 5. Book through Universal Exchange, or Universal Film Mfg. Co., Carl Laemmle, Pres. 1600 Bdwy., New York.

"Double Dukes" is a two-reel L-KO that is all joy. Featuring those live ones, Eddie Barry, Eva Novak, Chester Ryckman and Bob MacKenzie, it rollicks along at a swift pace, with the funniest kind of adventures of the two dukes. It is a screaming comedy that will crowd your theatre and make the fans holler for more of the same.



"Caught in the Draft,"

one-reel Joker with Dave Morris, is a timely laugh-provoker showing the humorous side of an army medical examination. The picture shows Dave taking the lung test. It is very much out of the ordinary with a lot of original funny business that will send the merry tinkle of coins into your box-office.

"Eddie Get the Mop"

is another one-reel Joker that will hit the fans squarely on their funny bone. Henry Murdock and Mattie Coment do a burlesque strong man and woman act that is punctured with laughing spots thruout. Get this and give the mans a good time. Please take notice that you can't lose picking from the comedy bill this week.

"Water on the Brain"

makes that funny Joker comedian William Franey, work as fast as any living comedian in captivity ever worked in a one-reel comedy. The result is that he has crowded more solid entertainment into this laugh getter than you ever saw before. You know Franey. You know he is there with the comic stuff always.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

Shorty Hamilton Features

GENTLEMEN:

I take this means of answering the many hundreds of your splendid letters praising the last series of SHORTY HAMILTON FILMS. There have been so many requests for five-reel features of Shorty that I am at present producing a "corking" good story of this class. At present writing I have many flattering offers as to a market for releasing same. As soon as decided I will announce later by personal letter the exchange that will handle our films in your territory, giving the details.

In conclusion, I am deeply grateful for the enthusiastic expressions contained in your letters. I am answering them personally as fast as I can. I am out to give you thrilling heart-interest stories that will bring you box office results. I have surrounded myself with the best brains and intend to spend my money on high-priced actors who will move in powerful stories, filled with action, and in contradistinction to other so-called "features," which depend on expensive settings and long drawn out narrative built on demand of "Stars" who look more to the promotion of their illustrious names than the entertainment of the audience.

Sincerely and gratefully yours,

W. H. CLIFFORD.

My dear Mr. Brenon:

Of all the publicity matter coming to my desk there is none that gives me as much pleasure as that sent out by yourself and Mr. Johnson. I thoroughly agree with your idea of making the Director responsible for his production and then giving him the credit. We have played all your productions up to the date and shall never forget that rare old classic made abroad "Ivanhoe." Your last production we played three weeks ago and it went very well. Three of four of these productions and there would be no need of advertising a star, the name of Brenon would be enough. We featured it in all our advertising of "The Lone Wolf" and fully believe that the next Brenon picture we show, that your name will draw just as well if not better than the Stars.

We are much interested in "The Fall of the Romanoffs". Will you kindly advise us when you know who is to be the purchaser in this territory.

With kind personal regards and wishing you the best of success in your coming venture, I am

Sincerely yours,

A NEW STAR OF POWERFUL PERSONALITY

Once in a generation there flashes upon the theatrical sky a personality so powerful—so winning and engaging—so skilled in the dramatic arts—that instantly his success is a new factor to be reckoned with by producers, exhibitors and public. Such stars are real, not made. Such stars, after their initial presentation, make such tremendous strides into the affections of the public as to require no outside influence to become an unparalleled box-office attraction. Such a star is Monroe Salisbury, appearing exclusively in BLUEBIRD Photoplays.

MONROE SALISBURY

Appearing in two exceptional BLUEBIRDS—"THE DESIRE OF THE MOTH" by Eugene Manlove Rhodes, and "THE SAVAGE," both directed by Rupert Julian. Now ready. Book through your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or BLUEBIRD Photoplays (Inc.), 1600 Broadway, New York.

FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE WORLD

SINCE the great clash of nations made patriotic drama a subject for the motion picture screen, there has never been such a photo-panorama as "FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE WORLD," Captain Edwin Bower Hesser's soul-gripping story of humanity in its grapple of life and death.

In this mighty eight-reel production you see feats of human courage almost beyond credence—how your American youth and manhood behaves under fire—how your Canadian neighbors to the north of you mobilized and went into action in behalf of the Motherland.

Watching the patient, brave women of the Red Cross take their places of duty near the men of the Allied Armies you thrill as the entire American nation thrilled as 30,000 women paraded down Fifth Avenue, New York, proving woman's gigantic role in the present world-conflict.

Feats of daring to set your blood a-tingle; thousands of men giving their all in defense of a nation's honor; a great crisis that made even cowards transform before your eyes into heroes deserving of decorations for bravery.

Under a policy of wide open bookings every exhibitor in America has an equal chance to get this great production for his theatre, and a prompt decision now makes "FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE WORLD" available in any Goldwyn exchange in North America.

Magnificent lithographs and accessories will enable every exhibitor to challenge the attention of the public and bring audiences flocking into picture theatres everywhere. This big feature can be booked only through the offices of

GOLDWYN DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION

16 East 42d Street New York City

EXHIBITORS will find that "FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE WORLD" will be a tremendous box-office success because it makes audiences lose themselves in a great wave of patriotism. It makes you want to cheer. It makes you feel the thrill of battle.

It makes you realize and appreciate the bravery of your own American fellow men, who eager to get to the front, enlisted under alien flags to strike quicker blows at the enemy. It starts your feet moving in the darkness of a picture theatre like the clashing accompaniment of a Sousa march.

If a motion picture can thus affect cold, critical, flaw-finding exhibitors, try for a moment to imagine its effect upon the audiences—the great American public—who are to see it. When the big moments of the picture come your audiences will feel like going "over the top" with our boys in olive drab.

"FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE WORLD" is a great war story—a great love story—a story to make you feel prouder than ever of your country. It is a story that tests the mettle of mankind, for in it you see men plunge into a living hell to uphold the traditions of their line and keep their honor clean.

The quicker you book "FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE WORLD" in your theatre, the quicker and bigger will be your profits. There has never been a feature that could be advertised more powerfully to the public than this one or one with a more legitimate power of audience-attraction.

Trade prints are in the hands of all Goldwyn Pacific Coast and mid-western offices and all branches immediately will be equipped with prints for exhibitor showing. The surest way to get first rights to this picture is to send a telegraphic reservation now.

There's Another Tremendous Value in "THE MANX-MAN"

EXHIBITORS everywhere know the tremendous author-value contained in Hall Caine's name and reputation.

And all exhibitors know the immense box-office value of any Hall Caine story, especially "The Manx-Man."

There is another tremendous box-office asset in director-value. George Loane Tucker, the director of this great production, has never made a failure. Your public knows this. Your public expects and receives from him dramatic quality and power in production.

All of these assets are at your command in this great production that has proved its drawing value.

Why "Sunshine Alley" Is a Great Exhibitor Picture

BECAUSE, in this story, Mae Marsh is more beautiful than she ever has been in any other motion picture in her film career.

Because, in this story, Mae Marsh is supported by Robert Harron, thus reuniting one of the famous "teams" of the screen.

Because there is no other picture that can be mentioned in which the lighting and photography ever equalled that in this production.

Because it is a wonderful, sweet, clean and wholesome love story containing that sincere and human touch—that genius that converts small things into big things.

This is a picture for box-office money.

The Return to the Screen of a World-Famous Star

MABEL NORMAND'S drawing power is greater than that of any comedienne in the world. Everywhere she is a favorite. Japan, Australia, India—the magnitude of her daily mail would amaze you. Every State in the Union pours in upon her daily its messages of affection and approval.

Goldwyn gives this world-known star finer stories by greater authors than have ever before furnished her with material, and realizes upon her beauty and artistic capacities in a manner that will astonish her millions of admirers.

In celebration of her triumphant return to the screen after a year's absence

presents:

MABEL NORMAND

in

Joan of Plattsburg

By Porter Emerson Browne

the story of a girl whose "vision" resulted in the exposure and punishment of spies plotting the downfall of the nation.

This forthcoming production will be greeted with delight by the great American public.

Why "Joan of Plattsburg" Will Attract Audiences

MABEL NORMAND is back again on the screen—lovelier, funnier, more rollicking and buoyant than ever. She returns in the role of an asylum orphan whose hearing of "voices" saves her country from danger.

This is the joyous type of story United States Government officials approve for release during the serious days of war and as indicative of this approval you will find that Mabel Normand is supported by thousands of American soldiers in scenes taken at the great Plattsburg Army camp.

Porter Emerson Browne, the author of the story, is one of America's greatest humorists and he has builded his scenario carefully to give Mabel Normand the greatest opportunity of her career to show her genius as an actress and comedienne.

Goldwyn has kept its promise to make this little screen idol even more popular and beloved than ever before. Your public is sure to say "'Joan of Plattsburg' is Mabel Normand's greatest picture."

Madge Kennedy a National Favorite from the Start

NO months of waiting to attain popularity—her wonderful personality and her first picture placed her at the top in public liking. Never before have critics been so enthusiastic about a new screen personality.

In "Nearly Married," Edgar Selwyn's great stage hit, Madge Kennedy again scores a tremendous success and enlarges her place in the affections of motion picture audiences.

Goldwyn knew when it brought this beautiful girl and famous comedienne from the stage to the screen that she would at once take her place as a leader, and exhibitors have found that she not only appealed to all the regular picture audiences but that she possessed the power to bring her enormous theatrical following along with her.

Each Madge Kennedy play is the work of a world-known author; each is filled with healthy laughter and each gives her the same splendid opportunities that she had in "Twin Beds," "Fair and Warmer" and "Baby Mine."

Check off the "Madge Kennedy days" as eventful days for your theatre.

Mr. Meyer Cohn, Manager, George Kleine Exchange,
183 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco, Calif.

Dear Sir: In my opinion Perfection Pictures inaugurate the most notable epoch in the history of motion pictures. Through your courtesy I have recently reviewed "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," "The Awakening of Ruth," "Pants," "Fools for Luck," and "The Fibbers." Each one of these pictures has that light, clean, pleasing quality which may be characterized as the finest type of real entertainment, and collectively they constitute the highest standard of unexcelled service to the exhibitor. And I am delighted that the Franklin Theatre holds the first franchise on the Pacific coast for Perfection Pictures, which means Perfection Service in quality entertainment. Yours truly,

G. G. THORNTON, Manager Franklin Theatre

What we like about Kate Price is her jovial disposition—until it isn't. And then we like her for the heartfelt way in which she gets peeved. We endorse the way she discourages a flirtatious hubby (Billy Ruge). For he is such in their pictures. There is nothing mincing about Kate as she tears into Billy with a rolling pin. And the Promised Land is more than a beautiful mirage when she belts him with a brick, the lizard. This conjugal aurora borealis occurs in the Sparkle comedy called "Week-End Shopping."

Again "O. Henry" in the Red-Blooded West

The Shooting of Bildad's Leading Citizen by the Boy Desperado from Gotham

"LAW AND ORDER"

A story in which the traditional aspects of "Law and Order" are brilliantly exploited is this week's O. Henry masterpiece done into pictures. It is a snappy, strong two-reeler.

It is the chronicle of kaleidoscopic mutations in the aspect of law—as interpreted by those that have the interpreting. How the law of pride crumbles under the law of kinship is the main theme. It is great stuff—rude, elemental, human stuff—the great animal, Man, as personified in the untamed American—the native spirit standing stripped in the O. Henry atmosphere of biting raillery and fine understanding.

Facts and Comments

THERE certainly is good and sufficient ground for the contention that the Government has, possibly unintentionally but none the less surely, discriminated against this industry in the schedules carried by the new War Tax. It must be remembered that the exhibiting end of this industry is being badly hit by the withdrawing of so many men for active military service, thereby greatly reducing the attendance at our theaters of themselves and their families. Over against this actual loss, we know that many other lines of trade are being greatly benefited by the present preparations for war. The shoe and leather business, the woolen, cotton and clothing industries, all branches of agriculture and food and provision dealing; the coal, steel, railroad and many other lines of endeavor are being benefited by a greater volume of business, while the moving picture industry from its very nature is going to suffer from a considerable decline in actual volume of business. There is no begging the question in this line of reasoning but a plain statement of actual facts that this whole industry has to face and careful consideration of the matter would have shown the inadvisability of adding to the present burdens of the low priced theaters. The first proposition to exempt all admissions under twenty-five cents was a much more wise and practical solution and should have been adopted.

THE appointing of three members of a Cinema Commission to go to Europe by President Wilson is another excellent example of the realization of the value of the moving picture on the part of our chief executive and his advisers. Moving pictures of the work being done in this country will demonstrate actual conditions to friend and foe alike more conclusively and more convincingly than all the papers and books that could be printed. For the proper handling and distribution of this weapon of offense and defense what more sensible action than the selection of men who are experts in moving picture work to assist the Government with their years of knowledge and experience. Is this not another encouraging example of the directness and thoroughness with which the American Government is tackling the multitudinous problems now confronting it.

REPORTS just to hand from Cleveland advise that arbitration between exhibitors and operators has just ended in agreement on a flat rate, thereby doing away with previous scales of various salaries depending upon nature of theater. This would certainly seem to be a step in the right direction and an improvement on the scales published in a recent issue, showing what the New York operators' Local desired to put into effect. Different scales for the same work in theaters of various sizes and admission rates does not seem a just basis on which to figure and will always, it would seem, be a source of dissatisfaction to competent operators employed in the smaller and lower priced houses. In this connection we take the opportunity to say that those who presume that the Moving Picture World will ever uphold the "Nothing to arbitrate" policy in regard to questions of this sort are making a grave mistake.

READERS who purchase their copies on the newsstands will confer a favor if a number of them at various points will advise us as to just which day of the week they are able to find the Moving Picture World on their local stands. We believe that the reader who sends his subscription to us and has his paper mailed direct will always receive his paper at least a day earlier than it can reach the newsdealer, but we desire to secure the earliest possible newsstand distribution as well and the above information will help. Thanks in advance.

BEWARE! This industry again seems to have attracted the stock promoter, if we may judge from two separate pieces of promotion literature that reached us this week. Giving a list of six or eight of the best known productions, one of the circulars naively proceeds to say that "it is reported" that profits of from 700% to 3,000% were realized on each of them. It then proceeds to intimate that its $1.00 stock might therefore earn anywhere from $10.00 to $30.00. The second promotion circular has the effrontery to quote from the literature put out by another notorious stock promotion scheme of two or three years ago and against which we warned our readers at the time.

Audience Contagion

By Louis Reeves Harrison

IT is like that of a whole nation. It does not get under way of its own accord until it is given a push by the intelligent portion. A similarity of the collective mind is that it lives in the present—the average individual cannot see beyond himself—there is nothing new under the sun for him—his vision is limited to the stage of development he has reached—he rarely realizes that he is a creature of evolution, each step of which developed something new in that human makeup. The consciousness of the average individual is that of passive mass consciousness until intelligent appeal is made to common needs and common sensibilities such as we often find collectively expressed in an audience attending the picture show.

What does that audience think of the exhibition? What starts it going, stimulates interest, awakens inspiration? The same old thing, or something new? Repetition, or variety? A great deal depends upon what is vital. We are all interested in our own material development, in our progress as individuals and as a people, in our habits and customs, in our social organization, in the many institutions we have set up and are supporting, military, industrial, economic and educational. Some of us adhere stubbornly to the established. Others are weary of it and eagerly searching for improvement.

How are these diverse elements to be reconciled? One believes a certain law should be enforced. Another believes it is rankly unjust. The play contains an attack on that law. The question can be answered best by an illustration. The early settlers in this country were from many nations, men of differing habits, customs and views. How were these people brought into a sympathy of feeling and purpose?

It comes in the nature of a surprise to the superficial student of history to learn how few people in this country then really wanted to change from the old forms of government, especially if it involved war and personal discomfort. A few human dynamos did the whole thing. A few men of large vision, dreamers they were, gave the necessary push, started the momentum, which resulted in a contagion of patriotism and eventually brought into existence the form of government we now enjoy.

That was over a century ago—we have almost forgotten it—and we have forgotten those who declared against anything new, who worried about innovation for fear it would disturb business. We have those same old tories with us now in the moving picture business, and those same old tories are in the moving picture audiences. It is hard to convince them of anything outside of the little they could see from some small hollow of egotism in which they have been born and brought up.

It requires intelligence to lead them out of the hollow and up the hill to greater heights, where the view is more extended, where their own outlook will be broader, if they have eyes to see and brains to comprehend. But we cannot appeal to such people with the explicitness of logical argument—their minds are closed to intellectual products—so we use instead the guidance of sentiment mingled with insight. We fill a story with the vivid details of human experience, dramatic forms which arouse intellectual conviction through feeling. The mass mind is a close observer of facts and can be stimulated by fantastic realism to a sentimental, if feeble, grasp of a truth never before understood, a first spark of audience contagion.

Whether in the gory combats of cowboys, or in the vanity fair of super-society, the audience demand is for a swift and forceful presentation of life, an impression created by trenchant and sensational means. Success in stimulating that audience mind comes to those who address its susceptibility with curiosity-arousing novelty, with high-strung suspense, with the intense clashing of opposed forces. The collective responsiveness is aroused by the elemental traits of human nature, but it must be aroused to some purpose for lasting effect.

The audience mind is a child mind in its love of variety, and it has but a vague idea of its own trend until shown the way through a glamor of sentiment by a still, small voice of reason and common sense. But once the movement is rightly started, sanctified by intelligence, made forceful by good judgment, made persuasive by good taste, cold and skeptical reflection in the audience mind is replaced by warm and sympathetic interest. The sense of reality is satisfied in careful details of treatment, no matter how imaginative the story motive.

An audience becomes fickle and obstinate when the settings are bare of semblance to the expected, when conduct is inconsistent and incongruous, when character impulses are false to experience, and this is why capable critics lay stress on what might seem at a glance to be unimportant. These fine details of realism play their part in affecting audience susceptibility, as do symbols in stirring audience imagination. They are necessary to favorable prepossession of a mixed body of people and to the spread of contagion. The crowd mind is a prey to an illusion that the story must be true to life, a remarkable illusion when closely examined.

It is not the tame, colorless and disorganized life that most people are compelled to live which provides material for a successful story, and it can be fairly suspected that imagination plays a part when people relate incidents in their past careers. If we held a mirror up to the daily round most of us follow, the reflection would be one of monotony to an audience. Practically every story of strong appeal is a well-ordered and carefully constructed work of the author's imagination. It is pure fiction given the semblance of reality in some cases, in others sensing our dreams, desires and aspirations.

In that "it takes us away from ourselves" the absorbing story is adroit fiction. It galvanizes some of our half-dead emotions with an intensity of movement and feeling such as real life rarely presents in concentrated form, but the presentation must have a certain plausibility in the matter of details to be convincing and increase the contagion its purely romantic interest arouses. The real story of humanity lies in a revelation of human traits under the stress of intense dramatic conditions, with a subcurrent of motive beneath all action.

Audience contagion is reached in much the same way as the spirit of patriotism, so the new art, like our new form of government, should become one of liberal culture and free individual expression. It has made laborious efforts and slow advances because of old intolerance and stale prejudice, but that is also the story of our social progress. Almost the same conventional stupidity which has obstructed our progress as a people delays the growth of our young art to an age of reason, puts a taboo on creative vigor and hinders the sway of common sympathy.

Contagion of enlistment, of patriotic support, of national spirit, must be started with a "zip" to get it under way. So must the screen story. And that "zip" is exactly what nearly all old stuff lacks.

Topical Jottings

By Sam Spedon

IN answer to the question: "why don't you write some more of that peppy stuff?" we wish to state that when occasion presents itself we will do so without hesitation. We are taking our job seriously, not too seriously; neither do we take ourself too seriously. We try to keep apace with current business happenings and up to the minute if possible. We do not believe in traveling in a beaten path; we try to be here, there and everywhere to cover the broadest field of observation and keep ourselves and readers in touch with the leading questions of the industry from an editorial viewpoint. We do not wish to harp upon the same subject all the time. Therefore, we try to vary our style and texts and treat our subjects as we consider they deserve to be handled. Business matters have to be treated more or less seriously and thoughtfully while personal idiosyncrasies and faults allow of a free play of one's own expression of feelings and naturally permit of more or less display of "pep." Hereafter you will know the reason why and not misinterpret our earnestness to say the right thing in the right place.

Will Adjust Itself.

There seems to be an inclination on the part of the distributors and producers to meet the question of the tax on films fairly and equitably. It is a question whether there will be a material increase, if any, in rental prices of pictures to the exhibitors. This opinion is not based on supposition; it is gathered from the expressions of some of the distributors. As soon as the producers can figure and decide just what percentage of waste and discard is generally connected with each thousand feet of production, they will be able to calculate definitely the cost of production and just what they can or may be obliged to do under the circumstances.

A Great Honor.

The election of four American cinema commissioners by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and their appointment by President Wilson, is one of the greatest distinctions ever conferred upon an industry. The commissioners, as you have already been informed, will distribute American pictures among the encampments of three allied countries of Europe, namely: France, Italy and Russia, to visualize the activities of the United States in the world's great war. The President recognizing the universal language of motion pictures, knows that they will bring before these nations facts that could be taught in no other way, more directly and forcibly than word or pen. J. E. Brulatour of the Eastman Company is chairman of the commission, located in America, to select, look after the shipping of all pictures and see that the supply equals the demand. P. A. Powers of the Universal Company will go to France, F. J. Marion of the Kalem Company will go to Italy and W. W. Irwin of the Vitagraph Company will go to Russia. The commission will act in co-operation with George Creel, national publicity manager, and J. R. Mott, general secretary of the Y. M. C. A.

All Can Help.

At the meeting of the National Association when the American cinema commissioners were elected to represent the Government in the distribution of motion pictures in Europe, we could not help thinking what great opportunities some men have. We felt like volunteering our services when volunteers were called for, but—the men selected are men who can afford to sacrifice more or less time and money to do patriotic service, men who have been financially successful enough to command attention, men of fine appearance, whose personality will probably impress others with the importance of their missions and whose positions in the industry should engreat, but we can all help "keep the home fires burning until the boys come back." No man is greater than his opportunities and every man who does his duty in that position, no matter how humble, to which it has pleased the Lord to call him, is a very desirable and useful citizen.

No General Action on 10% Tax Yet.

There are a number of theaters throughout the country where admission prices have already been advanced, to meet the high cost of films and overhead. We were told that all along Broadway in New York City that prices had been increased and the minimum price of admission was twenty-five cents. To satisfy ourselves we gave that thoroughfare the "North and South" from 42nd street to 125th street and made the following notations: Rialto, 15, 25, 50; Strand, 15, 25, 50; Park, premier showing, 25 and 50; Circle, 10 and 15; Photoplay, 10 and 15; Eighty-first Street Theater, 10, 15, 25; Keith's Colonial, vaudeville and pictures, 25 to 75; Loew's, vaudeville and pictures, 10 to 25; Fox Nemo, matinees 15, evenings 25; Olympia, matinees 15 and 25, evening 15, 25 and 35; Riverview, matinee 15, evenings 25, raised prices Sept. 1; Keith's Riviera, vaudeville and pictures, matinees 15 to 50, evenings 25 to 75; Japanese Garden, 15 to 35; Adelphi, 10 to 25. Up to Saturday, Oct. 13, there seems to have been no general action taken to advance prices on account of the 10 per cent. war tax on admissions and no intention to lower the standard of pictures to be shown. Very probably we will have more to say on this subject as reports come in after the method of collecting the ten per cent. tax is put in operation.

One Way of Doing It.

We know a manager in a small city thirty miles from New York, of 8,000 inhabitants and two theaters, who has a star feature day twice a week, Wednesday and Saturday, for which he charges 15 cents admission, five cents in advance of other days, and he is making it pay. He tried this as an experiment, securing the features as early as possible after their metropolitan premier showing, just to see if the people were willing to pay for up-to-date pictures. Of course, this manager is a real showman, knows how to advertise and keep his theater in first class shape, makes it inviting, comfortable and attractive. His patrons appreciate his efforts to run a place creditable to the town and are giving them their hearty co-operation and support.

Setting the Pace.

We attended the opening of Crandall's Knickerbocker theater in Washington, D. C., last Saturday night. We feel like eulogizing upon it. Everything about this theater is strictly up-to-date; pictures, seats, decorations, ushers, orchestra and everything else are of the best, even the banquet after the performance and the company of celebrities present were notable. There was much to expatiate upon, but we won't. The whole affair made us think what a pity it is that all motion picture theaters are not like this one. It certainly sets the pace. Mr. Crandall had a great opportunity in establishing the Knickerbocker in Washington and he has made the most of it. The location is in a swell neighborhood of big apartments and fine homes. We can't all have big theaters, conditions do not warrant it, but we can all make our houses as attractive as possible and we should pattern as far as possible after the real showman managers and learn how they do it. If we are willing to grovel along or haven't the ability and means to show progress, we can make up our minds somebody else will, if conditions and patronage warrant it. We must watch out and be on keen edge if we wish to be in the running of the future and keep up with the development of the exhibition end of the industry. You have got to be a live one or you'll be a dead one.

Old Plots Made New

By Edward Weitzel.

THE magician in "Aladdin" went around exchanging new lamps for old; by the wizardry of the playwrights' art old plots are dipped into the fountain of youth and come out, to all appearances, fresh and new. This is especially fortunate for the makers of moving picture plays. If the old themes could not be used over and over again and given the semblance of newness, screen drama would long ago have exhausted its story supply. At the rate that the most vital element in motion picture plays is being utilized, it is necessary to obtain plot material from every available source. Dumas' famous remark, "I take mine own wherever I find it!" must, in a broad sense, be appropriated by the screen—since original material is scarcer than the dental equipment of the greedy but toothless hen. Furthermore, any lack of originality will not be questioned by the average spectator, if the playwright knows how to choose skillfully from the storehouse of old plots and to adapt his story to modern conditions.

A reason for this is pointed out in an article by Bruce Barton in "Every Week," in which he quotes the philosophic and witty Mr. Dooley, as follows: "Lookin' around me, I see many great changes takin' place; but lookin' back fifty years, I see hardly any changes at all." The editor adds: "It is necessary to take a long look; to realize that human nature does not change; that in any age the same set of circumstances will produce the same results, and that, slowly but surely, certain great principles are working themselves out in the world."

That explains why there are no new plots for the story teller. The primitive passions are still the same, and human beings of all ages are actuated by the same desires, the same hopes and the same fears. Skilled technic is the only means by which the playwright can make the spectator forget that he is looking at an "oft told tale" and convince him of the reality of the life shown on the screen. This also explains why the clown in the circus tells the same jokes and dispenses the same brand of humor, season after season. Also why the bits of business which his forebears used before him have been faithfully copied to the great profit of the famous Mr. Charles Chaplin. People have always laughed at such antics and always will—if they are given the Chaplin touch.

Reference is occasionally made to the moving picture plays of great originality and purpose that the future holds in store. From the "showmanship" side of the matter, the screen is more in need of one hundred five-part photoplays of the popular brand—entertaining stories of ordinary humans—than of any epoch making masterpiece. When the time is ripe for such a picture it will be forthcoming and will meet the approbation it deserves; but the demand for good five reelers will not be affected in the least, and they will still be the most important feature of the picture maker's output.

And the more drama they possess, the greater their chances for success! The principal reason why so many old stage plays have been adapted to the screen is because they contain drama, more or less—drama in its technical sense. And no screen playwright need hesitate to seize upon any theme, however old, nor employ any stage device, however ancient. All he requires to turn out a successful scenario is the dexterity that will enable him to give his work the appearance of freshness; and to have the good fortune to select material containing that elusive something which determines the fate of his play and which no man is able to recognize until his task is completed and he reads the confirmation of his hopes in other men's eyes.

Damn! Damned!! Damnedest!!!

THIS is not profanity by any means so far as the writer is concerned; it is simply recording some lessons learned from the screen. The writer is not an exhibitor, yet for several months he has been engaged running special exhibitions in aid of the Red Cross, the Liberty Loan and other good causes.

All of these exhibitions have been given in connection with Church and institutional work. It is therefore readily understood that only pictures that were in every respect "safe and sane" could be used; unusual success attended the selection of subjects so that, in the majority of instances, there was nothing thrown on the screen that could offend the taste of the fastidious audience which was always present. Judge, however, of the writer's chagrin when, after knowing that the subjects were such as could be safely trusted, the sub-titles proved "the nigger in the wood pile" and language of a most useless and offensive kind appeared unexpectedly for young and old to read. During the course of one evening exhibition when the choicest of subjects had been carefully selected, there appeared on the screen among the sub-titles one "Damn," two "Darned," two "Damned" and two "Damnedest" so that this perfect and pure (?) exhibition was afterward described as about the most "Damned" of its kind.

Is the English tongue so lacking in expletives that it becomes necessary for vulgarity and profanity to appear in this way? These are no "printer's devil" sort of mistakes, neither are they accidents nor incidents in the often necessary make up of a picture; they are actually and really very thoughtful and deliberate writings by responsible persons and, it must be said plainly and pointedly, betray a vulgar estimate of the audiences before whom these sub-titles are expected to appear. In a picture there are many incidents which can be passed over in that they may not be perceived, but reading matter must be read and often young children ask their elders to read these explanations for them so that every conspicuousness is given to these glaring breaches of good breeding and propriety. Need more be said, is a "word to the wise" sufficient and the pointing out of a grievous error enough to command its eradication? W. H. J.

Triangle to Distribute "Booster" Picture

Recruits for Training Camps to Be Reached by Patriotic Feature, "Who Leads the National Army."

IN line with the general effort being made by the film industry to back up the Government in its recruiting and financial activities the Triangle Distributing Corporation has volunteered to take charge of the distribution of the patriotic one-reel feature, "Who Leads the National Army." The picture was prepared under Triangle supervision in cooperation with the Military Training Camps Assocation of the United States, which is promoting the picture through a central board and small units of influential citizens throughout the country.

The picture, which was authorized by the War Department, shows the intensive training of the officers of the National Army from the time of registration on entering the camps until commissions are granted. It has no old war scenes or any material irrelevant to the actual present day training and selection of officers. As a direct and forceful stimulant to recruiting, it is expected to exert a powerful influence in bringing men of maturity and real executive ability into the training camps all over the country.

The appeal to exhibitors in the rental of this picture is purely patriotic, the money derived from rentals to be used wholly in furthering co-operation with the Army. The theater booker is thereby enabled to do a patriotic act without expense to himself or his employer simply by substituting this one-reel patriotic feature for some other one-reeler, such as a scenic, which he must book in order to fill his program. The Military Training Camps Association believes that it will not be difficult to find some patriotic citizen in each theater community who is interested in the great work of the association and will be glad to pay the exhibitor's film rental, if necessary, in order to have his fellow citizens see the picture.

Forty-two prints of the negative have been made by Triangle for distribution to its exchanges. Artistic paper will be supplied with each print. The release dates in different sections of the country as as follows:

October 22—New York, Buffalo, Boston and New Haven exchanges; October 29—Philadelphia and Pittsburgh; November 5—Chicago and Milwaukee; November 12—Cleveland and Cincinnati; November 19—Detroit, Minneapolis, Kansas City and St. Louis; November 26—Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas and Washington; December 3—Los Angeles, Seattle, San Francisco, Salt Lake City and Denver.

The week directly following the release date of each exchange will be known as training camp week in all motion picture theaters of that territory. Within a few days members of the Military Training Camps Association all over the country will be busy interviewing exhibitors for the purpose of presenting the advantages of showing "Who Leads the National Army." Further information may be had from Y. F. Freeman, general manager Triangle Distributing Corporation, 1457 Broadway, or Nat S. Stronge, Military Training Camps Association, 19 West 44th street, New York City.

144,000 SLIDES FOR UNCLE SAM.

Uncle Sam hung up a new record for slide orders when he placed his contract with the Novelty Slide Company of New York for 144,000 Food Administration slides, to be used in connection with the "food pledge card" campaign.

The plant of the Novelty company has been taxed to its limit of capacity, but the order is being filled on time, and 18,000 exhibitors will receive these government slides.

It is needless to add Uncle Sam will appreciate the exhibition of these slides on the screen of every theatre, and every exhibitor can do his bit by lending his screen for this noble purpose.

Bay State Men Aid Liberty Loan

Committee Under Chairmanship of E. H. Horstmann Seeking Subscriptions to Second Fund.

THE picture men of the Bay State are out to do all they can to aid the Government in putting over the Second Liberty Loan. To stimulate interest and receive subscriptions there has been appointed a committee, under the chairmanship of Ernest H. Horstmann, and with headquarters at 127 Pleasant street, Boston, composed of E. R. Gregory, Harry F. Campbell, Harry Asher, H. A. Gilman, Sam Grant, Nathan H. Gordon, Frank J. Howard, S. Moscow, Colonel H. L. Kincaide and L. B. Mayer.

Chairman Horstmann has issued the following appeal:

"The writer has been asked by the Liberty Loan Committee to act as chairman of the 'movie' interests for the purpose of securing subscriptions to the Second Liberty Loan. The above committee has kindly volunteered to assist the Government in this drive. Let us uphold the good name the industry has always borne in aiding the Government by subscribing to the utmost penny, even more than we can afford, to help sustain that good name.

"If you feel you cannot afford to subscribe, think it over again and again. Mothers are giving their boys, wives their husbands, and won't you loan, not give (remember it pays 4 per cent.), the good old United States that which she needs at present? What is the good of sending our boys to the front if we cannot send them guns to use, food to eat and clothes to wear? Don't forget they are fighting your battle as well as their own. Let the slogan be: 'Do unto the boys who have gone to the front as you would like to be done by.'

"Send subscriptions to any of the above committee."

Food Conserving Banquet for Yankees

Dinner to Follow Convention of New England Motion Picture Men Will Conform to Hooverian Ideas.

THE dinner at Boston's Copley Plaza on October 23 to follow the joint meeting and convention of the motion picture exhibitors of New England will conform strictly to the food conservation requirements. This departure from the usual menu is in recognition of two factors among others. October 21 begins food conservation week throughout the United States. Then again Arthur S. Friend, chairman of the motion picture committee working in conjunction with Herbert Hoover, is to be one of the speakers at the banquet. Walter W. Irwin, executive chairman of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and last week named as the Russian representative of the American Cinema Commission, also is announced to speak.

It is believed two hundred exhibitors will attend the convention at the Plaza, which first will take the form of gatherings by individual states and then of all New England exhibitors. At the dinner in the grill room in the evening, tickets for which are set at $3, a welcome will be extended to any one connected with the industry. As printed in the World last week, among the speakers will be Mayor Curley of Boston, President Brady of the National Association, President Ochs of the league, former Governor David I. Walsh of Massachusetts—the great and good friend of the motion picture men of the Bay State—National League Treasurer E. H. Horstmann, President Black of the Maine League and President Bean of the New Hampshire League.

Reservations for the dinner may be made with E. H. Horstmann, 174 Pleasant street, Boston.

DEATH OF BEN E. DRUM.

Ben E. Drum formerly manager of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation in Minneapolis, passed away at his home, 2313 West Monroe street, Chicago, on October 3. He leaves a wife.

WRITE US EARLY AND OFTEN

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD carries the most complete record of Exhibitors' News. This department aims at being the fullest and fairest chronicle of all the important doings in the ranks of organized exhibitors. To keep the department as complete and as useful as it is now we request the secretaries of all organizations to favor us with reports of all the news. Coming events in the ranks of the organized exhibitors are best advertised in this department of the Moving Picture World.

Baltimore Exhibitors Meet

Rousing Session Held on October 7—Will Call State Convention in November.

ON Sunday night, October 7, the Maryland Exhibitors' League held a rousing meeting at their headquarters in the New Theater Building, 210 West Lexington street, at which many questions of vital importance to the Maryland exhibitors were discussed. At this meeting, which was very enthusiastic, there were assembled only about fifteen members, although all those on the roster had been notified by letter that this first meeting of the new season was to be held. F. A. Hornig, president, presided.

The first matter that was taken up was the exchange depot question. The league is endeavoring to have a central location in Baltimore which will be convenient to all exhibitors, where film may be left, as each theater is through with it, for the theater using it next. The cost for this service would be 10 cents for members of the league and 25 cents for non-members. According to the discussion which ensued, it seems that the exchanges are in favor of the move, but when it comes to acting, have done nothing and again the question as to the responsibility while the reels are at the exchange appears to be a stumbling block, as no one wants to assume it. A committee of two including J. L. Rome and W. E. Stumf, was appointed to look into the matter and report at the next meeting.

As the by-laws call for a report on the books of the league at certain stated periods, a committee will soon be appointed by President Hornig to examine them. An application for membership was received from B. Cluster and he was accepted. A resignation was received from Frederick Clement Weber of the Gertrude McCoy theater resigning from the league. Mr. Weber's resignation was referred to E. B. McCurdy, the director of the league from that territory, so that the latter could personally see him and have him reconsider the matter. In a letter received from B. Rosenbauer, of the Echo theater, he resigned his position as a director of the league, but still retained his membership and sent three months dues with the letter in advance.

A motion was made by Thomas D. Goldberg of the Walbrook theater, and seconded by J. Louis Rome of the Broadway theater, that a standing committee be appointed to look into all applications for membership in the future. The motion was made with a view to see that all future members understand the object of the league and the reason it is being carried on. The motion was immediately carried and a committee of three was appointed including E. C. Sandell, Louis Schlichter and Julius Goodman.

Then there was a short discussion on the present admission prices being charged by some houses while others in the neighborhood are compelled to charge higher rates. This was referred to the board of directors for investigation.

President Hornig then read a letter which he had received from Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, suggesting that a state meeting be held in November.

Thomas D. Goldberg made a motion that a meeting for a state convention of the Maryland exhibitors be called on November 6, but as this date was considered too short a period in which to get ready, no definite date was set. But all favored that a reply be immediately sent to President Ochs and that a convention be held in November. If the plans of the league come to a head, the convention will be held at the Hotel Emerson and after the meeting is over, a fine lunch will be served to those present.

The next question that came up was the one regarding censorship in the State of Maryland. In the discussion on the subject it was learned that the exhibitors in Baltimore seem to have several friends who may probably be elected to go to Annapolis to the next Legislature. J. Louis Rome made a motion that a committee of three be appointed to query the candidates for the Senate and House at Annapolis in regard to what stand they will take on the matter if elected. This motion was immediately seconded and carried and C. W. Pacey, J. Louis Rome and Thomas D. Goldberg were appointed on the committee to write to the candidates. Each member is to be allowed $10 for stamps and other expenses while making the investigation.

Among those who were present at the meeting included F. A. Hornig, E. C. Sandell, Julius Goodman, Joseph Brodie, E. B. McCurdy, J. Louis Rome, H. Valentini, Joseph Rabinowitz, W. E. Stumpf, W. Albers, Louis Schlichter, N. B. Burns, Thomas D. Goldberg, Guy L. Wonders, C. W. Pacey.

NEW JERSEY LEAGUE IN CONVENTION.

The coming convention of the New Jersey League of Motion Picture Exhibitors promises to be a notable one. Dr. H. Charles Hespe, the president, has got tentative promises from Governor Edge, Senators Freylinghuysen and Hughes and Congressmen Hamill and Eagon to the present. Ex-Governor Fielder, the present Food Administrator; McCormick Blair, chairman of the publicity department of the Four Minute Men of the Council of National Defense, and speakers from the motion picture industry will address the convention.

The opportunity to present to the Legislature the advisability of repealing the moving picture tax, the presenting of the reasons for Sunday legislation to the Government and the politicians of the State and also the chance to show our patriotism and fealty with the men engaged in national work should be appreciated by every exhibitor. Last but not least, the music tax situation will be thoroughly gone over.

The meeting will be held in Achtelstetter Hall, in Newark, October 17, at 11 o'clock.

Officials Interpret New Tax Law

All Returns to Government Will Be in Form of Monthly Statements Showing Details of Business Done.

THE officials of the Treasury and Internal Revenue Departments have announced the rules governing the operation of the new amusement tax, which goes into effect on November 1. No stamps or special tickets will be issued by the Government, the collection of the vast sum involved being done through the medium of tabulated statements of business. This will be returned each month, promptly on the first; will be sworn to, and will be accompanied by a certified check or bank draft.

The Collector of Internal Revenue for each district, who, by the way, will be the official the theater manager will have to deal with, will supply the necessary forms before November 1. These schedules will indicate the amount of business done daily, sub-divided according to the number of admissions at the different prices if there be more than one charge, and indicating the number of passes and also of children. It is the opinion of the department that children under twelve years of age will pay but one cent tax, whether the rate for them be ten cents or fifty. Of course, if the rate be five cents no tax is assessable—whether patrons be children or adults. In other words, the five-cent seats in any house are exempt. None but bona fide employes and city and government officials will be exempt from the tax.

The Government is not concerned as to how the exhibitor assesses and collects his particular tax. If he choose to advertise to his patrons that his price of admission is ten cents including tax there will be no objection on the part of the Government. On the other hand, the exhibitor may take his price eleven cents. The same rule applies to all schedules.

The exhibitor must keep on file at all times, subject to the inspection of Government officials, a complete record of business done. For failure promptly and correctly to file returns and make payments heavy penalties are provided.

The department has made an important ruling in regard to that clause of Section 700, reading as follows: "These taxes shall not be imposed in the case of a place the maximum charge for admission to which is five cents, or in the case of shows, rides and other amusements (the maximum charge for admission to which is ten cents) within outdoor general amusement parks or in the case of admissions to such parks." It decrees that in the case of airdomes all admissions up to ten cents are exempt.

Exhibitors may obtain blanks at the offices of the Internal Revenue Department in their jurisdiction on November 1. Their first reports must be filed December 1.

ARTHUR HOYT ENGAGED BY TRIANGLE.

Arthur Hoyt, for sixteen years prominently identified with the legitimate stage as actor, stage manager and director, has been engaged as casting director at the Triangle Film Corporation's Culver City studio. For six years previous to coming to Southern California, Hoyt was with the Henry W. Savage production interests. He has been in the motion picture business for a year and a half, having been featured recently in several big productions. While on the legitimate stage Hoyt was identified with such brilliant actors as Viola Allen, Eleanor Robson, Henry Dixey and Henry Kolker.

ROMANCE LENDS INTEREST TO L-KO'S.

Among the many exciting and interesting happenings around L-Ko studios in Hollywood, Cal., last week, may be mentioned the strange and simultaneous disappearance of Leona Roberts, L-Ko's cashier, and Billy Bevan, comedian with Phil Dunham's company. The disappearance of a cashier generally leads to court, but in this case the courting had been all done in advance, and the dark night that shrouded in mystery the actions of Miss Roberts and Mr. Bevan broke into a dawn that disclosed them as Mr. and Mrs. Bevan.

ASSISTANT KEYSTONE DIRECTOR LUND DRAFTED.

Duke Reynolds is assisting Director Harry Williams at the Triangle-Keystone studios in Los Angeles. Willams' former assistant, Bert Lund, was drafted and left for the training camp at American Lake, Washington, this week.

FOX SHOWS "CLEOPATRA" AT LYRIC.

William Fox opened his film version of "Cleopatra," in which Theda Bara personates the siren of the Nile, at the Lyric Theatre on Sunday evening, October 14.

Mildred Harris with Lois Weber

MILDRED HARRIS, the clever ingenue who will be seen in leading roles in Lois Weber's forthcoming productions, owes her present success entirely to her screen work. She has never had any professional stage experience. Her rise to stardom represents six years of good solid effort.

The first appearance of Miss Harris under Lois Weber's direction will be "The Price of a Good Time" from "The Whim" of Marion Orth, which appeared in Breezy Stories, and this will be followed shortly by her appearance in "K," Mary Roberts Rinehart's popular story. Before taking up picture work, Miss Harris made several appearances in amateur theatricals for charity benefits and it was her performance at one of these that attracted the notice of Thomas H. Ince. Although Miss Harris was then only eleven years old—that was just six years ago—she immediately began playing principal roles in Ince's pictures and held a stock engagement in that company for more than three years.

Mildred Harris.

Then after working in several other productions she went with D. W. Griffith to The Fine Arts Company, who featured her in several pictures, among them "The Bad Boy," in which she played opposite Robert Harron, and "The Old Folks at Home," in which she was the principal support of the late Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree.

Again Miss Harris returned to the Ince studios, where she played opposite William Hart, and in her latest picture opposite William Desmond. Then came her engagement with Miss Weber. Miss Harris declares herself delighted to work under the guidance of the woman "discoverer" of Mary MacLaren and other well known screen players.

W. L. WRIGHT COMES TO NEW YORK.

William Lord Wright, whose humorous column in the Selig press sheet has been most widely quoted, has severed his three years connection with the Selig Company to accept an offer made him by J. A. Berst to join the Pathe forces. Mr. Wright, who was put on the Selig staff by Mr. Berst, was formerly managing editor of the Bellefontaine (Ohio) Republican and is a veteran newspaper man and writer on motion picture topics. He knows from experience what the exhibitor needs and has been supplying this material for the past three years. In his new connection he will be given even greater opportunity to help the exhibitor. He has removed to New York with Mrs. Wright and has already assumed his new duties.

INQUIRY AS TO HALL OF FAME COMPANY.

On behalf of some of its readers, the Moving Picture World desires information as to the present address of the Hall of Fame Publishing Company, Inc., or of Harry Ash, who was connected with that company. For a time they occupied an office in the Brokaw Building, near 42d street, New York, and were soliciting copy for a publication which was to be devoted to leading moving picture artists, publication of which was promised before the end of last year. Mr. Ash is said to be a relative of a well-known film director, and his father was believed to be interested in the company also. All information will be considered confidential, if desired.

GIVES FILM SERVICE TO SOLDIERS.

It may not be generally known, but the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., of Canada, have been and are supplying the Y. M. C. A. Sarcee Camp without charge. These films are being shown at the Y. M. C. A. without charge to the soldiers at the camp.

Chaplin to Put Signature in Films

Comedian to Identify New Releases by Titles Bearing His Autograph.

IN order to enable exhibitors and public to distinguish between his earlier comedies and those he is producing for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Chaplin's signature will play an important part in the promotion and exhibition of all the comedian's future releases.

It is hoped that this innovation will go far toward safeguarding the unsuspecting public from the annoyance of paying their money at the box office to see a new Chaplin film, only to find when inside the theater that the promised treat is an old release—an imitation or a garbled revue.

Chaplin, his attorneys, and the members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit have formed an alliance for the suppression of the horde of imitators and deluge of faked pictures which have come to be an annual scourge. Circuit members throughout the United States have constituted themselves in a national vigilance committee, which will keep the legal department in New York posted on infractions of Chaplin's rights. The entire organization is aroused and determined, and hopes by concerted action to minimize greatly a public nuisance and financial loss to their million dollar star and themselves.

There seems, as yet, no legal obstacle to a colorable imitation of an actor's screen personality such as exists for the protection of manufacturers who market their wares in distinctly designed cartons or packages. Colorable imitations clearly meant to deceive, are prohibited by law. Chaplin's signature, however, will be his trademark, and as such receive the protection of existing statutes.

To Act Against Spurious Chaplins

Nathan Burkan, Counsel for First National, in Letter Outlines Steps He has Taken in Court.

The general manager of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, J. D. Williams, forwards to the Moving Picture World a copy of a letter he has received from Nathan Burkan, counsel of the circuit. Mr. Burkan's letter is self-explanatory:

In an action brought by me in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York on behalf of Charles Chaplin vs. Otis Lithograph Co., Oscar J. Lynch (Joseph Seiden, Jack Seiden and Willie Feinberg trading as the Motion Picture Film Company), Gunby Brothers, Inc., Bertha Gunby, Charles A. Gunby and James W. Gunby, the Big A Film Company, Sam Epstein and Nathan Drapkin, Judge Mayer granted a temporary restraining order enjoining these defendants from releasing the photoplays respectively entitled: "Fall of the Rummy-Nuffs," featuring Charles Chaplin in multiple reel; "Dishonor System," featuring Charles Chaplin in two reels; and "One Law for Both," featuring Charles Chaplin in two reels, and from removing the same from the jurisdiction of the court, and any photoplay containing in the title or sub-title thereof the names Charles Chaplin and Chaplin which was not in its entirety produced by Chaplin and from assembling any scenes of a genuine Chaplin production with scenes produced with imitators and from placing before the public any poster containing any statement that Chaplin produced, directed or acted in the three above named photoplays, and from issuing any poster bearing Chaplin's name or photograph unless in connection with a genuine Chaplin production.

The complaint charges that the defendants entered into a conspiracy for the purpose of injuring Chaplin in his reputation and business and to defraud and mislead the public and committed the following acts:

The defendant Motion Picture Film Company caused to be enacted the three above-mentioned photoplays, the principal role of each of which was played by a low comedian in make-up and dress to look like Chaplin; such comedian impersonating Chaplin and imitating his poses, movements, walk, posture, actions and eccentricities; that the Gunbys in their laboratory in Ridgefield Park, N. J., developed the negatives and made the postive prints containing such plays for projection; and the Motion Picture Film Company then assembled and patched together isolated scenes taken from Chaplin productions (now in the discard) with scenes produced with Chaplin imitators as aforesaid so as to make it appear that Chaplin really participated in the action of each of such patched-up photoplays; the Otis Company and Lynch designed and printed theatrical posters containing the plaintiff's picture and name and containing the untrue, deceptive and misleading statement that Chaplin was featured in each of such spurious productions, and that such defendants supplied such posters for distribution among motion picture exhibitors; the defendants, the Big A Film Company, Epstein and Drapkin, are charged with releasing such patched up films and furnishing such posters to exhibitors.

Chaplin demands an injunction against all of these defendants and damages in the sum of $250,000.

Another suit was also started in the same court against the F. & F. Amusement Corporation and William F. Short, its president, the owner of the Crystal Hall Photoplay theater, located at 46 East Fourteenth street, New York City, Manhattan Borough, for exhibiting a spurious picture entitled "The Fall of the Rummy-Nuffs," featuring Charles Chaplin." An injunction has issued against the New Apollo Feature Film Company and Hugo Maienthau, its president, from releasing "Charlie in a Harem" and "Charlie Chaplin in a Son of the Gods."

Several suits will be started against each and every exhibitor in this and other cities for exhibiting spurious Charlie Chaplin pctures.

We have launched a campagn to suppress the unfair and dishonest use of Mr. Chaplin's name not only against the producers of spurious Charlie Chaplin films, but against the owners of the laboratories in which such films are made, the distributors of such films, the printers who print and supply the fraudulent posters and each and every exhibitor who undertakes the exhibition of the same.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of October 14 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Son of His Father" at the Rialto.

"THE SON OF HIS FATHER," starring Charles Ray, was the photodramatic feature at the Rialto the week of October 14. It tells of a high spirited, adventurous lad who beats his millionaire father at a game of bluff cleaning up a fortune for himself at the same time and winning the girl of his choice. Thomas H. Ince produced the play for the Paramount Pictures Corporation. The story is by Ridgewell Cullum.

"All the News That's Fit to Film" was shown in the Animated Magazine, also educational, scenic, and humorous subjects. The soloists were Greek Evans and Attillio De Cicco.

"Arms and the Girl" at the Strand.

Billie Burke in a photo-dramatic adaptation of the popular stage success, "Arms and the Girl," by Grant Stewart and Robert Baker, was the attraction at the Strand. In this interesting play the star portrays an American girl who finds herself stranded in Belgium at the beginning of the present European war, and innocently exchanges her passport with a Russia girl, a spy. Another American, a young man, by the loan of his automobile also helps the Russian girl. When the Germans seize the town the two Americans are held for complicity, and encounter many strange and thrilling experiences. Prominent in the cast are Thomas Meighan, Louise Bates, Malcolm Dunn, George S. Trimble, A. Bower, and William David.

"A Corner of Morvan," "Our Game Birds," Victor Moore in his latest comedy entitled "Home Defense," and the Topical Review were also on the program. The soloists were Rosa Lind and Herbert Waterous.

Eight-First Street Theater Bill.

At the Eight-First Street theater for the entire week Madge Kennedy was seen in "Baby Mine."

Openings for the week in New York include "The Maid of Belgium" at the Park theater, a World picture featuring Alice Brady; the Fox production of "Cleopatra" at the Lyric, with Theda Bara as the Queen of the Nile, and Elaine Hammerstein in the Jewel production, "The Co-respondent," at the Broadway theater.

ALICE BRADY, GUEST AT CRANDALL OPENING.

Alice Brady, the Select Pictures star, abruptly halted work on the first of her new series of pictures, "Her Silent Sacrifice," last Friday, in order to keep a promise made several weeks ago. Miss Brady's company was the gainer of a two-day holiday thereby and the good people of Washington gainers of a considerable amount of pleasure.

The occasion was the opening of the magnificent Knickerbocker theater which Mr. Crandall has built in Washington, and which was formally dedicated on October 13. Miss Brady was the honored guest of the management on this occasion and helped to entertain the brilliant company of guests specially invited for the opening.

Big Campaign for "The Co-respondent"

Plans Perfected for Extraordinary Newspaper Exploitation of Jewel Feature Starring Elaine Hammerstein.

ONE of the most important advertising deals of the autumn was consummated last Saturday when final arrangements were made to exploit Jewel's production of "The Co-respondent," starring Elaine Hammerstein, in a series of attractive half-page and quarter-page advertisements to appear in a chain of some seventy-five leading newspapers of the United States, from New York to San Francisco.

These papers, which have a combined circulation of approximately 30,000,000 readers, include New York American, New York Journal, Los Angeles Examiner, San Francisco Examiner, Atlanta Georgian, Boston American, Chicago American, Providence Bulletin, Buffalo Courier and Inquirer, Buffalo News, Rochester Democrat-Chronicle, Rochester Union-Advertiser, Syracuse Herald, Syracuse Journal, Philadelphia North American, Philadelphia Bulletin, Baltimore American, Baltimore News, Washington Times, Pittsburgh Post and Sun, Pittsburgh Press, Cleveland News and Leader, Cleveland Press, Cincinnati Post, Cincinnati Times-Star, Toledo Blade, Toledo News-Bee, Columbus Dispatch, Dayton News, Louisville Herald, Detroit News, Detroit Journal, Indianapolis Star, Indianapolis News, Milwaukee Journal, Minneapolis News, Minneapolis Tribune, St. Paul News, Des Moines Register-Tribune, Newark News, Omaha Bee, Omaha News, Kansas City Post, Kansas City Star, St. Louis Globe-Democrat, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Memphis Commercial-Appeal, Dallas Times-Herald, Houston Chronicle, Fort Worth Star-Telegram, Oklahoma City Oklahoman, New Orleans Item, New Orleans Times-Picayune, Denver News and Times, Denver Post, Salt Lake Tribune, Butte Post, Portland Oregonian, Portland Journal, Seattle Times, Toronto Star Telegram, Montreal Star, Birmingham News and Spokane Spokesman-Review.

"The Co-respondent," which is the first Jewel production to be featured in an advertising campaign of this magnitude, tells a thrilling story of American life. It has been selected for extraordinary publicity work, because it has a universal appeal, and should attract patronage from all classes of theatergoers in all sections of the country. As the heroine, Elaine Hammerstein does the work of her career. She is supported by Wilfred Lucas, who provides a forceful and finished characterization of a metropolitan newspaper editor.

Picturized from the play of the same name by Alice Leal Pollock and Rita Weiman, "The Co-respondent" has been lavishly put on by Lee Shubert, Arthur Hammerstein and Ralph W. Ince. In settings, lighting, direction, photography and titling an unusual degree of excellence has been attained. Ralph W. Ince personally directed the production, putting into it the best fruits of the thought and experience that have given him an enviable position among the pioneer screen directors of America. Mr. Ince first won distinction as the producer of the earliest multiple-reel screen dramas released by Vitagraph, and has taken an important part in the development of motion picture art from its humble single-reel beginnings to its present high status.

Elaine Hammerstein comes of one of the best known theatrical families of this country. She is the granddaughter of Oscar Hammerstein, and is endowed with good looks and considerable versatility. Miss Hammerstein first sang and danced her way into public favor in Otto Hauerbach's comic opera, "High Jinks," and a few months later created the leading feminine part in "The Trap," a melodrama by Richard Harding Davis and Jules Eckert Goodman. She is the type of actress who appears at her best before the camera, and is undoubtedly destined to secure a very wide circle of admirers with her first serious screen impersonation. As Ann Gray in "The Co-respondent," Miss Hammerstein takes the part of an orphaned New England girl with a literary bent, who finally breaks out of the stifling and inhospitable environment in which she has spent her childhood to secure a position on the staff of a New York newspaper. Unused to the ways of the big city, she becomes involved in a sensational divorce suit. There are many exciting episodes in the resulting drama, and the novel turns to the plot offer several genuine thrills.

Exhibitors booking "The Co-respondent" will be interested to know that in addition to the widespread advertising of this feature, full reviews of the production will be carried in all the leading dailies of the country.

Hart Picture Held Up

N. Y. M. P. Gets Injunction Restraining Artcraft From Showing First Subject in New York State.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CORPORATION, through its attorney Walter N. Seligsberg, brought suit on Monday of last week against Artcraft Pictures Corporation, Thomas H. Ince, C. Gardner Sullivan and Lambert Hillyer to restrain all of them from further interfering with the business of the plaintiff.

The basis of the suit is the allegations that prior to the 1st day of July, Thomas H. Ince was the general manager of the plaintiff, and that as such general manager he had made contracts on behalf of New York Motion Picture Corporation with Messrs. Sullivan and Hillyer and many other employees. That when Mr. Ince left the employ of New York Motion Picture Corporation he induced many of its employees to leave its employ and among them the very persons with whom he had made contracts on behalf of the company, although he knew that those contracts had not expired.

That Sullivan's contract had not expired, but that Sullivan continued to work for New York Motion Picture Corporation and to draw pay from them, and at the same time had an office with and drew pay from the Ince organization, and that Sullivan wrote the scenario upon which the first William S. Hart release made by Ince is based, viz., "The Narrow Trail." That not only was "The Narrow Trail" based upon Sullivan's scenario, but it was directed by Hillyer and acted in by Sylvia Bremer, all of whom were under exclusive contract to work for New York Motion Picture Corporation, and that all of these facts were known to all of the defendants.

An application for a preliminary injunction came up before Judge Whitaker in the New York Supreme Court for hearing Thursday, October 11, and after argument by Martin W. Littleton for the New York Motion Picture Corporation and Elek J. Ludvigh for the Artcraft Picture Corporation a further hearing was set for Monday, October 15, and in the meanwhile a preliminary restraining order or injunction against the showing of the picture in the State of New York was granted upon the New York Motion Picture Corporation filing a bond for $7,500. The bond was filed the same day, and "The Narrow Trail" cannot be shown in the State of New York until the final determination of the injunction motion covering the whole United States.

At the office of the New York Motion Picture Corporation it was stated that similar injunctions would be applied for wherever the picture is being exhibited.

First National Exchange Announced

S. L. Rothapfel, J. D. Williams, and Ralph Clark Are Its Officers—Will Handle All First National Circuit Subjects.

WHEN the First National Exchange Company, of New York, throws open the doors of its new exchange headquarters, which are to be located in one of the best buildings on Fifth avenue near Forty-second street, its officers declare there will be none better in the town.

The firm, with S. L. Rothapfel as president, J. D. Williams, secretary, and Ralph Clark, of the Turner & Dahnken Company, of San Francisco, treasurer, has just been incorporated; its functions being to distribute within the State of New York the First National Exhibitors' Circuit's releases especially, and to do a film exchange business in general. With the Charles Chaplin comedies and Petrova Pictures Company dramatic subjects as a nucleus, it is anticipated business will be good from the outset.

Efficiency is the big idea which is to dominate in the arrangement and equipment of every department. A model projection room is to be one of the most attractive features—for it all the latest improved mechanical equipment is to make viewing a pleasure, to say nothing of the quality of pictures the new firm intends dealing in.

As the officers are all exhibitors and will themselves select the subjects they mean to offer their customers, and as the firm is to work in conjunction with the National Distributing Association of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, of which Harry Schwelbe, of Philadelphia, was recently elected general supervisor, it is believed the needs of exhibitors will receive a degree of sympathetic consideration, which will make friends as well as customers of them.

An early announcement of location and opening date is promised, the officers preferring to have their new business home completed before making its exact location and opening date public.

Paramount Opens Advertising Smash

October 9 Saw Five Column Announcements in Many Newspapers Throughout Country—Congratulatory Wires Arrive by Hundreds and New York Offices Swamped With Requests for Service.

THE "big push" of 1917-18 for Paramount and Artcraft pictures is on. The first barrage was sent across October 8, when the New York Mail, Brooklyn Eagle, Omaha News, Chicago American and other great newspapers of the United States carried the five column, page deep advertisement with the striking headline, which will be familiar in many cities—"Have You Lost Your Make-Believe?"

This was the actual beginning of the million-dollar campaign. It was more than that—it was the start of one of the biggest undertakings in the motion picture industry that has ever been attempted. It was a direct and conspicuous testimony to the confidence that has been developed in this industry. In a word, this newspaper advertising campaign, soon to be extended to the great national magazines and to the most important electric signboards as well, raises the motion picture business still higher in the plane of commercial life.

On October 9 this same advertisement appeared in many more papers, including the Hartford Post, Washington Herald, Atlanta Journal, Indianapolis Times, Reading (Pa.) News-Times, Philadelphia Record, Boston Post, Detroit News, Minneapolis News, Kansas City Journal, St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Albany Argus, Buffalo News, Birmingham Evening Ledger, San Francisco Chronicle, Denver Express, etc. On the 10th it was read in Los Angeles by those who buy the Evening Express, and on the 11th in the Tribune. This is only a partial selection, picked at random from the list of three hundred great American dailies which will carry this Paramount and Artcraft advertising.

Already the offices of Paramount and Artcraft in New York City are being flooded not only with congratulatory telegrams and letters from film showmen who recognize the genuine value of the campaign to them, but by requests for service and those who can are being advised to apply directly to their local exchanges, in order to facilitate matters and relieve the pressure on the main offices.

APOLLO PICTURES, INCORPORATED, NOT SUED.

Harry Raver, president of Apollo Pictures, Incorporated, has issued the following statement with respect to certain confusion which seems to have arisen concerning Apollo Pictures, Inc., and the Apollo Film Company.

"I wish to state postively," said Mr. Raver to a representative of this paper, "that there is no connection whatsoever between Apollo Pictures Incorporated, a concern of which I happen to be president, and the Apollo Film Company, an organization of which I had never heard until I read of it being sued by Chas. Chaplin, recently. It seems that the Apollo Film Company is alleged to have infringed on certain rights held by Mr. Chaplin, regarding his productions. Mr. Chaplin I further understand is asking a sum approximating one million dollars damages for the alleged infringement. I know nothing of the merits of either side of the case, but inasmuch as Apollo Pictures Incorporated is not being sued by anyone I deem it my duty to enlighten those who may be laboring under a misapprehension owing to the similarity of corporate titles, and who may confuse the two concerns."

AGAINST "OPEN AIR" PRODUCING.

There are many practical open-air stages in California and Florida, but few at present in the East. However, the announcement that a Fort Lee producing company was operating what they believed to be the first open-air stage in the East evoked a denial from Benjamin Chapin, producer and star of the Lincoln Cycle.

"I operated an open-air stage in Fort Lee myself," says Mr. Chapin, "as long as two years ago."

"When the weather is at its best," Mr. Chapin went on, "there is nothing better for fine photography than an open-air stage. But the varying climatic conditions in the East will never make open-air stage work practical. At least, it is an expensive gamble. Only a small percentage of our open-air work was available for use in the Cycle. The studio-made stuff, on the other hand, was practically all available. I will never enthuse over open-air producing—in the East."

Can't Use "Official" in Advertising

District Court Decides Against Goldberg and Strathopoulo in "Italian Battlefront" Controversy.

IN the United States District Court Judge Learned Hand has decided that Jacob Goldberg and Alexander Strathopoulo, agents of the Italian Press Publishing Association, must refrain from using the word "official" in advertising films entitled "On the Italian Battlefront" and must set forth in advertising matter relating to these films that the pictures were taken prior to March, 1916.

The Italo-North American Commercial Union and Fort Pitt Theatre Corporation, which is releasing current official Italian war pictures under the style of "The Italian Battlefront," complained in a suit filed to enjoin the defendants from exploiting the alleged infringing films that the box office value of the official films were being impaired by the acts of the defendants.

"At the present time owing to the extraordinary success of the Italian army, which has focused upon that theatre of the war the eyes of the entire world, there is an intense interest on the part of the public of the United States in these pictures," according to affidavits submitted to the court in connection with the application for injunctive relief.

The plaintiff submitted affidavits showing that the film entitled "The Italian Battlefront" was actually taken on the battle line, under the direction of the Italian General Staff, which authorized the exhibition of the films abroad as well as in this country. The pictures were taken in January, 1916, and the plantiff company obtained the exclusive rights to exhibit the films in this country.

The plaintiff claimed that the pictures exhibited by the defendants had been taken in this country, but the defendants denied this and submitted evidence tending to show that the films had been officially released with the approval of the military authorities in Italy, but as these films antedated the films being exhibited by the plaintiff and there appeared to be some doubt whether the former pictures are "official," Judge Hand decided the controversy over the release of the competing films as outlined above.

EDEL HEARS CONCERT OVER WIRE.

Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand, who five weeks ago inaugurated afternoon symphony concerts, did not occupy his loge the afternoon of October 8 as is his custom Mondays, when the orchestra gives the first of the week's concerts. The manager missed his train from Atlantic City, where he was spending a short vacation, but in order not to miss the concert he arranged to have the detectaphone, which is placed on his office desk in the theatre and connected by two wires to a small transmitter concealed in the footlights, connected with the long distance telephone.

Adriano Ariani, the conductor, was greatly surprised when shortly after the concert he received from Mr. Edel this telegram: "I enjoyed part of this afternoon's concert very much. Seated in our room in the hotel I heard Lowitz's Rustic Suite. It was delightfully rendered. Congratulations. Will see you next Monday."

W. E. CLAYTON JOINS METRO-YORKE.

W. E. Clayton has been engaged as technical and art director by Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Yorke Film Corporation, which is producing Metro wonderplays, starring Harold Lockwood. Dan Devlin and Vernon Lawrence have also been engaged. They are to be assistants to Mr. Clayton.

Mr. Clayton comes from the Triangle studios in Yonkers, where he was located for the last year. Previously he was connected with the Reliance-Majestic studios in New York for a period of two years. At the Metro-Yorke studios Mr. Clayton's duties will be that of supervisor in the matter of settings, properties and locations. He will see to it that no flaws are permitted to enter the picture from a technical viewpoint. Mr. Clayton began his new duties this week.

THOMAS JOINS RAVER.

By the terms of an agreement, the final details of which were arranged last week, Augustus Thomas, the dean of American playwrights, becomes associated with Harry Raver in the formation of a new motion picture producing organization. Augustus Thomas, in addition to writing original stories, which will be visualized by the new concern, will also act in an advisory capacity with respect to all scenarios accepted for production and will generally supervise all matters relative to the selection of casts, scenic investiture and staging.

The War Tax on Admissions

Joseph Hopp, President of Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A., Gives His Opinion of Its Probable Effect in Chicago and Fears It Will Reduce Attendance.

THE consensus of opinion of Chicago exhibitors on the war tax on admissions to picture theaters has been well expressed by Joseph Hopp, in a recent review, when he spoke as follows:

"We are all patriotic American citizens and as such are ever ready to do all we can to aid the Government of the United States in carrying out its various war policies.

"So far as the effect of the war revenue tax on admissions to theaters is concerned, which takes effect November 1, we must necessarily take into consideration the effect it will have on our moving picture theaters. When we consider the constantly increasing cost of film service, the advance in wages to operators, the fact that the high cost of living has already caused families of modest, small, or no means to curtail their visits to moving picture theaters, because of the effect on their pocketbooks, and also when we stop to consider that the young men who have been drafted into the army have already left their home neighborhoods, while more are to follow, thus causing a considerable loss of patronage, and also considering the fact that for three years the moving picture theaters have been paying a war tax to the Government based on the seating capacity of each theater, and that only as late as July of this year we all paid a seating capacity war tax to the Government in advance for a year, then we cannot help but view with alarm the effect the coming admission tax will have on the returns of the theaters.

Joseph Hopp.

"It is already difficult for the majority of theaters to get by, because so few of them are making any money, and if admission taxes should be the means of additionally reducing attendance on account of the 10 per cent. increase, then it has put us in a position that will cause the conservative theater owner to do a great deal of figuring in order to make both ends meet.

"We want to do all we can to help our Government, but we cannot lose sight of the fact that these various causes have already so affected the business that any further burden will so weigh us down that the load may be greater than many can carry.

"It will be necessary for us to follow the course pursued in Canada, where the admission tax has been enforced for some time, and where the patron pays the tax. This will increase the admission price for the patron, and I fear that such increased cost of theater attendance may cause the regular patron to make his visits less frequent. Therein lies the danger. This, I fear, will be found true, particularly in the neighborhoods that are made up of people of very little or no means, whom the increase in admission will prevent from patronizing their favorite amusement as frequently as formerly."

At a specal meeting of Chicago Local, to be held some time next week, Julius Smietanka, collector of internal revenue for the Chicago district, will be invited to attend and address the exhbitors, explaining the working of the tax and the methods that wll be employed by his office in the collection of the money.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Thus far the Fox Film Corporation has won out in the case of its feature picture, "The Spy," which was refused a permit some time ago by Censor Funkhouser. The suit brought by the Fox company against the city was heard before Judge Samuel Alschuler, of the U. S. District Court, and he granted an injunction restraining the city from interfering with the showing of "The Spy" in Chcago. Censor Funkhouser and the city of Chicago entered suit to have this injunction dissolved, and the case was heard before Judge Alschuler, who requested the counsel for both sides to submit briefs at the hearing of the case on Friday, September 28. On Monday, October 8, after reading these briefs, Judge Alschuler refused to grant the motion of the city to dissolve the injunction under which "The Spy" is being shown. The city has been given thirty days' time within which to file an appeal.

This feature, in which Dustin Farnum appears in the leading role, has proved very popular in Chicago. In many neighborhood theaters the demand for seeing it is so strong that extra presentations are given to meet the wishes of the public.

"Intolerance" began a five days' run at the Orpheum theater, on State street, Wednesday, October 10. Admissions are 50 cents on the main floor and 25 cents in the balcony. The presentations are continuous, from eight in the morning until midnight. This production wlll be followed by Wiliam Farnum in "The Conquerer" (Fox), Monday, October 15. The Orpheum, controlled by Jones, Linick & Schaefer, is now the leading picture theater in the "Loop," as all legitimate houses have gone back to the spoken drama.

Myrtle Stedman, who was well known in Chicago some time ago as leading woman of one of the Selig Polyscope Company's Chicago organizations, began a series of appearances at the theaters on the Lubliner & Trinz circuit, Wednesday, October 10, when she opened at the Covent Garden. Miss Stedman is an accomplished singer, having at one time starred in musical comedy. In addition to singing solos she gives a brief timely address at each house vsited. Miss Stedman started her present tour at San Diego, Cal., and has visited most of the important theaters on the Coast and in the Middle West (up to this point) before her Chicago appearance. Miss Stedman's last engagement was with Paramount, which she recently closed. Her tour will be extended east to New York, after which she will take a well-earned holiday.

Tuesday, October 9, the Government appealed the exemption granted Bryant Washburn, who will be obliged to undergo another review of his special case. Morton Cressy, who represents the provost marshal in Chicago, gives out that the case has attracted so much attention that it has been deemed advisable to take this action, though investigators have held the opinion that Mr. Washburn's claim of a dependent wife and child was just. Mr. Cressy has appealed Mr. Washburn's case to District Board No. 2. Mr. Washburn was exempted by Local Board No. 55. It is believed that Mr. Washburn's exemption will be upheld in the new investigation.

E. M. Newman began his annual series of travel talks at Orchestra Hall, this city, Wednesday evening, October 10. The opening entertainment was "Our National Parks," the first of the five wonder journeys in his repertoire. This will be followed by "Our Pacific Coast," Wednesday, October 17; "Our Real American, the Indian," Wednesday, October 24; "Our Hawaii," Wednesday, October 31, and "Our West Indies," Wednesday, November 7. Mr. Newman's annual appearances are always heartily welcomed in Chicago, as, in addition to the entertainment and instruction afforded by his fine pictures, his lectures are highly prized.

"The Woman God Forgot" (Artcraft), a spectacular photodrama written especially for Geraldine Farrar by Jeanie MacPherson and directed by Cecil B. De Mille, started a week's run at the Ziegfeld theater, Sunday, October 14.

H. W. Berman, manager of the New York office for Jewel Productions, stopped over in Chicago last week on a tour of the country, during which all the Jewel exchanges will be visited. Mr. Berman expressed much pleasure over the fine results secured by Eli Van Ronkel, manager of the Chicago office. Mr. Berman proceeded to Kansas City, where he will spend several days en route.

H. K. Somborm, general manager of the Longacre Distributing Co., producers of the Alice Howell comedies (released through Universal), spent several days in the city last week on his trip from New York to the Coast. Mr. Somborm calls his present trip a "pulse-feeling tour," as he is desirous to find out exactly what kind of comedies exhibitors require just now to meet the public demand. He will stop over at all prominent cities on his way to the Coast, and will make a point of meeting as many exhibitors as possible.

Richard R. Nehls, general manager of the American Film Co., was recently elected president of the Motion Picture Club of Chicago, the new social organization which will represent all branches of the film business in the personnel of its members. The membership of the new club is limited to 100, and it will be the only official and recognized social film organization in the city.

The girl employes at the American Film Company's plant, this city, have not remained content with the mere donning of overalls and taking the places of the boys who answered the call to the colors, but they have organized a "Benefit Committee," of which Miss Nygaard is chairman. Weekly collections are taken and the proceeds are devoted to the furnishing of tobacco, confectionery and reading matter for the soldiers. Knitting classes have also been formed, the loyal girls of the American plant willingly devoting three evenings a week to the knitting of warm garments for the boys abroad. When it is remembered that these girls have charge of the intricate machinery of the film developing department, which requires the greatest care and the closest attention, and which results in much physical fatigue, their additional efforts in the cause of patriotism deserve the warmest recognition and the greatest praise.

According to Miss Elizabeth Sears, of the American Film Company, Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of that organization, relates a good joke on himself, which happened recently at Santa Barbara. One of the photographers at the studio there was trying to take a good picture of his chief. Being a very serious individual, he was anxious to secure the best effect possible.

"Please smile," he implored.

"Say something that will make me smile," replied Mr. Hutchinson, "I cannot smile to order, you know."

"All right," said the photographer. "Steady now. Say! I wish you'd cut my salary right in half after today."

It is needless to state that he got the smile.

The "Four-Minute Men," who have been delegated by the National Committee of Public Information to appear at moving picture theaters in aid of the measures of the Government, have been doing whirlwind work in Chicago for some time past. These men are exceedingly able and contrive to condense in the brief time afforded an amazing number of persuasive facts. In addition to these men, other "four-minute men"—who have volunteered their services in the city of Chicago to press the purchase of bonds of the Second Liberty Loan—represent the best brains of the city and state. Among these are Bishop Samuel Fallows, Levy Mayer, Charles S. Deneen, Judge Kenesaw M. Landis, David R. Forgan, Charles S. Cutting, Maclay Hoyne, Clarence Darrow and C. W. Folds. Otis Skinner, who is now showing at the Power's in "Mister Antonio," has also been pressed into service. The other gentlemen speak nightly at the remaining dramatic theaters in the city. Chicago is certainly doing her share in the furtherance of present war propaganda.

The meetng of the Chicago local, M. P. E. L. of A., in the Masonic Temple, Friday, October 5, was well attended, the chief subject of discussion being the music tax. It was recommended that the best way to combat the tax was to use only non-taxable music, a partial list of which was recently sent out from Chicago Local headquarters to all members. A contribution to the national defense fund for combating the tax was also made at the meeting.

It was also decided at this meeting to organize a film booking club, a committee of five being elected for that purpose. The object of the club is to bring about collective purchasing or rental power.

Recess was then taken, it being understood that the meeting will be reconvened at the call of President Hopp some day during the week beginning October 15, to complete unfinished work left in committee.

Dell Henderson

DELL HENDERSON, who is now directing for the Empire All Star Corporation, has had enough varied experience to equip half a dozen directors. Away back in the old Biograph days, Mr. Henderson was leading man for Mary Pickford. He played a number of roles and was so successful that thoughts of ever participating in the technical end never entered his mind.

Everything about the motion picture industry appealed to Mr. Henderson from the start as an actor. He was always appreciative of new lighting effects, different ways of landing situations, etc., and as improved technique and photography came along, Mr. Henderson was the first to look into it. The consequences of this mental activity was that when David Griffith opened his western studio in California, Mr. Henderson was sent out to direct the new company. Not, however, before Mr. Griffith had personally trained Mr. Henderson in the art of motion picture direction. Some of the stars that have been under his direction are the Gish sisters, Lillian and Dorothy; Henry Walthall, Mabel Normand, Blanche Sweet, and Mack Sennett.

Dell Henderson.

At present Mr. Henderson is busily at work at the Mirror Studio, where the Empire All Star Corporation is engaged in turning the Charles Frohman successes into motion pictures.

Mr. Henderson is very enthusiastic about the latest star he has introduced to the screen, Julia Sanderson, who has recently completed her first picture, "The Runaway." Other pictures he has recently completed for the Empire All Star and that are to be released through the Mutual are Ann Murdock in "Outcast," "The Impostor" and "The Beautiful Adventure."

Charlie Chaplin Organizes Company

John Jasper Appointed General Manager—Cast of Company Decided—Chaplin Takes Vacation Trip to Honolulu.

WITH the appointment of John Jasper as general manager, the organization of the Charlie Chaplin Producing Company was effected this week, and one more studio was added to Los Angeles. Simultaneously, Chaplin slipped quietly away to spend a well-earned vacation of three weeks, his destination being Honolulu.

During the star's sojourn his personal and company business will be guided by his brother, Sydney Chaplin, and Mr. Jasper. They will shortly take over extended acreage in the Hollywood section, where the world-famous comedies will be made. Ground for the new studio will be broken early next week. In appointments, it is said, it will be second to none in the industry.

Prior to his departure, Mr. Chaplin sanctioned the engagement of a number of the members of his late Lone Star Company, to support him in his efforts, next year, for the First National Exhibitors' circuit.

Edna Purviance, whose charm and talent has been prominent in Chaplin comedies for a long period, will continue as leading woman. Eric Campbell, the giant "heavy" man, who has provoked many moments of mirth for followers of the screen, will be identified with the new organization, as will also Henry Bergman, another of Chaplin's robust discoveries. Scenic Artist E. T. Mazy has been re-engaged, as have also Roland Totheroh, chief camera man, and Carlyle R. Robinson, director of publicity.

Work on the first of a series of eight subjects, which Chaplin has contracted to make for the First National Exhibitors' circuit, through the efforts of T. L. Tally, vice-president of the organization, will begin about the middle of November, the initial one being released some time in December. The figure to be paid for these is $1,000,000.

Although Chaplin's trip to Honolulu is generally regarded as one of recreation, the star has another motive, that being the prospect of the Hawaiian city for the making of a picture. If conditions there appeal to him it is probable that an early Chaplin comedy will have this picturesque and famous resort as a background.

Doings at the Metro Studios.

The Metro Picture Corporation, under the guidance of B. A. Rolfe, western representative of Metro, has started production in Los Angeles, and has, as announced last week, leased the old Charlie Chaplin studios in Hollywood.

The studio comprises five acres of ground, with adjoining land available if required. There is at present one stage 70 by 150 feet, which is to be enlarged and later on glass inclosed.

A spacious dock and property room adjoin the stage. Other buildings include a fully equipped carpenter shop, paint shop and sculpturing department, a modern laboratory, office building, dressing room building, and a building to be devoted exclusively to directors and their assistants and the scenario department. C. W. Thomas, who has been identified with Metro for some time, has been appointed the local studio manager.

The first production to be filmed by the Metro Western studios is a Russian drama entitled "The Legion of Death," a story concerning the women soldiers of Russia written by June Mathis.

Miss Edith Storey will play the stellar part. Others included in the cast are Philo McCullough, Charles Gerard, Fred Malatesta, and Pomeroy Cannon. The production is being directed by Tod Browning. Abe Cantor is assistant director, and Harry Keepers is cameraman. Construction has been started on a massive Russian street set.

J. E. Newman has been engaged as technical director and J. C. Richardson as casting director. Newman has been associated in the same capacity with several companies in Los Angeles, and Richardson was until recently employed in the same capacity at the Triangle studios in Culver City.

Frances Guyhan and H. P. Keeler have joined the scenario department. Miss Guyhan was until recently a member of the Balboa scenario department. H. P. Keeler has been identified with Ince-Triangle productions for the past two years. They are both at work on stories for Viola Dana and Edith Storey.

Viola Dana's first production will be "A Weaver of Dreams," from a book by the late Myrtle Reed. Other Metro stars who probably will come West as soon as their present productions are finished are Emmy Wehlen, Ethel Barrymore, Mabel Taliaferro, Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew, Francis Bushman, and Beverly Bayne.

Bid Farewell to Robert Kane.

On the eve of his departure, Tuesday, October 2, for American Lake as a member of the National Army, Robert T. Kane, vice-president and general manager of Paralta Plays, Incorporated, was given a farewell banquet by the employees of Paralta studios at the Los Angeles Athletic Club. Mr. Kane was the subject of many tributes in the speeches of the guests. As a surprise of the evening Miss Besse Barriscale presented the guest with a costly wrist watch, the gift of those at the banquet table.

A surprise of the evening was a song written for the occasion by Kenneth O'Hara and Bert Crossland. Kane had been told nothing of the number until the quartet, composed of Howard Hickman, Raymond West, Albert Cody and Crossland, suddenly stood up and sang it.

Among those who attended the banquet were Bessie Barriscale, J. Warren Kerrigan, Henry B. Walthall, Reginald Barker, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar C. Apfel, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond B. West, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Brunton, Howard Hickman, N. W. Aaronson, Albert Cody, Mary Charleson, Ed. Coxen, Bert Crossland, Joseph J. Dowling, George Fisher, Emmett J. Flynn, Elliott Howe, Rex Ingram, Rhea Mitchell, Lois Wilson, Clara Williams, Wallace Worsley, John Krog, R. Holmes Paul, Thomas Little, Kenneth O'Hara, Edward Hemmer, J. Maxwell, Jessie Boothe, Monte M. Katterjohn, Tom J. Geraghty, Eugene B. Lewis, W. E. Keefe, R. B. Kidd, Clyde DeVinna, L. Guy Wilky, Robert V. Newhard, R. J. Kern, H. C. Kern, Clyde Tracy, Roy S. Sanford, Reeve Hauck, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Naylor, Wallace W. Kerrigan, J. E. Woodbury, and Bennie Zeidman.

Lois Wilson Captivates Los Angeles Audience.

J. Warren Kerrigan's first Paralta production, "A Man's Man," was given its premiere public presentation, Sunday, October 1, at Clune's auditorium in Los Angeles. The house was packed. Mr. Kerrigan is very popular in this city and there was great public interest in his first production as a star-manager.

Mr. Kerrigan was present, accompanied by a box party of friends, which included his young leading lady, Lois Wilson. He was asked to address the audience from the stage and when he "went back" he took Miss Wilson with him.

Mr. Kerrigan spoke briefly and said it would give him great pleasure to introduce Miss Wilson. The audience was delighted and expectant. As the star led her on to the stage they found her as youthful and beautiful, and as sweet and natural in manner, as she had appeared in the picture.

Mr. Kerrigan raised his hand to silence the applause and to indicate that Miss Wilson would speak for herself. Everyone in the audience sat forward in his or her seat to hear the most successful of the younger screen actresses tell about her experience in moving pictures.

"I know"—began Miss Wilson in a very sweet, attractive voice—"I know that I am very frightened and I thank you very much." With a wave of her hand she ran from the stage followed by a storm of applause. Her winsome bashfulness had won all hearts more completely than if she had made a real speech embodying much of the wisdom of the screen.

Another Electric Studio for Universal City.

Work has been begun upon the construction of another electric light studio at Universal City. When it is completed there will be three similar studios on the lot. Unlike the others the new structure will be built entirely of wood and there will be 125,000 feet of lumber in the building. Its hundred-foot trusses have been designed to carry heavy loads, and experiments made with them indicate that automobiles can be suspended from them.

The new studio will be 100 by 300 feet long, just a hundred feet shorter than the largest studio, where the directors work at night and in inclement weather. With this additional improvement the twenty-four producing companies at present operating at the Big U plant will have more than adequate accommodation for the special work the Universal management has in contemplation for the coming winter months.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

A. Carlos, manager of the Fox West Coast studios, has left Los Angeles on a flying trip to New York, relative to the tax laid upon film negative by Congress.

William Worthington, one of the best known directors in the business, has left Los Angeles for New York, where he will be affiliated with the Goldwyn organization. Mr. Worthington had a most successful grand opera and legitimate stage career before entering pictures. Among the noteworthy productions which Mr. Worthington has directed are numbered the Bluebird features, "The Clock" and "The Man Who Took a Chance," and many others.

The settlement of the threatened strike between four hundred carpenters employed in the motion picture studios of Los Angles and their employers was announced Saturday by Captain Charles Connell, the Federal mediator. Captain Connell and Harris Weinstock, also acting as Federal mediator, have been working on the labor dispute persistently since the settlement of the big controversy involving the building industry of Los Angeles. The workers are given a $5 a day minimum wage, an eight-hour day and no discrimination against the union.

Los Angeles motion picture colony, in addition to sending many of its best men to the training camps to prepare for actual service, also is helping to win the war by record purchases of Liberty loan bonds. Thomas H. Ince subscribed this week for $100,000 worth of the bonds. Mary Pickford sent in a $90,000 subscription. Jesse Lasky subscribed for $25,000 in bonds. The subscriptions of the star and two producers were said to be the forerunners of large subscriptions to follow. Many of the studios have lists in circulation of the lesser stars, extra people and other employees. Several of the large producing companies will subscribe for bonds and these subscriptions will probably be credited to Los Angeles.

"Bill" Russell and "Doug" Fairbanks staged a wrestling match recently at the Potter theater in Santa Barbara. This popular playhouse was filled to capacity of men and women who had turned out to get a close-up of Doug's million dollar smile.

Bull Montana, Doug's protege, won a sensationally fast and furious match from Frank Martin, a husky Greek, two out of three falls. Fairbanks delighted the audience with a short snappy talk, and then engineered Bull Montana's wrestling match from the smiling Italian's corner.

Russell pleased the fans as referee not only of the Montana-Martin affair, for Doug and his side kick staged a stunt not on the program, in which "Big Bill" also officiated. It was a screamingly funny jiu jitsu contest won by Fairbanks in his slam bang fashion. Fairbanks biffed, slammed, mauled and otherwise buffetted the ever smiling Bull all over the ring, forcing Bill Russell to prance all over the mat to keep out of the way.

Bull Montana, under Douglas Fairbank's guiding hand, will again wrestle in Santa Barbara against some worthy opponent picked by promoter Bill Russell.

Approximately two hundred thousand persons were reached by the "Four-Minute Men" of California in their first drive, in the moving picture houses of the state, according to William V. Cowan, secretary of the State Council of Defense and chairman of the speaking campaign. The speakers reported that they were accorded attention and enthusiastic welcomes everywhere when they spoke on "Why We Are Fighting" and "What Our Enemy Really Is."

County reports to Cowan estimated that more than 12,000 people listened to the talks in San Joaquin County, about 15,000 in Sacramento County, nearly 10,000 in San Diego and an equal number in Orange. Outside of San Francisco and Los Angeles reports show that about 75,000 persons were reached by the four-minute speakers.

Arthur Hoyt, for sixteen years prominently identified with the legitimate stage as actor, stage manager and director, has been engaged as casting director at the Triangle Film Corporation's Culver City studio.

For six years previous to coming to Southern California Hoyt was with Henry W. Savage. He has been in the motion picture business a year and a half, until recently, having been featured in several big productions.

While on the legitimate stage Hoyt was identified with such brilliant actors as Viola Allen, Eleanor Robson, Henry Dixey and Henry Kolker.

Little Georgie Stone, one of the old Fine Arts Kiddies, has been engaged by the Fox studios to head a company of child players making pictures similar to the highly successful "Jack and the Beanstalk."

Master Georgie is about six years old and has spent a good part of his six years in motion pictures. He was born in Cleveland and in his few years of screen work he has acted with four companies. Georgie first achieved fame at the Fine Arts Company, under the direction of the same men who will have charge of him in his Fox productions, C. M. and S. A. Franklin. Georgie's first picture will be "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves." Gertrude Messinger is to be his miniature leading woman.

An elaborate hotel set patterned after the lobby of one of New York's great hostelries, was constructed on one of the American Film Company's big stages this week for William Russell's feature production, entitled "A Night in New York," Charles Turner Dazey's latest screen play.

Olive Thomas, Triangle star at Culver City, is back at work after a week's illness. Miss Thomas suffered from a severely ulcerated tooth, her face being so swollen that she could not appear before the camera and work was necessarily halted on her latest picture, "Indiscreet Corinne," a comedy drama directed by Jack Dillon.

The picture was completed on the first day of Miss Thomas' return to the studio and the beautiful star will soon start on a new story.

Scott Sidney, director in charge of the production of the National Film spectacle, "Tarzan of the Apes," put on a number of scenes at the company's studio in Hollywood last week in which an unusual assortment of types appeared. The scenes were laid in an English tap-room, and the characters included Englishmen of all trades and professions. Colin Kenny, who played an important part in the first Lois Weber state rights production, has been engaged for the part of Tarzan's uncle, and the role of the barmaid, whom he eventually marries, is in the hands of Miss Bessie Toner. Louis Morrison is another well known screen actor who has just been assigned a part, playing "mine host" at the inn. The company has just sailed from San Pedro on a large schooner which has been chartered by President Parsons, and three days will be spent in making "water stuff."

"The Mark of Cain"

Mrs. Vernon Castle Featured in Astra-Pathe Production, Presenting Fascinating Murder Mystery.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

"THE Mark of Cain" is a mystery story of unusual excellence. Murder is the crime about which the conflicting evidence centers and the events leading up to and following the deed are presented with a deftness and skill that keeps the observer guessing every minute of the time. The guilt shifts from one person to another and finally rests definitely upon an individual whose participation has been well concealed and which is still entirely logical. The production was made by the Astra Film Corporation and the direction was in charge of George Fitzmaurice.

Mrs. Vernon Castle appears with her usual grace and charm. Her part is that of Alice, adopted daughter of a wealthy man named Rowland Trowbridge, played by J. H. Gilmour. Trowbridge is the man who is murdered in the course of the story. Antonio Moreno also has an important role, that of Kane Langdon, nephew of Trowbridge.

Alice is loved by Langdon and by Judge Hoyt, her adopted father's lawyer. Mr. Trowbridge favors Hoyt's suit, but the girl is really in love with young Langdon. The latter desires Trowbridge to help him finance a mining deal, and when the wealthy man refuses, Langdon conspires with the housekeeper to get possession of some bonds.

Trowbridge has a hobby, the study of insects. This takes him frequently to Van Courtland park, and it is to this place place he is lured on the day of the murder. His body is found, lying on the rocks, by a park employe, who spreads the alarm and brings the police to the scene.

The story is simple in development, has practically no excess characters and the action from first to last is almost a model for this type of story. It has the usual fascination of a good piece of detective fiction.

"The Trouble Buster"

Pallas Picture Featuring Vivian Martin Is a Wholesome One and Will Please.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

A GOOD average story is "The Trouble Buster," the Pallas release of October 8. The action moves for the first half of the five reels without developing particular strength; but what comes after the midway point wins our close attention—our real interest and sympathy. The story is by Tom Forman and Gardner Hunting, the latter being the author of the script. Frank Reicher is the director. Vivian Martin is seen in one of her familiar waif roles with the accompaniment of boy's garb and with a piano box for a domicile. Just why it was necessary to leave on the outside of this packing case the name of a piano maker is not clear. The incident, insignificant as it is, may with justification be resented by exhibitors.

Paul Willis is the "opposite" of Miss Martin. He does much to make convincing his characterization of "Blackie" Moyle, a newsboy who is a friend in need of Michelna when she takes to the street to escape the long arm of a female dreadnought representing a home for the friendless. James Neill and Charles West have minor roles.

The story is wholesome. The dominating theme is friendship, the growing bond between the newsboy and the girl to whom he surrenders his improvised home; and one of the touches that add to the charm of the picture is the self-sacrifice of the latter, who, when she finds her "Blackie" is blind as a result of an encounter in which he entered to protect her, declares the boy to be the creator of the statuette which proves so popular "The Trouble Buster" should send 'em away happy.

"Paradise Garden"

Metro Production Featuring Harold Lockwood, an Adaptation of George Gibb's Novel, Interesting Psychological Study.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

BASED on George Gibb's novel of the same title, "Paradise Garden," the Metro-Yorke release for October 1, in six reels, is an interesting psychological study of a boy raised in the seclusion of a large estate and not allowed even to see any member of the opposite sex until he is twenty-one.

Jerry Benham, the boy on whom this experiment is tried, in accordance with the provisions of his father's will, has known only the affectionate companionship of his tutor until a short time before he reaches his majority, when he meets Una Habberton, who has wandered into "Paradise Garden."

Scene from "Paradise Garden" (Metro).

Jerry later goes out into the world and becomes infatuated with Marcia Van Wyck; he is, however, disillusioned when he finds her in the embrace of Jack Ballard, his chum, and goes back to his estate, where, through the instrumentality of his old tutor, a reconciliation is effected with Una, who has been insulted by Marcia.

Harold Lockwood gives a good interpretation of the character of Jerry, while Vera Sisson ably portrays the part of Una Habberton. The remainder of the cast, including William Clifford, Lester Cuneo, G. Sprotti, Catherine Henry, and Little George Hupp, give a creditable performance of their respective roles; particularly Mr. Clifford as Roger Canby, the tutor.

Fred J. Balshofer adapted the story and directed the production in collaboration with Richard V. Spencer. The settings are fine, there being many beautiful woodland scenes; and the photography is excellent. On account of the nature of the story the picture is inclined to be deficient in action, particularly in the earlier reels. However, there are several dramatic scenes in the latter part.

"Bab's Diary"

Paramount Comedy by Mary Roberts Rinehart, with Marguerite Clark in the Leading Part.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"BAB'S DIARY" is the story of a romantic school girl, home for her vacation and in revolt against the attention shown her debutante sister. In order to draw some notice to herself, Bab invents a bruised heart and a lover whom she names "Harold" from fancy and "Valentine" from a name on a malted-milk bottle. She permits letters to him to be discovered and feigns loss of appetite to excite pity. An actor is induced to impersonate "Harold Valentine" to cure her of her little deception, and some amusing comedy results follow, but the real comedy is in a delightful characterization by the author, charmingly interpreted by Miss Clark.

There are some exquisite settings and bright ensembles in this presentation—it is everywhere pleasing to the eye—and the direction is without serious faults, but the essence of success lies, where it always has, and always must, in the story and its interpretation. Without Mrs. Rinehart's deft and dainty characterization and her sparkling subtitles, the story would be mere froth. With them and the exceptionally fine studio visualization, almost any bright little actress would register a hit, hence the author easily dominates. Miss Clark, however, exhibits clear comprehension of her role and acts it with high intelligence. General result is a pleasing harmony of effect. "Bab's Diary" will prove an attraction on any program where it is shown.

of her father and becomes the wife of Maurice Maxwell, a man of great wealth and determination. He is also absolutely unscrupulous and does not hesitate to steal the plans of a poor inventor and to murder him when the man finds out that he had been cheated. This opens the way for the inventor's wife to remove Maxwell by shooting him, and Carl Randolph, a young man whose character gives the play its title, having proved himself worthy of Christine, a happy future is foreshadowed for them both.

There is nothing indirect in the manner of the story's telling. The climax is led up to along well-established lines and the picture is no better and no worse than hundreds of the same class. "The Dormant Power" has the advantages of being well played and of having received a good production, with Travers Vale as the director. Ethel Clayton lends her winning personality and her excellent acting ability to the character of Christine, and Montagu Love is easily equal to the demands of the part of Maurice Maxwell. Edward Langford plays Carl Randolph, the third character in the triangle, with the necessary skill. Joseph Herbert, Muriel Ostriche and George Morgan have the other important roles and are satisfactory.

"Camille"

Six-Part Subject Featuring Hesperia and Released Through General Film a Strong Adaptation of Dumas Story.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Hanover Film Company's six-part "Camille," being released through the General Film Company, is a strong production. Helen Hesperia, who plays the title role in the Dumas classic, gives a splendid performance. She has the art, the magnetism and the presence faithfully to establish the illusion of the great heroine of French fiction. She does all this in spite of the fact that she has not the advantage of youth—the superficial advantage, it may be added in haste. She does have the advantage of ripeness, of maturity, of skill in interpretation. No sylphlike creature is Hesperia. She has the physique that suggests power—to love strongly and to hate deeply, to renounce all her hopes of high happiness for the sake of the family of the one man who of all she has known has kindled in her the spark of real womanhood, and for whom she turns her back upon all that has constituted her former life; for whom she sacrifices her fortune.

This soul tragedy is splendidly told, with the pathos and atmosphere that only can be conveyed by French actors and the country of Southern France. The story is unfolded with delicacy—the relations of Camille with men other than Armand Duval are not shown, merely hinted at. What is accentuated is the nobility of Camille; her struggles with herself to put behind her and out of her life the companionship of the man whose family honor was threatened by her continued friendship for him.

The cast gives strong support to Hesperia. The senior Duval is finely portrayed. In the role of Armand is a player slightly handicapped by inferiority of physique to the dominating Marguerite Gautier, but one who puts into his work the fire and passion of the lover; who shows us a man incapable of appreciating the real quality of Camille, former courtesan that she had been, present mistress that she then was. He shows us an Armand who is an everyday man, with his jealousies and weaknesses, a man true to type, as it were. All of which brings out in striking relief the unusual woman.

Hesperia should win the hearts of Americans—men and women alike.

"Young Mother Hubbard"

A Story of Strong Heart Appeal Produced by Essanay, Featuring Little Mary McAlister.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

GROWN-UPS and growing-ups alike will be charmed by Essanay's production of "Young Mother Hubbard," adapted from Charles Mortimer Peck's story, and very sympathetically directed by Arthur Berthelet. No one but a lover of children could have entered into and sustained so successfully the spirit and the appeal of the story as has Mr. Berthelet; but then he had that inspiring child actress, Little Mary McAlister, to keep up his fervor and assist in making his task a labor of love and art.

That there are only fifty-three subtitles used in this production—quite a number of them of only three and four words in length, shows how well the story has been adapted for the screen, and also the nice painstaking of the direction. This makes a fraction over ten subtitles to one thousand feet, a very fine record and one that sheds lustre on the moving picture as a form of human expression.

One's heart is in one's mouth and eyes very often while watching this screened story, and laughter is frequently close at hand. Little Mother Hubbard has hungry mouths to feed and baby bodies to scrub and clothe and a comparatively big brother to comfort at times. And saddest of all, she has a selfish and weak stepfather, whom all her arts fail to make a man. He tires of providing food for them on the rented farm, and leaves the little mother and her brood to care for themselves. How the little mother succeeds in keeping her brother Frank, her little sister Louise and her baby sister from falling into the hands of the Children's Welfare Society must be left for the pictures to tell.

Mona, the little Mother Hubbard of the story, is impersonated by Little Mary McAlister. The remarkable aptitude of this child to sustain, so true to real life, the many and constantly changing demands of the role will cause many to wonder. And Little Mary does everything so naturally! Never once could I detect the sign of acting. She lives the part. In the scene where the really kindhearted but grouchy John Banning succumbs to the pleading smile of Little Mother Hubbard, the man spectator feels that he should have acted just the same had he been in Mr. Banning's place. No one could have proved unresponsive to such an appeal.

John Banning is well impersonated by Wm. Clifford, and the other roles are all well sustained.

The release date is Oct. 29, through the George Kleine System.

"Dead Shot Baker"

Five-Part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Founded on Alfred Henry Lewis "Wolfville" Story Has Several Degrees of Merit.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE opening episodes of "Dead Shot Baker," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature founded on the "Wolfville" stories by Alfred Henry Lewis, are full of the kind of western atmosphere that most of us like to think was once to be found beyond the Rockies. Picturesque bandits fairly swarm on the scene, and Dead Shot Baker, the sheriff of Wolfville, cleans up on them and rescues a beautiful heroine from their clutches with an appropriate amount of hard riding and quick gun play, done in the best style known to this brand of fiction. Baker's next move is to make the girl his wife, the proceedings being treated mostly in a comedy vein and helped out by a number of subtitles bearing the Alfred Henry Lewis grade of western talk, which has a humor of its own and was never heard in real life. The action and the interest rather lag for a time after this, but the new Mrs. Baker proves a trifle wayward and permits a tenderfoot postmaster to start a flirtation with her and the consequences set things in motion again.

Learning that her husband is trying to get himself killed in a battle with a band of outlaws in order that she may marry the postmaster, Dead Shot's wife comes to her senses and leads a posse to her husband's rescue. The postmaster is fired by the woman's spirit and joins the party himself. Dead Shot is saved and made to understand that he is the man his wife loves, after all. The last third of the picture contains enough riding, racing, shooting and fighting to supply a dozen melodramas of the western variety, and it is all exceedingly well done.

William Duncan, who directed "Dead Shot Baker" and also plays the title role, shines brilliantly in both capacities. His judgment in everything connected with his individual work and in selecting locations and rehearsing the cast is seldom at fault, even if he did allow slot machines to be used several years before they were invented. Carol Holloway makes a careful character study of Evelyn Baldwin, the girl who becomes Dead Shot's wife, and acts with earnestness and skill. Otto Lederer, J. W. Ryan, S. E. Jennings, R. L. Rogers and Charles Wheelock lend the right quality of support.

"The Beautiful Adventure"

Six-Part Adaptation of Play of the Same Name for Release on Mutual Program Falls Short of Dramatic Requirements.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

PRESENTED on the screen as a six-part filmization of one of the Charles Frohman successes, "The Beautiful Adventure" has but one of the qualities that go to make a successful moving picture drama: it is prettily staged. Ann Murdoch makes a charming heroine to be sure, and David Powell, playing opposite her, does as well, no doubt, as he has been allowed to do. Frankly speaking, as a dramatic production "The Beautiful Adventure" is an inexcusably poor piece of work.

The story of the play is one that could be picturized with good effect, presenting situations that could easily have been whipped into entertaining shape, with at least one reel less of film to spread itself over. As it stands, what consistency the story has is lost sight of, and many of the attempts at comedy are so obvious as to cause the situation to lose its mirth-provoking quality.

In the making of the moving picture feature why not aim at one standard of artistic production and let that be the highest? Any audience will be pleased with a well-made picture.

For the benefit of those who do not know the story of the play we will outline it in brief. A young French girl, living with her grandmother, longs to go to Paris and learn something of another life. Finally she gains her desire and goes to visit a wealthy cousin of her grandmother's and becomes the sweetheart of the son of the house against the wishes of his stepmother, who has planned a wealthy marriage for each of the lovers. Through a carefully laid plan of the stepmother's, the young man is sent away on an important mission, and during his period of absence by intercepting the letters from one to the other, she finally wins the girl's consent to marry the man she has chosen for her. The father of the young man, in sympathy with the lovers, sends for his son, who arrives in time to elope with the bride-to-be to the home of the grandmother. A peculiar situation arises when the grandmother, believing the young man to be her granddaughter's husband, insists on adding to its embarrassment.

Others of the cast are Ada Boshell, Carl Sauerman, Vera Fuller Mellish and Kate Sargeantson.

"'49-17'"

Five-Reel Butterfly Feature Tells Story of Reconstructed Western Town and What Happened There.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is sufficient novelty in this story, based on a narrative by William A. Cook in The Argosy Magazine, to get it out of the conventional run of Western offerings. There is not much dramatic strength in the first four reels, but the plot is fresh and not so obvious as sometimes happens, and there is sufficient drama in the last reel to provide a strong finish.

The story begins with a sentimental old fellow named Judge Brand, now an easterner, but formerly a miner in the days of '49. The judge frequently has visions of the old days and has a yearning to return West. But he fears things will be so changed that he will be disappointed. Accordingly, he sends his young secretary, Tom Robbins, out ahead, with instructions to visit Nugget Notch, the judge's old stamping ground, and see if he cannot infuse some of the old ginger into the place.

Tom goes to San Diego, where he picks up "Castle's '49 Camp," a traveling organization which has gone on the rocks financially. He takes this aggregation to Nugget Notch and they prepare a warm and exciting reception for the judge. When the latter arrives, he takes a hand in proceedings himself and shoots things up with the old ardor. The further events of the story concern a rescally fellow known as "Gentleman Jim" Rayner, of whom the judge had knowledge in '49. There is also, a pleasing love story between Tom and Peggy Bobbert, of the show troupe. Some interesting complications, having to do with the judge's former mining partner, develop, and the surprise at the close is well handled.

Ruth Ann Baldwin adapted and produced the number. Joseph Girard appears as the judge, Leo Pierson as Tom, Donna Drew as Peggy and Jean Hersholt as "Gentleman Jim." Mrs. Witting, George Pearce and Harry Rattenberry are also in the cast.

"The Curse of Eve"

Six-Part Corona Photoplay Deals With "Equal Standard" Propaganda But Fails to Impress on Account of Poor Construction.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

AN attempt has been made by the author and producer of "The Curse of Eve," a six-part Corona Cinema Company photoplay dealing with the double standard of morals for men and women, to present an ambitious and impressive screen drama. A want of skill on the part of the author in constructing his story and bad judgment in cutting and arranging the picture after it was taken have imposed a serious barrier to its success. With such a title it was naturally impossible to resist starting off with an allegoric opening in which Adam and Eve were shown, before and after the fall. The novelty of these historic incidents in the lives of the original settlers, has been appropriated by a number of earlier screen productions. In this case, matters are handled with very little poetic feeling, and without offense. The effort to suggest the creation of the world will be wasted, as far as most spectators are concerned.

Once the modern story is started and there is promise of a fairly interesting clash of character, but this is soon dispelled. The author displays such a want of knowledge in the art of story construction, weighing his plot down with unnecessary characters, starting off on a thousand false leads and continually throwing the play out of artistic balance that whatever merit lay at the bottom of his inspiration is buried under an irritating accumulation of blunders. Heroic cutting when the picture was assembled, should have been resorted to. Such treatment would have vastly improved the work.

Under the circumstances it is hardly necessary to criticise the efforts of the cast. Each member strove earnestly to give of his best endeavors. The production shows a liberal expenditure of money. In expert hands, the present material could be trimmed and fashioned into a more than passable picture.

to the level of sensational newspaper stories, the writing of which gains her her livelihood. Ida May Park who has written and directed the picture, lays the origination of the basic idea of the story to Edna Kenton, a newspaper woman, and has done well from an artistic point of view in developing it for the screen. And since the producer persists in finding his drama in the lives of those who walk life's shadier paths, there is nothing left for us to do but to follow up with admiration for the art that gives the play its realism.

Dorothy Phillips, with William Stowell playing opposite her, portrays the character of a woman who at the opening of the play has been assigned to interview a wife murderer, and hesitates momentarily at the discovery that his lawyer through whom she must gain permission was an acquaintance of her early days in her home town. In gaining permission for the interview she discovers the lawyer's straight-laced ideas and writes a satire which is quickly gobbled up by a certain magazine whose editor finds the woman who wrote it an easy prey to his wiles. At the moment when her love for the man has reached its height he deserts her for another and in the days which follow her path is again crossed by the friend of her youth. In the belief that she has reformed from the minor vices of which she has been guilty the laywer proposes marriage to her and is accepted. For some time she lives happily in his home, but eventually becomes tired of conventional life and longs for a taste of the old life. From this point on complications arise through the appearance on the scene again of the other man, and when the woman has left her home and is in a state of desperation she is picked up on the street in a half dead, half alive condition by her husband who takes her home and then goes with a horse whip to still the slanderous tongue of his wife's tormentor. The close of the story is satisfactory, showing that the woman has at last fallen in love with her husband.

"Magda"

Clara Kimball Young in Five-Part Screen Version of Sudermann's Powerful Drama Does Justice to the Work in Its New Form—Released by Select Pictures Corporation.

ist's work. The three-act English stage version made by Louis N. Parker, in which Mrs. Patrick Campbell appeared, gives the character of Magda its full scope, as Sudermann drew it. The Turnbull heroine is a much more discreet young woman and, although her early life at home and her career in Berlin are pictured on the screen, the spectator is not given as deep an insight into her past as is revealed in the original play. The stroke by which Magda defeats her narrow-minded but desperate old father, who is determined she shall consent to wed Kellner or not leave the room alive, is not even hinted at in the screen version. It is the master stroke of the drama, however, and lifts the story to its greatest tragic height.

The value of "Magda" consists in the logical treatment of its subject—the effect of a narrow and brutal parental authority upon a sensitive and ambitious girl. Magda is driven to rebellion by her father's harshness. She leaves home to become a singer, is betrayed by a man she had known as a child, and succeeds in her ambition. Received everywhere as a great artist, she is invited to become the guest of honor at the place where she was born. She accepts, meets her sister and is urged to return home. The reconciliation with her father is complete until he learns that she has been betrayed by Kellner, who is now anxious to marry her. The horrified old man grasps at the offer as the one means of preserving the family honor, but Magda will not have it so. She knows Kellner and despises him. When her father tells her she shall marry her betrayer or he will kill her the desperate woman frees herself by demanding of the pitiless old bigot how he knows that she is fit to become Kellner's wife. The blow is too much for the old man; he falls into a chair and dies. Magda goes back to her life in the world outside.

The theme of this play justifies such a conclusion. Like father, like child. Unreasoning opposition to the will of another had been instilled in the girl from her birth, and when the clash with her father comes she does not hesitate to use any means in her power to gain her ends. It is also one of the profound touches of the author that whether Magda spoke the truth or not remains unanswered in the mind of the spectator. In excluding this vital point from the screen version the picture will probably achieve a greater popular success. Sudermann is still strong meat for many minds. In the present form of the play only the over-prudish will take exceptions to the story it unfolds.

Clara Kimball Young is a beautiful Magda and indicates distinctly the phases of the character given her by the Turnbull version. Edward Kimball's impersonation of Magda's father is forceful and consistent and he does not resort to any unpleasant manifestation of physical weakness after he suffers the paralytic stroke. Competent characterizations are given by Alice Gale, Valkyrien, Kitty Baldwin, Maude Ford, Thomas Holding, Edmund Fielding and George Merlo.

The production always commands respect, and a disposition is shown to relieve the play of much of the sordid atmosphere that surrounds it in the printed book and on the spoken stage.

Two Five-Part Triangles

"The Firefly of Tough Luck" Entertaining Melodrama Featuring Alma Ruebens, and "Cassidy," Unusual Human Document Photoplay from a Story by Larry Evans.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The Firefly of Tough Luck"

HOW valuable a thing is a sense of humor is exemplified in "The Firefly of Tough Luck," a Triangle Western melodrama written by J. G. Hawkes and featuring Alma Ruebens and Walt Whitman. The particular circumstances which bring forth this statement are illustrative of another profound reflection: It is better to make the best of what can't be helped and to laugh at one's troubles, in place of tumbling into the doleful dumps. To teach this lesson is excuse enough for the existence of any screen drama, even if several of the incidents of the story are slightly beyond belief.

The dramatic groundwork of the J. G. Hawkes plot calls for a rare sort of dance hall heroine, who combines the patience and devotion of a puritan maiden with the ability to dance the latest Hawaiian steps while wearing the native costume without embarrassment. This gifted young woman, who is known as The Firefly, is burdened with a worse than useless husband, Bert Wilcox by name. Bert lives upon his wife's earnings and is always ready to help her look for work. She accepts an engagement in a western mining town and, after nearly perishing in the desert, is rescued and carried to the place by a gentleman who falls off a train and is forced to hunt for a place to stop. The adventures of these two people in "Tough Luck," which turns out to have but two inhabitants, are most entertaining and full of humor. How a rich gold strike is made, the town boomed, Firefly and her three fellow citizens grow rich, and how friend husband turns up, is welcomed by the faithful little woman, acts like the low down coyote that he is and is helped into another if not better world by the mayor of "Tough Luck," constitute a chain of amusing and interesting incidents. As for the sense of humor displayed by the four leading characters, the best example is when the manager of the opera house lives up to his contract and opens his theater, Firefly giving the entire entertainment and the orchestra consisting of one man and the audience of two. None of the happenings of "The Firefly of Tough Luck" may ever have taken place in real life, but the picture is enjoyable and teaches two or three bully morals besides.

The production is excellent, and E. Mason Hopper has directed the picture cleverly. A finely balanced cast is evidence. Alma Ruebens makes one accept the character of Firefly with almost no mental reservation, and that is advancing considerable. Walt Whitman's impersonation of "Tough Luck" Baxter is a gem in the way of character acting, being liberally humorous and perfect in every detail of make-up and action. Charles Gun is a likeable Danny Ward, and Jack Curtis is entitled to a place in the same class, as Happy Jack Clarke. Darrel Foss and Aaron Edwards are both useful, if not ornamental, members of the cast.

"Cassidy"

To call "Cassidy" an unusual human document is keeping well within fact. This five-part Triangle photoplay, founded on a story by Larry Evans, goes beneath the surface of things and develops an important truth in connection with the soul of man: A spark of good may be struck in the most stunted and degenerate natures if some one will but make a determined effort.

Cassidy is a thief, sick in body and mind, stranded in San Francisco and ready to commit any crime in order to get back to "De big burg." Soaked to the skin and racked by a painful cough, he waits, in a pelting rain, until the one light goes out in the house he intends to rob. Once inside he finds himself covered by a revolver in the hand of a determined man. The thief, his nerves completely unstrung, sinks to the floor, shaken by weakness and despair. His condition touches the heart of the man with the revolver. He listens to the boy's story and realizes that he has never had a chance. The thief is allowed to go free, with money in his pocket to take him to New York. He never gets there, but is killed while saving the daughter of his benefactor from white slavery.

A theatric device!—perhaps, but made convincing by the sincerity with which the story is told. Arthur Rosson, who directed the picture, has done his work sympathetically and intelligently, and has been ably assisted by the members of the cast. Dick Rosson plays Cassidy. He has made a close study of the part, and his conception is practically flawless. Some of his scenes should be shortened, however, as several points are dwelt on too long, and over-elaboration of details of character detract from his work. Pauline Curley is youthful and effective as the heroine, and Frank Currier as District Attorney Grant, Mac Alexander as Garvice, Eddie Sturgis as The Bull and John O'Connor as the bartender, are also to be highly commended.

"Cassidy" is not cheerful, but it will force those who see it to do some serious thinking.

"Mothers of Men"

Five-Part Woman's Suffrage Photoplay Shows Interesting Phases of Future Conditions When Women Become Judges and Governors—Produced by Robard's Players.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is no mistaking the intention of Hal Reid and Willis Robard in writing their five-part woman's suffrage photoplay, "Mothers of Men"—they expect it to be taken seriously. They are doomed to disappointment in a number of cases; other persons will share their view of the matter. The story, which lifts the veil of the future and shows some of the consequences when the mothers of men are elected to office, is conceived in a very melodramatic mood and deals with political crime, murder and a triple hanging. The wife of a prominent lawyer, a member of her husband's profession, is elected a judge of the criminal court and is called upon to sentence a murderer convicted by circumstantial evidence. She does her duty in the matter, and the man is hanged. She is next elected governor and, according to the story, her husband, although innocent, becomes involved in a murder case and is also convicted by circumstantial evidence. Overlook the fact that the situation is an impossible one, and it is interesting, to say the least. Torn between love and duty—to copy the language of the subtitles—and admonished to stand firm for the good of the cause and show the world that the new brand of womanhood does not intend to be swayed by its heart in place of its head, the wife and governor refuses her husband a pardon and he is only saved from the rope by the confession of the real murderer.

It is easily seen that the possibilities in such a scheme of things are numerous and far-reaching. Modeled after the melodramas with which his name is associated on the stage, Hal Reid and his collaborator have let nothing interfere with the plotting of their story. If plausibility of plain common sense refused to square with it, so much the worse for common sense and plausibility. Working, thus unrestricted, they have adapted a goodly number of well-tried theatric devices to their needs, including the pardon which arrives just in time to cheat the hangman. Some of the scenes are quite well produced and are correspondingly impressive, a number fall far below this effect.

The acting of the leading roles is adequate. Willis Robard directed the production and played the part of the governor's husband. It is evident that he has given the best that is in him to both tasks, and his impersonation of the convicted man has many excellent qualities. Dorothy Davenport plays the wife. She compels respect for the character at all times, an achievement that speaks volumes for her ability as an actress.

"THE LITTLE PRINCESS" COMPLETED.

The production of Mary Pickford's next Artcraft release, "The Little Princess," adapted to the screen by Frances Marion, from Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel, has just been finished at the Hollywood studio. Once again Miss Pickford will be seen in a child part such as she scored big success with in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and "A Poor Little Rich Girl." In characters of this type she always meets with public favor.

The picture was staged under the direction of Marshall Neilan, who directed Miss Pickford in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." In the supporting cast are many well-known film artists, including Norman Kerry, Theodore Roberts, Katherine Griffith, Ann Schaeffer, William E. Lawrence, Gertrude Short, Loretta Blake and Gustav von Seyffertitz.

"Who Is Number One?"

Paramount's First Serial from a Story by Anna Katherine Green Cleverly Produced and Interesting in First Two Episodes.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

JUDGING from the first two episodes of Paramount's first serial it is to be one of the best of its kind. Anna Katherine Green is responsible for the story on which it is based, and in it Kathleen Clifford is a moving picture star for the first time, portraying cleverly the role of Aimee Villon, the adopted daughter of an American millionaire who for eighteen years has been beset by warnings of vengeance from whom and for what he is unable to tell.

The first episode tells of the adoption of Aimee Villon, a Parisian heiress, who arrives at the home of Graham Hale with her maid and tutor and enters into the exciting incidents which follow with the apparent innocence of youth. Following her appearance on the scene Hale's enemies commence their bombardment in earnest, the initial thrill being the breaking open of his vault and the theft of the secret of his new invention, a flying fortress, and Aimee's security papers. Aimee, found missing, is discovered in the grounds of Hale's home, where she has been hurriedly left by the safe-breakers with her hands tied.

The second episode deals principally with the pursuit of the safe-breakers in which is encompassed a thrilling chase with one or two of the old standbys, such as the breaking of the continuity of the chase by the passing of a railway train across the trail doing duty. Not to be outwitted, Hale's son and Aimee rush to the steel mill and put in service the flying fortress. It is afterward discovered when the firing of the guns is found to be without effect, that either a fool or a traitor is in their midst, for the bullets which they have been using are putty bullets made for experimental purposes.

"Who is Number One?" thus far compares favorably with some of the cleverly made European serials which we have admired for their consistency of plot and skillful staging. The subtitling of this serial is worthy of special mention—pithy and cleverly written. The atmosphere is complete and there are few if any obvious moments.

"Over There"

Six-Part Photoplay Written by and Featuring Charles Richman Makes Patriotic Appeal with Considerable Force —Distributed by Select Pictures Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

NOT satisfied with his success as a star of the screen, Charles Richman has entered the field of authorship with a photoplay bearing the title "Over There." Its chief merit is its timeliness. The story is an appeal to American manhood to do its bit in the present struggle, and its theme will find an echo in every loyal heart. Under these circumstances it is not necessary to inquire too closely into the skill with which the author has done his work. Aside from continuing some of the arguments, long after the spectator is convinced, it should be stated that "Over There" tells a plain, straightforward story, and that the production is sufficiently realistic to satisfy the average patron of the screen.

Opening in this country, the plan shows an able-bodied young American who was marked before his birth with a horror of bloodshed. He refuses to enlist even after his sweetheart gives him the choice of doing so or of losing her. The girl goes to France as a Red Cross nurse, and her father is an officer in the forces sent abroad. Still the young man hangs back, but, in the end, a revulsion of feeling gets the better of the old fear, and he enters the service. Once over on the other side, he proves himself a hero, saves his sweetheart's father, is wounded, and is nursed back to life by the girl, who is proud and happy to renew the engagement.

Although a somewhat mature hero, Charles Richman sustains his well-known reputation for artistic acting, and is ably supported by a cast that includes Anna Q. Nilson, as the Red Cross nurse.

Live Comedies in "Ham" Series.

The new series of Kalem's "Ham and Bud" comedies, the first of which have been released by General Film Company, continue to strike a popular chord with the fans. Lloyd Hamilton has never done better work in his three years as a star in comedy pictures, and the same applies to his team-mate, "Bud" Duncan. Ethel Teare and Henry Murdock, other favorites in this series, are again demonstrating why they are popular.

The first of the comedies released this month is "Politics in Pumpkin Center," which marks the entry of the two comedians in the field of politics.

November to Be Artcraft's Big Month

Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart and Elsie Ferguson Are Starred in the Four Weeks.

THE November schedule of releases for Artcraft presents Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart and Elsie Ferguson. This is the banner month for Artcraft, offering the largest number of big productions for release in one month since the inception of the company.

The first release will be Miss Pickford, in "The Little Princess." The second will be Elsie Ferguson's "The Rise of Jennie Cushing." This is Miss Ferguson's second motion picture for Artcraft and is also an adaptation of a popular book. The novel, by Mary S. Watts, published by the Macmillan Company, is still one of the concern's best sellers.

Douglas Fairbanks' contribution is "Reaching for the Moon." This photoplay presents another original idea in the way of screen stories and is now being staged under the direction of John Emerson. It was for this picture that the entire Fairbanks producing organization crossed and recrossed the continent, between Los Angeles and New York, in order to spend two days filming scenes in the Eastern metropolis. The nature of the story is not disclosed at this time because of its novelty. Eileen Percy again appears opposite Fairbanks.

William S. Hart, in his second Artcraft picture, "The Silent Man," is now being staged in California under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. Hart's new production is from the pen of Charles Kenyon, whose "Kindling" was played with such notable success by Margaret Illington. It is a story of the big Western country, providing the popular star with the role of a miner who has prospected the vast desert for years.

"The Babes in the Wood"

It Will Be the Next of Fox's Delightful Series of Children's Series.

ANOTHER elaborate motion picture version of an age-old story now rests in William Fox's film vaults and will soon have its screen presentation. The new Fox spectacle is a cinema offering of the famous fairy tale, "The Babes in the Woods," and is several reels more than ordinary feature length.

Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, who created the leading roles in Mr. Fox's tremendously successful "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp," both of which were exhibited at the Globe theater, on Broadway, give the same amazing demonstration of dramatic ability that has distinguished their first two productions.

C. M. and S. A. Franklin, who directed "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Aladdin," supervised the making of "The Babes in the Woods" and made a master-work of the subject. The photoplay spectacle was filmed in the Grand Canyon, Colorado; in the big Fox studio at Hollywood and in the mountains and valleys of California; and in Hawaii. The natural settings are particularly beautiful.

All the charm of the original of "The Babes in the Woods" has been retained in the celluloid version and not a few of the memorable scenes of the story gain greatly through visualization. Especially fine is the episode in the witch's cottage. The house itself is a wonderful structure of gingerbread, stick candy, hot cross buns and such delicacies. The witch makes her entry upon the scene with the immortal lines, "Nibble, nibble, little mouse, who's nibbling at my little house?"

"The Legion of Death" With Edith Storey.

Edith Storey's second starring vehicle under the Metro banner, "The Legion of Death," by June Mathis, is now in the course of production at the West coast studios in Hollywood California, under the direction of Tod Browning, who guided the "Bernhardt of the Screen" in her initial Metro picture. The production is a massive special feature with spectacular settings of great size.

The story is a captivating romance of Russia at the time of the recent revolution, which resulted in the downfall of the Romanoff dynasty. The heroine, a princess (played by Edith Storey), is a typical fighting girl of Russia, who recruits "The Legion of Death," and braves battle with the men of the enemy.

Phil McCollough will play the lead opposite Miss Storey, in the role of an American war correspondent. Charles Gerard, Fred Malatesta, and Pomeroy Cannon are the other leading members of the cast. Hundreds of extras will be used in the thrilling ensemble and battle scenes.

Miss Dalton's Paramount Debut Oct. 22.

In producing "The Price Mark," featuring Dorothy Dalton, which will be released by Paramount, Oct. 22, Thomas H. Ince devoted much time personally to supervising the work, though the direction was actually done by Roy Neill. The latter, owing to his having lived and worked in Egypt, was able to bring first-hand knowledge of the country to the scenes laid in Cairo.

Miss Dalton from the very start of the new picture was enthusiastic over the prospect. She saw at once how admirably the role suited her, and was particularly pleased because it afforded her an opportunity not only for emotional and dramatic acting but a chance to inject comedy into some of the scenes as well.

The art studios of New York, the streets of Cairo, and similar localities, give opportunities for fine scenic effects.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

CAMILLE (Hanover Film Co).—This six-part feature of the Hanover Film Company features Helen Hesperia, a French actress of marked skill and high intelligence. The picture is well played, as is set forth in a review in another column.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

BONDAGE, October 15.—A five-part production featuring Dorothy Phillips with William Stowell playing opposite her. The story treats of the experiences of a newspaper woman who has drifted into the lowest brand of sensational writing, and finally finds happiness in the love of her husband married for convenience sake. A full review of the picture will be found elsewhere.

Brind Educational Moving Pictures.

THE INFINITELY SMALL (Brind).—In this one-reel picture the wonders of miscoscopic pond life have been exploited to the full. The illustration is clearly photographed and well-explained. A full review can be found in the Motion Picture Educator published in this issue.

MY FRIEND, THE ANT (Brind).—In this one-reel picture we get an excellent idea of how the ant lives, and of his industrious ways. The picture is a decidedly remarkable one and is presented in an entertaining fashion. A full review can be found in the Motion Picture Educator published in this issue.

THE FRESH WATER AQUARIUM (Brind).—Showing many beautiful tropical fish which are now being introduced into the parlor aquarium. A full review of this picture can be found in the Motion Picture Educator published in this issue.

BEAUTIFUL GOLDFISH (Brind).—A one-reel illustration of most of the things that are interesting in connection with goldfish. Beautiful and valuable specimens are included in this picture which has been reviewed at length in the Educational Department, published in this issue.

DENIZENS OF THE DEEP (Brind).—This film includes illustrations of forms of vegetation on the sea bottom as well as odd species of fish. For a full account of this film, which is in two parts, we refer you to the Motion Picture Educator, published on another page of this issue.

Butterfly Pictures.

'49—'17, October 15.—A five-reel Western story, adapted by Ruth Ann Baldwin from a story by William A. Cook. The events concern an eastern judge, formerly a miner in the days of '49. He has his secretary reconstruct an old mining camp and some interesting happenings result. Joseph Girard, Donna Drew, Jean Hersholt and Leo Pierson are in the cast. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Corona Cinema Company.

THE CURSE OF EVE (Corona).—A poorly constructed story, this six-part photoplay, which attempts to teach the injustice of the double standard of morality, is not very successful with its mission. It is well acted. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

DEAD-SHOT BAKER (Vitagraph), October 15.—Five-part screen version of one of the Alfred Henry Lewis' "Wolfville" stories, this picture is very entertaining. William Duncan and Carol Holloway are the stars. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

George Kleine System.

YOUNG MOTHER HUBBARD (Essanay), October 29.—A story of fine heart appeal, in which pathos and humor happily commingle, excellently acted and directed. Little Mary McAllister appears in one of her strongest (if not her best) roles, and the other members of the cast are well assigned. A detailed review is given on another page, this issue.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

BAB'S DIARY, September 24.—A nicely-presented and amusing comedy by Mary Roberts Rinehart, with Marguerite Clarke in the lead. An attractive release.

THE TROUBLE BUSTER (Pallas), October 8.—A good average story featuring Vivian Martin and the strength of which is bunched in the latter half of the five reels. The subject is wholesome. It is reviewed on another page.

THE COW JUMPED OVER THE MOON (Klever), October 14.—An amusing comedy, in which Victor, as the hero of the hour, decides to cut the cost of meat. He buys a cow and marks off one of her sides with white paint after the manner of a butcher's chart, leads the cow to the meat shop and, while he tries to explain to the butcher what cut he wants, the cow escapes and makes her way back to the herd.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

FROM TREE TO MILL (Pathe), October 7.—An educational feature of instructive interest, showing the manner in which hardwood timber is cut and transported in the mountains of Tennessee. A pleasing half reel subject.

HAPPY HOOLIGAN—IN SOFT (Pathe), October 7.—One of F. Opper's comics in animated form, showing Happy Hooligan as attendant to an invalid. He thinks the job a snap until the invalid puts him through a hard day. Some funny situations arise and the comic is successful. On same reel with above.

MAKING STEEL PLATES (Pathe), October 14.—An instructive industrial half reel, demonstrating the way in which molten steel is first converted into ingots, then heated and rolled and cut into armor plates for battleships and other purposes.

DER END OF DER LIMIT (Pathe), October 14.—On same reel with above. A very funny series of animated drawings, showing some further exploits of the Katzenjammer Kids. They have a lot of fun with an old captain and play some strange tricks on him.

A CORNER OF THE MORVAN (Pathe), October 21.—A scenic half reel, in colors, picturing some delightful regions in one of the French provinces not touched by the war. Very attractive and picturesque.

OUR GAME BIRDS (Pathe), October 21.—On same reel with above. An unusually pleasing bit of nature story, showing the wild duck in its native haunts; the hatching and rearing of the young is especially good. An entertaining and enjoyable offering.

THE ABANDONED MINE (Pathe), October 21.—Episode No. 6 of "The Seven Pearls." An interesting feature of this number is Perry's loss of memory, after the explosion. He and Ilma and Harry are in the mine gallery together and from Perry Ilma recovers one of the pearls. The later happenings in the counterfeiters' den are humorous and quite dramatic. The number closes by a nitro-glycerine explosion, following which Perry recovers his memory.

FROM LONDON TO LARAMIE (Pathe-Rolin), October 21.—A two-reel comedy, featuring Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels and Harry Pollard. This is the familiar plot in which an Englishman and his valet visit the American west and have numerous adventures. Harold Lloyd, as the valet, proves as amusing as usual. The situations are freshened up by some really good comedy and numerous laughs are scored.

THE FALSE PEARL (Pathe), October 28.—Episode No. 7 of "The Seven Pearls" series. Harry and Ilma are brought up from their underground prison, and Perry recovers his memory. The latter makes away with one of the pearls, observed by Stayne. Ilma and Harry are prevented from making love by the Sultan's emissary. Then they try to obtain one of the pearls from a Miss Sunderlee and meet with further adventures. This continues the interest, though it contains no feature of unusual strength.

THE MARK OF CAIN (Astra-Pathe), November 4.—An excellently-developed murder mystery, featuring Mrs. Vernon Castle and Antonio Moreno. The story concerns a wealthy man named Trowbridge and his niece. Trowbridge has a hobby for studying insects and is murdered in a park while engaged in this pastime. The attendant circumstances are full of interest and skillfully handled. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

PARADISE GARDEN, October 1.—Interesting six-reel subject, featuring Harold Lockwood, and dealing with a boy who is kept on a large estate until he reaches manhood, and not allowed to associate with, or even see, any members of the opposite sex. A review is published on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 145 (Gaumont), October 10.—Interesting items of this issue include scenes in France showing the return of soldiers to camp after a hard day's fighting, the Imperial Japanese war mission at the West Point military academy, young American millionaires learning to fly, and the Red Cross parade in New York City.

THE LOST EXPRESS NO. 4 (Signal), October 11.—"The Oil-Well Conspiracy" is the title of this chapter. It has plenty of interesting action and deals with the discovery by Helen Thurston of the stolen blue print of the combustion chamber in her father's secret formula for manufacturing granulated gasoline. In her accidental presence at the oil wells, where the thieves are endeavoring to put into practice her father's secret, she has a narrow escape from Harelip and succeeds in destroying their work. The close of the picture shows the cabin in which Helen has been imprisoned being demolished by a runaway oil train.

SWEET CHARITY (Strand), Oct. 16.—A moderately entertaining comedy, containing considerable business of the slapstick order. Billie Rhodes and Jay Belasco have the leading roles and acquit themselves well. The story of the comedy deals with a young lady's effort to sell chances to help the "poor starving Belgians." Her lover wants to give her a check for $100 and so save her the trouble of visiting the other offices in his building. In her determination to do as she pleased, she meets with several insults from the proprietors of said offices, and afterward calls her lover to take vengeance on the offenders. This gives opportunity for some rough-and-tumble business that is fairly amusing.

Robard's Players.

MOTHERS OF MEN (Robard's Players).—Hal Reid and Willis Robard are the authors of this five-part melodrama, which has women's suffrage for a theme. The picture is of uneven merit. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Select Pictures Corporation.

MAGDA (Select), October.—Clara Kimball Young in five-part screen version of Herman Sudermann's powerful stage drama, this picture has much merit. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

OVER THERE (Select).—Charles Richman is the author and star of this five-part photoplay which is a plea for enlistment. The scenes are laid in this country and in France. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE FIREFLY OF TOUGH LUCK, October 21.—A rattling good five-part western story, this picture was written by J. G. Hawks. Alma Ruebens and Walt Whitman are the stars. A longer review appears on another page of this issue.

CASSIDY, October 21.—Five-part screen version of a story by Larry Evans, this picture contains strong character acting by Dick Rosson and has several novel features. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

THE SILENT TERROR (Universal Special Feature).—This is the correct title of the first episode of Universal new serial entitled "The Red Ace." A comment of it was published in last week's issue on page 402 under the name of "The Quest of Virginia." This episode was released on October 8.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 92 (Universal), October 1.—Roosevelt reviewing Middle-West troops, Hoover and fruit company giving away overripe shipment of bananas, scenes from the visit of the Japanese commission and other subjects of a topical nature are presented in this number.

CURRENT EVENTS NO. 22 (Universal), October 8.—Contains pictures of a Dutch battleship at San Francisco, woman patriot of ninety-four, English Jackies and American Navies at prayer and in battle, and many other news features.

FROM OUT OF THE PAST (Universal Special), October 8.—No. 16, the final instalment of "The Gray Ghost." This brings up some very entertaining situations and solves the mysterious double identity of "The Gray Ghost." The double exposure photography is particularly good. The solution fails to clear up certain minor points, such as the invulnerability of the "Ghost" to bullets and even death itself. But the more important mysteries are satisfactorily explained.

THE GETAWAY (Bison), Rel. Week of October 22.—A two-reel subject by Alice MacGowan and Harriet Brodner, featuring Neal Hart, Joe Rickson, Mignon Anderson and Bud Osborne. It tells of an honest cowpuncher who is made the victim of a frame-up by some cattle thieves. Also how he meet a charming young widow, who saves his life, after he has saved that of her child. This is graphic in presentation and holds the interest very well. It makes, on the whole, a very pretty story.

A WISE DUMMY (Joker), Rel. Week of October 22.—A fairly amusing comedy number, by George Parker, featuring Max Asher, Walter Belasco, Gladys Tennison and Harry Mann. Max appears as a flirtiatious pawnbroker and the fun is of the knockabout type.

THE TIGHTWAD (Joker), Rel. Week of October 22.—A knockabout comedy, by Tom Gibson, featuring William Franey and Gale Henry as a married couple about to celebrate their wedding anniversary. The husband's penurious disposition leads to many funny incidents. This runs better than the average in humorous incidents.

WHAT'LL WE DO WITH UNCLE (Victor), Rel. Week of October 22.—A one-reel comedy, by King Vidor, featuring Henry Murdock, Mildred Davis and Edwin King Baker. The scenes occur in an apartment house and the characters include a writer, an artist, and a lady pianist. The writer tries to kill himself because of jealousy and some funny knockabout situations arise. An average number of the type.

THE END OF THE RUN (Gold Seal), Rel. Week of October 22.—Shelley Sutton, feauring Helen Gibson, O. C. Jackson, Vai Paul, George Williams and George Routh. This shows how a freight conductor falls in with a tramp who is passing counterfeit money. The girl's father becomes involved, after considerable money has been passed, but is eventually cleared and the crime traced to the conductor and his pal. The girl furnishes a slight thrill at the close, by jumping to a moving freight train from an automobile and capturing the conductor. A programme number of about average strength.

FAT AND FURIOUS (L-KO), Rel. Week of October 22.—A two-reel comic number, featuring Marta Sterling and others. She plays the girl at a country railroad station, which is robbed by a gang of thieves. The loot is recovered by the girl and her lover, who is section foreman. The action is fast and furious in this, particularly in the second reel. The humor is farily strong in spots and the number as a whole is an enjoyable one of the type.

A FIRE ESCAPE FINISH (Nestor), Rel. Week of October 22.—A two-reel comedy subject, by Fred Palmer, featuring Caroline Vaughn, Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons and Fred Gamble. This is farcical in tone and while a little slow in the first reel works up to some very funny situations toward the close. It pictures the elopement of a young couple under distressing circumstances and the way in which they finally find happiness. The closing scenes are very laughable.

LOOKING 'EM OVER (Nestor).—Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran appear in this comedy, written by themselves. Eddie, a gay young benedict, entices Lee, a henpecked spouse, to visit the cabarets. They meet their wives, having a good time with Brother Tom and his friend from Texas. Slight in plot, but agreeably presented and quite enjoyable.

World Pictures.

THE DORMANT POWER (Peerless), October 22.—Fairly goor five-part melodrama with Ethel Clayton and Montagu Love in the leading roles. The scenes are laid in Texas and the East. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Lederer Expands Film Interests

Well Known Legitimate Producer Increases Activities in the Film Domain—To Produce His Previous Stage Comedies.

GEORGE W. LEDERER will take a much greater place in the motion picture business in the season of 1917-1918 than heretofore. To this end his plans are already laid. Having completed his direction of Marion Davies in "Runaway Romany" for the Ardsley Art Film Co., he has decided to follow up his production of feature films of last season, by a much more pretentious spectacle, title and star as yet unannounced, some time during early November so that the offering can be released to the market about Christmas. The only information forthcoming at this early date is that it will be an unusual subject scenarioized by Herbert Hall Winslow and offered to the trade on the state-right basis.

Of further interest to our readers is Mr. Lederer's statement that he has purchased the rights of all of his former stage-comedy successes and many other well-known comedies besides, and will produce them in two-reels each, commencing with "Three Twins." Among the subjects to follow will be "The Belle of New York," "Mistakes Will Happen," "The Telephone Girl," "The Rounders," and others, totalling in all over one hundred. Wherever possible members of the original casts will be employed. To that end Charles Dixon, who appeared in the original version of "Three Twins," has been assigned to his role in the first of the Lederer two-reel film comedies.

It is this director-producer's intention to release these subjects through the Hoffman-Foursquare exchanges, negotiations to that effect having already reached a mature stage. Production commences the last week in October in the newly erected George Backer studios on 38th street, just off Seventh avenue. Lederer's offices will also be moved to this same address. Incidentally, the above-mentioned producer will be the first tenant of this studio. The first of the comedy series should be ready for distribution about November 10.

NAZIMOVA SUPPORTED BY CAPABLE CAST.

Nazimova, who is now working on her first Metro picture, "God's Message," adapted by Ethel Browning Miller from the story, "A Rose-Bush of a Thousand Years," under the direction of George D. Baker, is supported by a most capable cast in this super-production.

Charles Bryant is her leading man in "God's Message." He will play the role of Paul Granville, an American artist. Frank Currier will portray the Prior of the Monastery. Rigelow Cooper, for years a prominent player in Edison photoplays will be seen as De Roche. Fra Augustin, a character role, is in the capable hands of John Sturgeon, an experienced player of both stage and screen. Albert Hall, who plays Pierre, has appeared on the screen for World, Famous-Players, Biograph and Pathe. Mestaire, the inn-keeper, is played by Philip Sandford, and Dave Turner plays the gate-keeper at the monastery.

Joline, the artist's model, portrayed by the great Nazimova, is a role of dramatic intensity, and the other roles in the picture give all the members of the cast opportunity for sterling characterizations. The exteriors of this production are being made at New Orleans and the interiors will be made at the Metro studios in New York City.

BRENON LOOKING FOR NEW THEATER.

"The Fall of the Romanoffs" ended its run at the Broadway theater Oct. 13 simply because it was impossible to extend the run any longer. Arrangements are now being made to find another theater in which to extend the run of the picture, and it now looks as if within the next few days satisfactory arrangements will be made for a continued showing of this remarkable film which has been hailed with unmistakable enthusiasm by both press and public.

Great interest is being shown in the film throughout the country, and within a short time it will be exhibited in all the big cities in the United States. It opened in Toronto Monday, October 15, where it is being shown at theater prices.

A New and Interesting Group

Brind Educational Moving Pictures Present Zoological Subjects Lucidly and Attractively.

NOT long ago we reviewed the first of the Brind Educational series, of which the J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., is the foreign sales agent. This picture was entitled "All About Bees" and was exhibited at the Strand Theater, New York City, the week of September 30. At a recent showing of Brind Educational pictures in the projection room of the J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., Room 1010, 729 Seventh avenue, a group of five zoological subjects of special interest and careful arrangement were exhibited.

"Beautiful Goldfish."

The first of these "Beautiful Goldfish" explained many things about the various species that have evolved from the "Mutt" or wild variety for which we pay the trifling sum of from ten to twenty-five cents. These wonderfully made goldfish, developed to a state of rare perfection and beauty, bring prices which run into the hundreds, and which are paid by goldfish fanciers without turning a hair. Among the varieties shown are the egg-shaped, partly finless "Lionhead," the "Dutch Lionhead" or "Oranda Shishigashira," mottled-blue "Telescopes," coal-black "Moors," and "Japanese Broadtails." We are shown the "Fry Nurseries," in which the baby goldfish are reared to maturity out of doors, and we see also a pair of "Orandas" depositing eggs on a spray of water plant. A microscopic X-ray view of an egg about to hatch, in which can be plainly seen the young goldfish curled up, is shown and also a baby goldfish just hatched. This picture is 467 feet in length.

"My Friend the Ant."

Next came "My Friend the Ant," which is a truly remarkable picture, in which we are made acquainted with the ant, his haunts and habits, and learn of this busy insect more than many of us ever would know save through some careful investigator in film. In the picture we accompany a huge ant to his home, where his friends and associates are busy doing repair work. These little insects are seen carrying the material for the framework of their home, including a slab of lumber, which in its magnified state appears about the size of a match, and bricks or balls of earth from which they build their nest. An exciting scene shows the soldier ants attacking a huge caterpillar, which finally they drag into the nest for food. Then we are shown the inside of the ant house and the different compartments in which are stored the eggs, grubs and pupae of the ants. Once more on the outside our attention is drawn to an "ant cowboy" herding "ant-cows" or aphides on a branch of a plant in order that the ants may be well supplied with the sweet juices secreted by the ant-cow. Attacks on grasshoppers, which, by the way, are futile, and also on a katydid, chrysalides, and finally a butterfly which is unable to resist the onslaught, are interesting. A fight between a soldier ant and a stranger ant opens the way to a remarkable sight in which the queen ant, discovering her soldier ant wounded, comes to him as an angel of mercy, lifts his head, licks it and rubs it with her ant hands. This scene is magnified and is very unusual. In fact the picture in its entirety is decidedly out of the ordinary. It contains 671 feet.

"The Freshwater Aquarium" (Tropical).

This picture, beautifully photographed, shows us various exquisite varieties of tropical fish from different parts of the world, and which are now used as pets for the parlor aquarium. Among the species illustrated are the Barbs of East India, which are distant relatives of the common carp or gold fish, the Mexican swordtail, which brings its young into the world alive, the butterfly fish from West Africa, which is the only freshwater flying fish, and the armor-plated catfish of Brazil, which is completely covered with bony plates, and gives an entertaining demonstration of its ability to transport itself on land from river to river, remaining out of the water for hours at a time. Other interesting species are the Paradise fish of China, which was found in rice-field ditches, and which makes its nest on the surface of the water of air-bubbles, the Siamese fighting fish, and the air-breathing guramis. 522 feet of film comprise this reel.

"The Infinitely Small."

Consisting of a series of views of microscopic pond life, well photographed. This includes rotifers, vorticella or "whirlpool animalcules," plumatella, paramacia, cypris, daphnia, cyclops, cetochilus, bell animalcules, hydra, etc. This picture, which consists of 732 feet of film, is an excellent one on the subject, clearly photographed, carefully detailed and entertaining.

"Denizens of the Deep."

An illustration of unusual fish and also of plant life at the bottom of the sea was shown in two parts. The picture opened with a view of a storm-tossed sea, after which we descended to the floor of the ocean to watch the fishes dart in and out among the fantastical vegetation to be found there. Among the fish shown were the blow-fish, which inflates itself at a moment of danger and floats on the surface, and when all signs of danger are past deflates and darts swiftly to the bottom, the red hog fish, and the lively pork fish, which, by the way, are no relation. Then there were also shark suckers, and the leather fish, which are poisonous as human food. The second part of the picture introduced a number of exquisite denizens, many of which are found in the tropical waters about the West Indies. There were also the angel fish, the queen trigger fish, the spade fish, the parrot fish and the spiny box-fish, so called for its peculiar shape; and, lastly, there was that interesting species known as the sea horse, which, by the way, has a prehensile tail, and in the picture is seen to entwine it around a fixed object. The first part of this picture covers 616 feet of film, and the last part 328 feet.

The headquarters of the Brind Educational Pictures is at 449 West 206th street, New York City.

Innovation at Loew's Lincoln Square

Young People's Program Instituted at Loew's Lincoln Square Theater in Co-operation with National Board of Review.

NOT long ago, under the directorship of F. R. Abrams, the young people's Saturday morning program was tried with great success at Marcus Loew's New Rochelle theater, with the promise of further extensions of the same in other parts of New York State. Therefore, in accordance with this promise, on Saturday morning, October 6, at 10.30 o'clock, a similar program was exhibited before the children of the neighborhood at the Lincoln Square theater, Broadway and 66th street, New York City, in cooperation with the National Board of Review.

The program was opened by Orrin G. Cocks of the National Board of Review, who acted as chairman of the occasion, introducing the following speakers: Mrs. John Francis Yawger, president of the City Federation of Women's Clubs, Dr. Cranston Brenton of the National Board of Review, representing the clergy, and Dr. Henry E. Jenkins, representing the Board of Education.

Through these inspiring personalities an appeal was made to the audience to do its utmost toward making the project a success. The children were asked to tell all the children they knew about the splendid entertainment which was to be provided for them at this theater every Saturday morning at the moderate rate of five and ten cents. Mrs. Yawger suggested that the mothers look upon this Saturday morning performance in the same way that they look upon the kindergarten—a place where the children can be sent for a couple of hours of wholesome recreation with the assurance that they will not be subjected to the physical and moral danger which confronts them as they play in the crowded streets of the city.

The program had for its feature "The Poor Little Rich Girl," in which Mary Pickford plays delightfully the stellar role, and which thoroughly pleased the children. The opening number was entitled "A Trip Through Glacier National Park," which is prefixed by an amusing bit of animated cartoon work, in which a mule carrying a man on his back endeavors to make the peak of a high mountain. Having finally made his goal, he balances there for a brief moment, then tumbles down the other side. Equally amusing to the children was a similar bit of animated cartoon work preceding that portion of the picture where we are made acquainted with the Blackfoot Indians. Following the feature an industrial entitled "The Making of Print Paper" was exhibited.

For the reason probably that it is difficult to make an immediate impression on cosmopolitan New York, there were not present the numbers that should have been on such an important occasion. It is to be hoped, however, that with the continuance of these special performances for young people New York's parent public will awaken to a realization of what they will mean to the young people not alone of New York City, but of the entire country. Proper support given to the management of Loew's 66th Street theater in this enterprise means that all the Loew neighborhood theaters throughout the country will in all probability follow the same policy.

Interesting Educationals

One Scientific Subject, One Industrial, One Tropical, One Travel and Two Zoological Subjects.

"The Development of the Watch" (Mutual-Gaumont).

THE most interesting subject in Reel Life No. 76 is a display of watches of the different periods. The picture really describes the evolution of the clock, showing one of the first watches that was made, and which dates back to 1500. This is followed by various elaborate types of watches, wonderful enameled and jewelled varieties used by royalty of the period. There is the bird-singing watch, only three of which are in existence, and there is the tulip watch and the egg watch, and the perfume watch which has a perfume compartment attached to it. There is also a wonderfully made watch which is a snuff-box, music box and watch combined, and even a watch in which fountains play. The display, which is a remarkable one, appears in Reel Life through the courtesy of Willard H. Wheeler, of Maiden Lane, New York. These watches are of French, Dutch, Swiss, English and German manufacture.

"Cantaloupes of Imperial Valley, Cal." (Mutual-Gaumont).

An interesting illustration of the extent to which the canteloupe is cultivated in the Imperial Valley, California, will be found in the 76th release of Reel Life. Here we see the cantaloupes being harvested in enormous quantities, and learn that in 1917 no less than 6,000 carloads were shipped out of the valley. Those that are shipped are carefully selected and the culls fed to the hogs. Skilled packers, some of whom are able to pack as many as 300 crates a day, earn from $75 to $125 dollars per week, we are tcld; a fact which if true should be the means of leading some less fortunate ones back to the soil. During a trip across continent the cars containing the cantaloupes are iced at least seven times, and two hundred cars, it is stated, are shipped daily.

"Safety First" (Universal).

In the 43rd release of the Screen Magazine will be found an entertaining illustration of the dangers of the streets and the manner in which professional drivers must qualify before attempting to guide motor vehicles through the streets. There is much to enlighten one in this picture, and it is one of the best and most useful numbers contained in this issue of the Magazine.

"A Trip to Hawaii, No. 2" (Educational).

The second instalment of the Lyman Howe pictures recently purchased by the Educational Films Corporation of America covers some of the beautiful scenic features of Hawaii, including the Waisna Falls, Boiling Pots and Rainbow Falls. Cutting sugar cane is an interesting feature of the picture, and a brief bit on catching sharks preludes a remarkable series of views of the crater of the volcano of Kilauea, which close the picture.

"Animals of Australia" (Educational).

The shingle-backed lizard gives the opening performance in this interesting picture of animals of Australia. Following him the alligator, also belonging to the lizard family, demonstrates his ability to swallow eggs whole. The rabbit-eared bandicoot and the echidna come next. The latter interesting little animal forms a link between the mammal and the bird, has quills like the porcupine, and hatches its young from eggs. The emu and the cassowary, in interesting review, close the picture.

"Warblers of France" (Pathe).

An attractive picture on bird life presented by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., introduces us to the song birds of France. In the picture we are treated to close-up views of these birds in their nests, rearing their young, and busying themselves with gathering food. The subject is fully illustrated and makes a charming number for any program.

Film to Please Sociologists

"The Public Defender," a Strong Plea for Justice, Which May Be Exhibited Indiscriminately and to Advantage on Any Program.

ONCE in a while a film appears in the market which, apart from its pecuniary value, is of importance in that it embodies some sociological problem, suggests a solution, and stands for humanity and a fuller civilization. To this class belongs "The Public Defender," presented to the public by Harry Raver of 1402 Broadway, New York City.

It is not our purpose here to make critical comment on this production, which has already been reviewed in our issue of October 20, but merely to draw attention to it as one which suggests the establishment of a "public defender" whose duty it would be to listen to and properly investigate the supposed wrongs of the poorer classes, who, for lack of money with which to pay unscrupulous lawyers, are often denied a fair trial in our so-called courts of justice.

Exhibitor in Scheme of Things

Common Sense Argument by Orrin G. Cocks of the National Board of Review Worthy of Consideration.

THE exhibitor in the scheme of things" is the subject of an article in the October issue of the Bulletin of the Affiliated Committees for Better Films, written by Orrin G. Cocks, the secretary of the committee and advisory secretary of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. Mr. Cocks emphasizes the fact that co-operation with the exhibitor is the best way for those interested in better films to gain their ends. He points out that it is on the man whose livelihood depends upon the success of his exhibition that chief reliance must be placed for the accomplishment of the aims of the movement. Better films are a failure if not commercially successful.

"Where are you going to show better films?" he asks. "Here is my answer," he continues. "With here and there an exception, the place to show better motion pictures is in the regular commercial motion picture theater.

"The exhibitor has not always been loved by those interested in good films. He is, however, a reputable business man. Daily contact with townspeople and films makes him expert in both entertainment and social values. This must be so if he is to make money three hundred days in the year. He is the most sensitive critic the pictures have and picks and chooses with rare ability. Even after the films arrive he is not satisfied until he has examined them personally. This is because he wishes to draw every class of people to his house or all of the class living near his neighborhood theater.

"Those of us who are convinced that the public must be provided with better films should remember that the paid person is the one who will continue to furnish pictures long after the keen edge of volunteer enthusiasm has been blunted. A few sharp slashes of activity for three or four months is really harmful if it leaves only a raw wound and no wholesome tissue of permanent organization to follow it. Not all exhibitors see eye to eye with you. Some need to be convinced that their audience will grow better in quantity and quality of they maintain family days with carefully selected pictures. Your duty is not only to agitate, but also to bring audiences. An ounce of money in paid admissions is worth a pound of talk.

"Quite often also theaters have been packed with thrilling pictures. Exhibitors, therefore, need to be shown that the people around their theaters are wholesome lovers of clean fun and inspiring stories. While they eat ice cream and candy, their regular fare is something else. The patrons of the theaters are not forever keyed up so that they pine for broken homes, tragic movements and the battle of the sexes.

"If we agree that the exhibitor is the man who will continue steadily to reach the vast majority of our townspeople with entertaining pictures, we should equally agree that greatest results for better films are to be gained by friendly co-operation. Look your exhibitor in the eye, sit down in a chair beside him, tell him frankly of the desires of the clean living families around his theater who love goodness, simplicity and virtue. This apparent disagreement is no war in the trenches with heavy guns pouring death from muzzles five miles distant, but straight-forward, shoulder to shoulder work for the common good of home-loving townspeople.

"Why not learn in advance of the bookings of good pictures and boost them? This is done with books and their demand grows month by month. With the motion picture it is here today and gone forever. All the more reason for commonsense co-operation and for 'seizing Opportunity by the Forelock.'"

British Notes

By J. B. Sutcliffe.

THE end of August is usually a fruitful time in the home production market of the British film industry. It brings within the exhibitor's view most of the summer activities of the London producer, and if this year's total falls below the average in numbers it raises above the last in quality. First we have from the Ideal studio the result of three months' laborious work upon a screen version of Pinero's scintillating play "The Gay Lord Quex." Ben Webster as the young lord, Irene Vanbrugh as Sophy Fulgavney, with Lilian Braithwaite, Donald Galthrop and some of the best support that can at present be drawn from the English stage make up a convincing representation, notwithstanding the omission of the brilliant dialogue of the stage original "The Gay Lord Quex" was directed by Maurice Elvey. A newcomer in the field of film production exhibited a praiseworthy maiden effort in "The Happy Warrior," by Harm & Co., directed by F. Martin Thornton. Unlike the above, the strength of this subject is entirely in the plot—not even one star, stage or screen, is in the cast. Yet of this picture Dr. Saleeby, the eugenist, speaks heartily and sincerely in support as the right type and treatment of a morality play. But "The Happy Warrior" has a more valuable attribute than this. It explodes a popular and long cherished theory of many of the best motion picture directors. Its reception by the London trade and press dealt a fatal blow to the fallacy that a successful film must include a high salaried artist. During the week Rufiells of Long Acre held a premiere of "Holy Orders," a drama based upon Marie Corelli's novel, and picturized under the superintendence of Bernard Davidson and J. D. Tippett of the Transatlantic Film Co., revealed the opening episodes of the boy scout serial, "Be Prepared," that he, Bannister Merwin, and Percy Nash have been so busy upon during recent months. This is the first English serial production.

There is a growing opinion amongst exhibitors that the time is becoming opportune for a general increase in admission charges to moving picture theaters. Since war broke out three years ago overhead charges have increased at an all round average of 40 per cent., more especially in regard to labor, electricity and film hire. True, there has been one increase to the public, the entertainment tax, but not a cent of this goes to the exhibitor in any shape or form. The Kinematograph Exhibitors' Association, Regd. is convening a meeting of its London members to consider this question, particularly in view of the failure of the association to secure the relief sought from the impending increases of the already heavy taxation. A general and immediate raising of admissions seems inevitable.

The alternating revelations of the kinematograph as warrior and peace-maker perpetrated upon a tired public by writers and authorities on every subject under the sun would fill a volume the size of Webster's. Not the least interesting chapter would be one recently added which shows how the moving picture could be the means of sealing an ancient feud between two schools of history. The writer wants to see the establishment of a proper Kinematograph Record department of the Government, charged to see that nothing of any importance happens in any field of the modern history of Great Britain without being filmed. It would, on the one hand, save our historians the trouble of trying to make past people and events live in their pages, yet, on the other, explanatory historical writings would be needed to accompany the living records. It is easy to imagine, he adds, with what avidity the future will scan the present kinematographic records of the Great War and how it will regret that there are not more of them.

The new Companies Act, to which I made brief reference of late, makes it impossible for any party to remain a director of a limited liability company, or to exercise directorial influence without it becoming public knowledge. Previous to the introduction of this measure there were doubtless many people concealing their associations with diverse businesses under the existing company laws and more especially when the Business Names Registration Act, compelling the publication of names of all partners in private concerns, came into force. Mr. Smith, for instance, will no longer be able to book films to Mr. Exhibitor Jones and still retain a secret influence over Mr. Jones' opposition hall. Neither can the film manufacturer continue to control the destinies of half a dozen or more different exchanges without his customers' cognizance of the fact. The new act practically eliminates the secret influence out of business, primarily, of course, leveled against enemy activities, but not without its usefulness in other directions. There is no possible excuse for any business man in England now to say that he does not know with whom he is dealing.

Two employes of a film printing works have appeared recently at the Central Criminal Court for illegally duplicating films. The charge was for criminal conspiracy, for fraudulently obtaining credit, and the film printing company were the prosecutors in the case. The plan of the "dupers" was to extract from the film vaults unknown to the manager different negatives that were sent in for printing. In the specific charge a negative from one of the oldest American agents in London was taken away to another laboratory and a dozen copies ordered. When they were ready the money was not forthcoming and consequently the negative was held in bail. Had it not been for this unexpected situation the dupers might have got by with it.

One cannot think of or discuss that vitally important person, the returned soldier, without mention of the name of Capt. Paul Kimberley. Long before any system of training the wounded "Tommy" on his discharge from the ranks occupied the minds of our politicians, Mr. Kimberley was placing men into positions as kinematograph operators after adequate training at his offices in Wardour street. Apparently the men are taking to the training and the situations found for them when they are proficient in a way alarming to other trades. A Welsh shoe trades association finds it almost impossible to convince wounded soldiers that anything but film machine operating will be of use after the war.

ITALIAN SYNDICATE TO PROMOTE FILM EXPORTS.

David F. Wilber, U. S. Consul General at Genoa, Italy, writing in "Commerce Reports," a publication issued daily by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, says that the Port Bulletin, published at Genoa, announces the formation of a syndicate to export films. It states that the leading Italian firms interested in the development of the commerce and exports of Italian cinematographic products have taken part in the project, and that the syndicate proposes to promote such exports especially to the markets of North and South America.

"It is affirmed," says the Port Bulletin, "that one of the principal Italian banking institutions has participated in financing the syndicate."

HARRY MURRAY DONS KHAKI.

In the quota of the recruits to the National Army now mobilizing at Camp Upton, Yaphank, L. I., will soon be found Harry Murray, Brooklyn representative of Jewel Productions, Inc. Harry paid his au revoir to Broadway on Saturday, October 13, much to the regrets of the exhibiting colony in Brooklyn. It was in 1911 that he broke into the ranks with Vitagraph as booker. He opened the Pathe exchange in Charlotte, N. C., and was later associated with the same firm in Detroit. Recently he served as salesman for Century Comedies, passing from there to Jewel.

Export Items

CUBA is the great anomaly in the world of moving pictures. Bound to the United States by strong ties of friendship and community of interest, and located 90 miles from Key West—the trip can be made by train and ferry—its trade has developed wonderfully since the war with Spain. In 1906 the exports to this country amounted to $243,728,770 and the imports $164,622,950—by far the largest volume of business done with us by any American nation except Canada. Its wealth is revealed in the trade balance indicated by the above figures. Most of the Cubans have a good command of English and they know and understand American customs and methods better than any other Ibero-American people. There is besides the reciprocity treaty, which gives us the benefit of a preferential tariff, but in spite of all these advantages the fact remains that Cuba is the only Latin-American Republic where European pictures are still making a good showing. The reason for this result is not hard to explain. The introduction of American pictures in the other southern territories has been accomplished through the efforts of the local exchanges, which in Cuba have shown a very antagonistic frame of mind, and, therefore, the only American producer with a wide distribution in the Island is the one who opened up his own branch in Havana.

MR. JOHN BROWN of 5th Avenue
Presents
"The Venus of the Mirror"
by Velazquez.

If an American art dealer managed to buy the famous painting from the British authorities and would advertise it in the above fashion the effect would be similar to the one produced daily in Latin-America by our moving picture posters. "Mr. So-and-So presents Miss ———." The idea of a gentleman whom nobody has heard anything about introducing to the public an actress of international repute seems preposterous to the southerners. Even if the party in question has put up the money to make the picture there is satisfaction enough in reaping the profits and the artistic glory should be left where it belongs. In Latin countries the theatrical business (the same thing applies to moving pictures) is divided in two parts: the artists, who get a little of the money and all the publicity; the empresario, who gets most of the money without bragging about it. The term "theatrical producer" has no meaning in Spanish or Portuguese, neither in French nor Italian. The author who writes the play is the only one supposed to produce anything. The man in charge of the financial end, who pays the bills and controls the box office, is an "empresario," which means a merchant purely and simply, and in this capacity alone will the public tolerate that his name should be mixed with those of the author and artists. This viewpoint, therefore, should be borne in mind when preparing advertising copy for Spanish and Portuguese speaking markets. If these reasons are not considered sufficient there is the question of avoiding confusion. "Mr. ——— presents Miss ———, by special arrangement with Mr. ——, in 'Lights Out,' produced by ———, released through ———, etc." How is any foreign buyer to find out the meaning of this rigmarole? And as far as the public is concerned, an announcement of this nature is enough to damn any picture.

Six months ago the Spanish trade papers were devoting most of their space to American productions. At this moment very little interest is taken of our pictures, although they are imported in increasing quantities. Mr. Ajuria, one of the largest distributors in Argentine, is about to introduce several well-known American brands in the Peninsula, and his circular announcing this fact to the exhibitors, published as a paid advertisement without any editorial comment, is the only notice of any importance regarding American pictures inserted in the latest issues of the Spanish press. We cannot account for this sudden silence. Most of the business with Spain and Portugal is being carried on through London dealers.

According to the South American trade press, the Platense-Film, a producing company of Argentine with half a million dollars capital, has signed a contract with Messrs. Paul Capellani, Marcel H. Morhange and George Benoit. Mr. Capellani will act and direct for the company. Mr. Morhange, already in Buenos Aires, is to take charge of the technical direction, and Mr. Benoit will be cameraman.

Among the Picture Theaters

Nemo Theater, New York City

Old Rose and Red Marble Make the Color Scheme of the Motion Picture House at Broadway and 110th Street—One of the Fox Chain—Good Music One of Its Features—Managed by F. A. Mangan.

NONE of the Fox theaters show age in any way. They grow with the times and are changed to keep pace with new ideas and improvements. This is true of the Nemo theater at Broadway and 110th street, New York City. It has been open eight years now and used to be a vaudeville house. It is now devoted to pictures exclusively.

Francis A. Mangan.

The stage has been removed and the front of the house decorated and changed to accommodate a big orchestra. The seats for musicians are on the floor level considerably below the back seats; for the auditorium slopes to give a clear view over the persons in each row of chairs immediately in front of the spectator.

The color scheme of the theater is old rose and magenta colored marble, and the front of the house carries this idea out by continuing the columns. The screen is hidden by a green plush curtain between two marble columns that frame its sides. Two rows of columns support the large balcony which seats 400. There are 800 seats in the auditorium, and by the arrangement of the comfortable opera chairs these supporting columns do not interfere with a clear view from any seat.

The booth is situated to give as level a throw as possible from the balcony. The throw is ninety-six feet long. Two Simplex machines are in use fed with current through two rectifiers from the alternating current street mains. It is probable that rotary converters will be installed since it has been necessary to return the money to patrons twice lately on account of trouble with the tubes rectifying the current. The screen is a curtain that has been treated with a peculiar preparation made by R. A. Johnston of the Fox company. The picture is soft yet clear and easy on the eyes.

The program is exclusively of pictures and music. There is an organ recital at one o'clock; there is also an organ recital at five. The first afternoon show after the organ recital opens at two-thirty and is preceded by a number of commercial films. Then there is an overture by the large orchestra, a scenic followed by a soloist, usually some first class singer, but at times a violinist, a topical made up of the best of all brands, another solo, the feature which is either a Fox or a Goldwyn multiple reel offering and finally a comedy after a third solo. The evening shows are at seven-thirty and nine-thirty.

The destinies of the house are in the competent hands of F. A. Mangan, who is building up the music portion of his program. He now has an orchestra under the lead of Vermond Knauss, a musician of unmistakable ability and high repute. The orchestra consists of two first violins, two second violins, a 'cello, a bass, a viola, an obo, a trombone, cornet, two horns, tympani and two organists, both soloists of ability.

The manager has a force of eight ushers and he takes care that they have proper training in their duties, which include weekly fire drills. The atmposhere of the house is pleasing and comfortable. The courtesy of the attendants is one of the assets of the house and one of the reasons for its success. The situation of the Nemo is enviable insofar as it is in the center of a residence district that needs and can pay for the best entertainment. The Broadway surface cars run in front of the house and there is a subway station on the corner at 110th street. There is competition nearby; but there is plenty of business for all in this neighborhood. It is a locality where the people are likely to respond to quality if they find it to their taste.

Strand Theater, Oakland, Cal.

Shining Illustration of the Kind of Photoplay Houses Planned for Oakland's Residential Sections—Seats 750—Managed by Charles Hellman.

THE Strand Theater at Telegraph avenue and Thirty-third street, Oakland, Cal., is a splendid example of the new type of moving picture houses designed for residence districts. It is attractive and fits in well with its surroundings, making it a welcome addition to the neighborhood, which is a district of homes. This theater is of brick construction, with a front of light-colored pressed brick relieved by simple designs.

The lobby is of marble and tile, and is large enough to make possible a splendid showing of photographs and small posters, of which good use is made. A large changeable sign extends the full width of this and can be seen from the cars that connect this city with Berkeley.

Strand Theater, Oakland, Cal.

The large feature productions shown here are booked on the open market plan and are presented at a uniform admission price of 10 cents. Usually the program is changed daily, but when especially popular pictures are secured the run is sometimes extended to a week.

The house has a seating capacity of 750 and is furnished with chairs of a high quality. It has an effective heating and ventilating system, an American orchestral organ and the operating room is equipped with two late model Simplex machines. It is conducted under the management of Charles Hellman, who has had several years of experience in this line in Oakland, having formerly been located in the downtown district.

McHenry Theater, Baltimore, Md.

A Photoplay House That is Characteristic of the Development of Picture Theater Construction.

SURPRISED and delighted was the public of the southern section of Baltimore on Saturday, May 26, when it was ushered through the doors of the McHenry theater, on Light street, near Cross, and entertained by the effervescent symposium of enchanting delights which awaited it. A veritable dreamland of all that is modern and complete for the comfort and convenience of the patrons of this theater is represented in this latest triumph in temples built for the exhibition of the silent drama. The McHenry is under the direct supervision of Bernard Depkin, Jr., who is now the supervising manager of all the chain of theaters connected with the Parkway Theater Company. The resident manager is J. Arthur Barron.

Bernard Depkin, Jr.

The exterior view of the McHenry is one of impressive strength, combined with artisticness. The design is typical Italian Renaissance. Directly in the center, over the large marquee, is located a tall, arched Colonial latticed window of plate glass and wood, with a Greek border effect. The marquee is of galvanized iron finished off with a bronze effect. This is supported from the wall by two heavy chains. The wall is built of tapestry brick and artistic trimmings of stucco. On each corner of the marquee is located a 300-watt nitogren lamp, while inside its top coping a system of indirect colored lights play upon the whole building. No posters are used for the front of the house, but two sturdy ornamental frames on each side of the main entrance contain photographs of the coming plays and the titles.

The main plot of ground which has been used measures about 115 by 65 feet, while a smaller plot, taken up by the lobby and foyer, measures about 93 by 20. The entire cost of land and construction represents in the neighborhood of $75,000.

We enter the theater through a large stone doorway, bordered by a fretting of Greek design, and find ourselves in a lobby measuring 15 feet wide and extending 20 feet back to a first set of double doorways. The walls of this lobby are built of Caenstone, with a wainscoting and border of marble. The flooring is of white tile, bordered by a mosaic pattern. The ticket office is located directly in the center, and is finished in mission oak, on three sides of which have been placed heavy plate glass windows. Now we pass into the second section of the lobby through the handsome brass-trimmed doors. This part measures 45 by 15 feet, and it is here that a beautiful iron grilled staircase leads to the operating room, office and gentlemen's rest room on the second floor.

One ascends the firm staircase of slate and steel, with a balustrade of wrought iron, to a hallway, at the end of which is located a spacious operating room, measuring 8 by 10 feet. It is equipped with three of the latest Simplex projection machines and a General Electric motor generator. The entire room is painted black. It is completely fireproof, being built of concrete and brick, and protected by metal encased doors. The light shaft slots are guarded by galvanized iron coverings. The throw of light from the machines to to the screen is 115 feet. A Minusa gold fibre screen is used, measuring 11 by 15 feet.

We go back down the stairs, which are located on the left as you enter, and pass through a last set of doors to find ourselves in a foyer of elegant but quiet beauty. This room is furnished with mahogany tables, upon which are placed cut flowers and the weekly booklet programs. Ice-cold spring water is kept in a cooler to the side.

We now proceed into the main auditorium, which measures 64 by 100 feet. The seats number 1,080 and were furnished by the A. H. Andrews Company. They measure 22 inches wide, and are regulation orchestra seats, finished in mission oak and old rose plush. There is no balcony, and the ceiling rises to a height of 26 feet. All the floors are covered with a rich, heavy, napped red velvet carpet. There are three aisles, one measuring 4 feet 6 inches, and the other two measuring 4 feet. Directly in the center of the house, running from side to side, is located a row of loge boxes, equipped with chair seats. This row is separated from the rest of the theater by brass railings. The screen is located on a stage which measures 8 by 24 feet. This screen is part of an interior studio set and represents a window. All the hangings are of gorgeous old rose velour. The handsome proscenium arch of gold and gray measures 24 by 12 feet. In the orchestra pit, measuring 24 by 12 feet, there is room for ten musicians and the console of the $10,000 Moller two manual organ, while on each side of the proscenium arch are located the swell boxes, from which issue golden harmonies of dreamy dulcet tones. These swell boxes are covered by a close lattice effect, and are enclosed in huge pilasters of Greek Colonial design.

The color scheme throughout the interior is light gray and gold. On the panels of the second section of the lobby, and in the foyer, are hung magnificent oil paintings of the stars of the various film companies, and at intervals are placed large French mirrors, with a frame of gilt. In the auditorium this color scheme is carried out with the paneled pilasters of Colonial design, which support a rich cornice of Italian Renaissance. The pilaster edges and cornice trimmings are of gold.

The lighting is a combination of diffused glows. The indirect, direct and cove systems are employed. In the center of the ceiling is located a huge inverted bowl, or dome, from which a subdued and diffused glow suffuses the room. In the lobby and the foyer four ornamented globes, each surmounted by four separate electric amber candles, are hung at intervals

The ventilation is superb. In the ceiling of the main auditorium are located four ventilators, each measuring 6 feet across, and in addition to these is one measuring 8 feet across. They are all equipped with great direct pipe suction fans, measuring 40 inches in diameter. The ventilation of the operating room is done by three ventilators, equipped with 12-inch suction vents.

McHenry Theater, Baltimore, Md.

A novel heating system has been innovated by which a current of pure air is always streaming into the theater and heated as it passes through a system of vents. Steam radiators are used, and each is situated in an inserted cut-out in the walls with iron coverings. Just behind each of these radiators is located a shutter or vent device to the outside, which opens and closes with the radiator exhaust, thus regulating the flow of pure air. There are two well appointed rest rooms—one is located on the first floor, just off the auditorium, on the left as you enter, trimmed with marble tiles, for ladies. The other is situated on the second floor, at the head of the stairs, for the men.

The theater is absolutely fireproof, being built of steel and reinforced concrete. The exit doors are five feet wide, all being equipped with metal fire panic bolts. An intercommunicating telephone system is in use throughout the entire building, connecting all points with the manager's office. The program is changed four times a week and a specialty is made on market days, for the time of performances starts at 10.30 a. m. and stops at 11 p. m., while on other days the shows start at 12.30 p. m. This is done owing to the proximity of the market. The admission prices are 10, 15 and loge box seats reserved at 25 cents.

Broadway Theater, San Francisco, Cal.

Although of the Old School of Picture House Architecture, The Broadway Facade is Attractive.

THE Broadway Theatre, located in the heart of Little Italy on the thoroughfare of that name, is one of the old-established moving picture houses on North Beach. For years it was conducted by the veteran exhibitor, Sam Gordon, who also had the penny arcade next door, but is now operated under the management of Max Blumenfeld.

Although of the old school of moving picture theater design, the house presents a very attractive appearance with its white stucco front, large lobby and neat ticket selling booth of the kiosk type. It has a seating capaciy of 554, all on one floor, and is well supplied with exits, some of these leading into the amusement place next door.

Broadway, Theater, San Francisco, Cal.

This theater is one of the few houses in this city where the 5 cent admission price still prevails, this being the regular charge, except on Sunday, when 10 cents is asked. A change of program is made daily and a special feature is presented on Sunday. A lavish use is made of posters in the lobby, and great care is made in their selection, as these are carefully studied by the cosmopolitan patrons of the house.

The projection equipment includes two Powers 6A Cameragraphs, and music is furnished by an automatic player instrument. The service rendered is above the average to be found in 5 cent houses and a good business is done in the face of unusual competition, there being four other moving picture theaters within a block.

The National Theater, Pharr, Texas

Cage Rebuilds House Destroyed by Fire—Seating Capacity of New Structure 200 More Than Old One.

THE accompanying illustration is a view of the New National theater, Pharr, Texas. The original National, which was opened on June 23, 1915, with a seating capacity of 300, was destroyed by fire on June 30, 1916, which started in a mercantile establishment in the same block in which the National was situated and which consumed every building in the block. Before the embers of the fire-struck National had died out, W. E. Cage, the proprietor, was consulting architects regarding plans for the rebuilding of his theater, and it was but a few weeks after the conflagration that the rehabilitated structure was opened.

The new National embraces all improvements, and it has a seating capacity of 500, which is 200 more than the old house. Of course, in order to have a greater seating capacity the plot of ground upon which the new theater was built had to be larger, and the National now occupies space measuring 36 by 114 feet. More space has been allotted to the operating room, it now being 12 by 14 feet in size. It is adequately ventilated and lined with asbestos. A part of the up-to-date equipment are two Power's 6b machines and General Electric Company rectifiers. The paraphernalia of the operating room has been arranged on an efficient basis and gives the operators the greatest amount of working space. A Gold Fibre Screen is employed as the projection surface, and the length of the throw is 100 feet. The size of the picture projected is 11 by 15 feet, and there is clear definition in every inch of it.

National Theater, Pharr, Texas.

The new National represents an investment of over $10,000, and when it is realized that the total population of Pharr is equivalent to the number of patrons that the National can accommodate the undertaking is commendable. But Mr. Cage says that he does not depend entirely upon the population of his home town for the support of the National, but draws it from neighboring towns. Even taking this elements into consideration the enterprise of Mr. Cage is deserving of credit for it is not always that people feel like traveling from one town to another. Evidence that Mr. Cage has given much thought to this side of the problem is shown in the pictures that have been exhibited in this house, and his programs have proven such an irresistible magnet that he has established quite a large clientele in outside towns. Here are some of the pictures that have been booked by Mr. Cage: "The Fall of a Nation," "The Birth of a Nation," "Battle Cry of Peace," and "Where Are My Children?" These pictures played to very heavy business, and Mr. Cage is very well satisfied with the receipts since the second opening of the National. The theater is operated every day in the week.

Wednesday evening, September 26, marked the opening of the Jackson theater in York, Pa. It is owned and operated by the Jackson Enterprises of that city.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

But Do It Right.

SEEMINGLY some commentators on the exhibition end see in the advanced admission the solution of all problems. The Exhibitor does not make as much money as he did. He charges a quarter instead of fifteen cents, and thereby increases his income 66 2-3 per cent. Gosh, but it's easy to give advice when you don't know what you're talking about! It's as easy as inventing stunts that would be fine if they didn't happen to get the town sore on you or land you in clink. Unquestionably it is going to be necessary to raise the prices of admission to meet increasing costs all along the line, but do it tactfully and do it right, which is tact, plus. Remember that in most instances you are catering to the whole family. When you advance your fee from fifteen cents to a quarter, it may represent not a ten-cent raise but an increase of fifty cents to a family. If all your families are able to afford another fifty cents or a dollar a week for amusement, then you are getting the increased business to the estimated percentage. -- you do not you may get only a ten or fifteen per cent. increase and may even show a loss of business, not alone fewer people, but smaller receipts.

Before you make such a move, put it up to your patrons. Come out in the open and talk to them. Say to them that it is costing more and more to run your house. If elecric current costs more, tell them how much, remembering that they, too, have to pay more for juice. Tell then that you have had to raise salaries that your people may meet the increased costs. Point out other items of expense. Tell them that you can give them an inferior show at the old price, but that you must raise prices if you are to keep on giving them the best. Ask what they think about it. Not many will tell you, as a rule, but if you go about it sincerely and with an evident desire to find out, you'll be given the necessary information, or at least enough to permit you to move with some intelligence. And try to give a little more for the increased charge—not more reels, for that is giving too much, but give more service. This costs less than reels and means a lot more to the patron. Be more alert to small things. Keep the paint-work brighter, keep the lobby looking neater; if you possibly can, have your auditorium lighter. Put in more light and you'll be surprised to note how much more attractive the interior will look. A dark house is always depressing. Nowadays there are few shadow houses, but fifty per cent. of the auditoriums could stand more light without detriment to the picture if lights and screen were properly shaded, and the right lighting will mean as much to your box office as will a more costly film and it will have a more lasting effect.

It might even be well to work the change gradually. Start with one or two nights at the higher prices. Put in popular bills Saturday and Sunday and have your specials on the off nights; perhaps on Mondays and Wednesdays. Then gradually increase their number "in response to the popular demand" but be careful to have enough of a popular demand to back up the statement.

Use care in the selection of your bills. Keep away from the luridly patriotic stuff. It might crowd your house and yet lose you money in the long run. Look over the late phonograph catalogues and see how they are laid out. You will find in the high-priced records a number of patriotic numbers. They must be offered because there is a certain demand for them, but the stress is placed upon the heart interest songs. Both of the larger companies have lately offered Old Black Joe as a super-priced feature. They know that just now it is the heart interest that counts with all classes. Just for fun, if you take the Pickfords, compare the receipts of The Little American with Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm. The Little American was one of the best and most pretentious efforts of Miss Pickford, but we think that the other story is going to be the better money-maker. Take the tip and book the interesting and tae appealing and keep away from purely war stories. Don't run a lot of junk with fight pictures made before the war was begun and sad farewells and the rest. Let people forget the war when they come to your house. Have war benefits and all that, but let your theater be one place where they can find a refuge from war and war talk for a little while. Then you'll find that you can advance prices and still hold your patrons, but try and have a couple of days at a ten-cent admission for the sake of those who actually cannot afford the twenty-five-cent admission. You made your start on the five- and ten-cent people. Do not boot them out of your house altogether.

One Side Only.

Goldwyn prss sheets offer a lot of well written material for the exploitation of its releases, but it is a mistake to print on both sides of the sheet. Most of those printed on both sides, such as the Selig and Essanay sheets, are printed with one face for clipping and the other advertising to the Exhibitor and not intended for reproduction, but the Goldwyn sheet backs up on itself. It may be argued that no house will use all of the material and not many a full half, but that is not the point. The matter specially wanted may interfere. It is good stuff, but not all is available, in its present form, and it would be better to use twice as much paper and just the same amount of type. The stunt schemes for the first two releases as given are not up to the rest of the sheet. Not enough thought has been given them.

Cultivating the Garden of Allah.

Somewhere on this page appears a reproduction of the front of the Colonial Theater, Chicago, dressed for the initial run of Selig's The Garden of Allah. Of course a house with so large a front can do things that smaller theaters cannot follow, but notice the nice handling of the one sheets and specially lettered cards at the side. To the right of the ticket kiosk is an illuminated scene from the play on the lines of a scene model. This is nicely cased and electrically illuminated. There are two three-panel frames as well, but the lobby is not obstructed with a lot of loose boards. A special musical score is supplied which evidently includes a prelude in which an Arab sings while others prostrate themselves in prayer. With any house drop this scene can be made very effective with darkened stage and soft, changing lights, the curtain slipping up as the lights go out at the close. A camel with its driver was used for street work and the girl ushers were dressed in native costumes. The Garden of Allah is a play rich in possibilities for production work and even the smaller houses, when their time comes, can do good work along these lines with comparatively small expense. With some pictures such preludes are actually instructive, but here is something that works well with almost any degree of elaboration within bounds.

One Bad Feature.

A. A. Haley, of the Orpheum, Webster City, Iowa, sends in his first house program and writes that he has a mailing list of 400 and puts one program in every paper sold in town on Sunday. He wants to know what we think. We think the program excellent. It is an odd size, 6¼ wide and 4½ inches deep. The cover is heavy green stock with eight inside pages on white. The sheets are punched and bound with brown tape. This is rather an expensive way, but probably the printer has no saddle stitcher. If tape is used, it will pay to get a bright color or even to use a cheap silk ribbon for the tie. It has been proven that as a rule people will be less apt to throw away a program tied with bright colored ribbon, no matter how cheap, than one with wire stitching. Mr. Haley has the right idea on his program text. He does not give an elaborate resume of the story. He tells you what it's about in a way to rouse your curiosity. Take this, for example:

> Sticks sat up painfully and looked about her. All around were trunks, swaying. It was a baggage car. And next to her was a man, still unconscious, his tie awry, his clothes splotched with mud and blood. His hat was gone as well as the natural color of the right eye. Then the events came back. He was James Morgan, the rich young man that always bought his paper from her in the morning. She had tried to help him out when the thugs attacked him—and here they were in a baggage car, bound for somewhere together. The green fields were sliding past the open door. For a play of adventure and the spirit of youth and love, "A Bit of Kindling" is, well, it's a whole cord of wood.

That is better than the whole story. The programs are on the proper page (right hand) and the advertising, though liberal, is not permitted to intrude. But the program starts with Monday and stops with Friday. Perhaps he trusts to Saturday to take care of itself. Some mention should be made of the Saturday feature, though it need not be exploited so heavily as the other days. But the distributing scheme is bad. In the first place, no one likes to get his Sunday paper all cluttered up with a lot of advertising junk. It is against the law in some states to place inserts in papers, and it is against common sense to do it in all states. Moreover, it is wasteful. Many persons get more than a single Sunday paper. Many take from three to five. This means an excessive duplication of distribution. Many of these duplicates may go to persons already on the mailing list, entailing a still further waste. Even hand distribution is to be preferred to this scheme, but if there is a really good mailing list, there should be no other scheme of general circulation. We would suggest to Mr. Haley that he drop the insert scheme and build up his mailing list, or perhaps he can give a certain number of copies to the grocers and meat markets to be sent home with their orders. Not many in Webster have hired girls, we fancy, so the program will go to the head of the house, or these last can be reached through counter distribution.

Kid the Kiddies.

We reproduce here the program of the City theater, Newark, N. J., showing the display given the children's shows. Inside each day gets half a page, but the children get the lower half of the front page and a whole page as well. If, as we surmise, the Desmond story is the evening bill, we think that more than a long dash should be used to indicate that it is the evening program; perhaps an "In the evning—" in eight point italic set flush with the left hand margin. But there is one line there we do not fancy. It runs:

Clean Films for the Whole Family
Especially for Parents intent upon safeguarding the Morals of Children.

That's just what these kid matinees really are, and the City picks its programs with unusual intelligence toward that very end, but the very last thing we want the kiddies to find out is that their morals are being safeguarded and it will play hookey to see perhaps the very same films in some other theater where the management avoids this unfortunate phrase. Don't get the motion picture into the Sunday school classification in the child mind and it will do more good than the Sunday school can. We like best, so far, the phrase created by Lambdin Kay, of the Shamrock, Atlanta. He called them Young America Matinees, to remove the curse of the "child." In all save this the City scheme is excellent.

Paramount Publicity.

George E. Carpenter sends in a page from the Herald-Republican, of Salt Lake City, showing nearly an entire page devoted to praise of the paper's motion picture department by Ince, Ray, Hart and Dorothy Dalton, each of whom is photographed reading the publication. They certainly do get a hustle on at the Famous Features Exchange, and, of course, the publicity reacts in favor of the Empress-Paramount, over which Carpenter presides. Another way would be for George E. to send some of his advertising east to be scanned. We wonder can he take a hint.

Jay, He Knows.

Marriage seems to have made Jay Emmanuel pessimistic. One of his recent contributions is a folder that has for a front page adornment this legend:

LEATHER IS TOUGH,
But——
Trying to Earn Money
With a Picture Theater in the Summer
Is a Durn Sight Tougher.

This is not one of Jay's programs. It is the product of the Fox Exchange in Philadelphia and is merely the prelude to an invitation to participate in "a battle royal between Fox Film Special Releases and Old Man Poor Business." Possibly Jay sent it in because he likes it, and not because business is bad. We like it, too. No exhibitor is going to pass over that front page without reading the rest. It hits home, and every line inside has weight and is not just talk. It is decidedly above the average of exchange advertising.

One of Emanuel's own is the Paramount book mark. This is printed on the back with a list of Paramounts to be shown at the Jefferson and Park theaters, Philadelphia. A J or P precedes each title, showing at which house that film is to be shown. The idea is good enough to be passed along. The cut gives the general idea. A good hot-weather appeal is found in some copy for the Jefferson. This is printed on thin brownish paper in black ink. It gives a two weeks' program of headlines, with the reverse for a Clark picture. The summer text reads:

WE ADMIT THIS IS SUMMER WEATHER
BUT WE DO NOT ADMIT

that you will find it too warm at the JEFFERSON THEATER.

It is the wonder and envy of the theatrical interests in Philadelphia HOW we can KEEP the JEFFERSON as cool as it is always found.

Many a night we do not even have to put our fans on, it being so cool. We are not trying to write a strong ad, but we do ask you to come just once and find out for yourself.

Besides, with the list of features below one need not worry how to spend a nice evening if he or she is so fortunate as to live within the radius of the JEFFERSON THEATER.

This is one of the best things that Emanuel has turned out lately. It is sincere, and the absence of superlative statement is to be commended. Another good piece of copy starts off:

How to Be a Duchess:
1 French Maid,
1 Toy Dog,
1 Foreign Accent.
See the Most Beautiful of Stars,
Emmy Whelen, in
The Duchess of Doubt.

Jay assuredly is improving in his work, and with that famous carload of fancy stock he is doing wonders, but he should swap some of those chocolate brown cards for some lighter material or else print in white ink. These do not show up well. Will Jay please note that when we get back to town we are coming over to see him, and make preparations accordingly?

Punch Tickets.

The coupon ticket, good for something more than a dollar's worth of tickets for a dollar is no new scheme, but Louis Landau, Jr., of the Washington, Belleville, Ill., is able to put a fresh squirm in the old idea. He gives two dollars' worth for one dollar in the form of a card similar to the one shown here. A red ink rubber stamp especially stipulates that it is not good for admission on Sundays, but does not except Saturdays. Mr. Landau writes:

Three years ago an idea came to me to have a "dollar day." I gave a card good for two dollars' worth of admission for one dollar, good until used, and not restricted to the purchaser's individual use. The first time the scheme was used we took in $300 between nine in the morning and eleven at night. The purchasers had to call in person for his ticket, for none was reserved by 'phone. You had to walk up to the box office and take the ticket in person. As soon as the tickets began to run out there was a demand for more. They found that the tickets not only saved them money, but that it saved time and trouble. They did not have to wait in line at the ticket window. They went right up to the doorkeeper and he punched out a ten-cent admission. If the patron wanted a reserved seat, he punched out twenty cents and gave him a reserved slip, being provided with a stock of these. By the end of the month there was a constant demand for these "punch cards," as the patrons called them, but I told them both in person and on the screen that the punch cards were merely my evidence of appreciation of their support and that there would be but a single dollar day each year, as a celebration. Our prices are ten and twenty cents for adults and half price for children. Up to that time the reserved seats were not seling as well as they might, but part of the scheme was to get them used to the reserved sections. They sat in the reserved seats because these cost them no more than the ten-cent seats used to, and when the tickets ran out they kept on sitting in the reserves because they had acquired the habit of doing so. More than this, they came more often and brought their friends, frequently these being persons whose patronage I had not previously had. And best of all it made firm friends of all regular patrons. During the time these first tickets ran we several times found a ticket dropped by the holder. We announced by means of a slide that a ticket of a certain number had been found. It was all we could do; but for the second dollar day I took the name and address of each person buying a ticket. Now if a ticket is found, it is mailed back to the owner without delay. And you can imagine what a fine mailing list I got from these names and addresses. That second year we sold $1,200 worth of tickets on the day—four times as many. This second lot was good only on week days, Sunday being reserved. The third year tickets were not good on Saturday or Sunday, but were good on other days for matinee or night. We sold $2,000 worth during the day. This year the sale was $3,614. And, mind you, this does not seem to affect the daily sale materially. We get almost as much window sale as before with more than three thousand dollars' worth of advance sales in the bank, all taken in on what practically amounts to the public's confidence in my judgment and ability to run a good show. That's what makes me feel good all over when I think of it.

It would make any manager feel good to feel that his reputation will bring so liberal a response, and it should make him feel good to know that he has thought up something worth while. We like the scheme from all its angles. As we have lately pointed out, a man who has a paid ticket will use it more freely than one who has to dig in his pocket for the actual coin. He knows he paid for it, but it is paid for and it's his, and he hustles down to the Washington, where he might think twice before going if he had to spend twenty cents out of his pocket. Mr. Landau gets his ticket holders more than twice as often. He brings in strangers who are being treated, and who may become regular patrons, and he gets a mailing list that cannot be surpassed, and he can circularize this list with the assurance that every letter sent out will reach a man who not only likes pictures, but who probably has tickets. If you try this scheme emphasize the return feature. Don't take down the names and addresses yourself. Distribute forms something like this:

I hereby make application for profit sharing tickets.
Name .....
Address .....
Manager Washington Theater.

Give these out beforehand. The day of the sale have a table in the lobby where it will not be in the way, supplied with blanks and pencils or pen and ink. Explain that this address form is a safeguard. Put it on the screen and in the house program. Impress upon the holder the need for supplying any change of address. If you have the form printed on three by five cards or slips you can make up your card catalogue from these names. For a little money you can get a numbering machine that will number consecutively or in duplicate. The better plan would be to number the ticket and the card at the same time. This will save delay and avoid error. But there should be some safeguard against duplication of cards. The original is plain manila stock. With 3,600 cards out it is not easy to keep track of them and some enterprising swindler might arrange to duplicate them. A cut of a signature is a good protection, since to imitate this is forgery; but better still would be a cut signature and a validating stamp. Get one with a rule work around it and have your ticket taker understand that no ticket is good if the corner of the stamp does not cut a certain letter of the house name. The stamping is apparently carelessly done, yet it is really a key check. Mr. Landau, in working out the scheme for his own use, has perfected it through three years' experience. With a generosity that is characteristic of the live-wire exhibitor, he offers to give any further aid he can to those who want to test the scheme.

Spifflacous.

The Majestic, Columbus, Ohio, gets out the best written and printed program that we know of. Now it has come out with about the best policy booklet we have yet seen. Not much money has been wasted on color work. The cover carries an oblong with "Majestic theater and its new policy" in black against a dull yellow ground, but the rest of the money has been spent on cuts and press work instead of double printings, and the result is well worth while. Primarily it is to announce the new policy of a full week for an attraction, but it talks about the house and its musical staff as well and gives some splendidly executed portraits of the leading stars of the program. It is a book that will be kept and shown with pride, but they really should have made the press man print his own picture, as well. He has done much to make the house. The twenty-four page booklet is one of the best we have ever seen and it is going to take a lot to beat it. It points to one big fact. A book well done in one color is infinitely superior, both as an artistic production and a business getter, to a two to four color effort not so well done. Keep that fact in mind when you are talking over your own job with the printer. He may be trying to cover up his own inability when he splits the price for four printings feeling that he will then have a comeback. Use one color and insist upon the very best work. It pays best.

Stylish.

Louis B. Mayer has been sending out invitations to see a certain Metro feature. He uses a die sunk card, an oval within a square, no color in the die. Then the message is set in six point and the smaller twelve point sizes of gothic, all within the oval. The lines are broken up badly at the top for—

The Metro Pictures Corp'n requests your Attendance at the first engagement of the new
Metro Super-de-luxe production.

A better division would have been—

The Metro Picture Corporation
Requests your attendance at
The first engagement of the new
Metro Super-de-Luxe production.

That makes another line, but it gives the lines their proper value. Apart from this matter of division the card is away above the average. But what is going to come after a Super-de-Luxe production? Even Boston is going to run out of superlatives some day. One good feature of the advertisement is that it is not good for a single trade showing but for any performance of the week "that may suit your convenience." For selling film tnis beats a special showing to which many may not be able to come.

Revived.

Evidently the Milledgeville, Ga., one sheet daily paper has been revived, for we notice the first one in some time, and Edmund Reid is again the editor. It is slightly larger than the old sheet, but works on the same general scheme, a one page, one side newspaper, with the house advertisement as a basis, and for a town without a local daily it is beyond question the best possible advertising, if properly done. It must not merely look more or less like a newspaper, it must be one, holding to the local news. At that it does not require a deal of news. It gives all the local trade announcements, and to the housewife the advance in the price of milk by the Riverside Dairy and the fact that Terry Treanor has raised his butter from 45 to 50 cents a pound means something. There is a liberal patronage of display advertising as well. but the small items are what make the sheet valuable. Doubtless Mr. Reid will be glad to send you a copy if you send a return stamped envelope, and if you are a small town man you should be interested, for this device of Mr. Reid's has worked well.

Getting the Grip.

Someone, we think it is Larry Hayes, is running a paper within a paper on the F.P.A. style in the Majestic-Colonial program, Jackson, Mich. Some of it is lifted from Bill Lord Wright, but not much, and what isn't is clever, too. Lots of Exhibitors will appreciate this:

> The toughest task on earth for a reviewer, synopsis writer or press bloke is to keep away from the use ing," as well as its faithful assistant, "grip." There are "stories of gripping intensity," "scenes of gripping force," players who "grip the spectators' hearts with their emotional ability," dramas that "hold one in a grip of realism," and so on ad lib. Good old grip goes over grippingly on in motion picture literature; we can't get away from it ourselves, try how we may. Somehow gripology will intrude into our most masterly efforts. We try our best to dodge, but in vain, and our contemporaries are in similar evil case. Is there no remedy? Must we remain a victim of gripmania until death doth us part? Help!
> We go grip, grip, gripping through our numerous reviews;
> We've been gripped, gripped fatally in moving picture news;
> You may struggle to evade it, but soon or late you'll slip,
> And be surely clutched and conquered by the grip, grip, grip!

They are running the Essanay series and one other item reads:

> DO CHILDREN COUNT? Give one of them a penny instead of a nickel and see.

You can use that, too, if you use the series. Mr. Hayes has a good poem in one issue, but it is too long to run, even if it is good. There is a lot of Jazz in that program and it makes good reading.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. By mail, postpaid, $2.00. Order from nearest office.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing adressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses by critized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Critics.

WRITES a lady: "I have studied the screen for months with the eye of a critic in order to discover wherein I have failed, and while I am not able to cope with some of the scientific and political plays produced, I do think my feature plays and comedies equal to the majority of stories depicted upon the screen." A critic is presumed to be a dispassionate observer. This writer has studied plays "for months" instead of years and comes to the conclusion that he plays equal those she finds on the screen. Evidently her studies have not taught her much. She thinks she can cope with all save the scientific and political plays, not even realizing that these are the simplest plays to write; given a smattering of knowledge. The most difficult play of all to write is the simple play—and keep it simple, unaffected and interesting. Even an advanced student can take a ward boss, a rising young reformer and the girl they both love—or the daughter of the boss—and make a sort of play of it, at least the sort you see on the screen. Any half-baked writer can do that. It requires ability closely akin to genius to turn out the sort of plays that leads the untrained to exclaim, "Why I can write plays like that." It is not the intricate play, with horror piled upon horror, that pleases most. It is the simple, heart-interest play exquisitely planned by the artist to conceal even his artistry save to the initiate. This is the thing that authors come to learn only in time, and generally do not believe when they are told, and this it is which leads them to feel that they can write more interesting (because involved) plots than they see upon the screen. Many a promising career has been wrecked by overconfidence, for there is no more deadly poison than the "I can do better than that" idea, plus the false standards of untrained criticism.

Between the Lines.

So many writers, clutching at straws, are misled by "nice" letters from editors. They have heard stories of how, in the early days, writers were helped to success by editors. They have been stunned by the repeated return of their manuscripts accompanied by cold rejection slips. They have encouragement and criticism. They despair of the helping hand, and when they do get a nice letter instead of a printed sheet, they warm up and send all their stuff to that concern, not realizing that the hand is not helpful that holds out false hopes. We by no means intend to suggest that all letters are hurtful, but we most assuredly do wish to warn the beginner that most letters are snares and delusions, actuated by one of three motives.

For one thing companies are by no means desirous of making enemies. They realize that the script writer is usually a person of false importance in his own orbit in life, and that in small towns in particular this orbit may be large enough to do considerable harm to a brand. In the place of the rejection slip, cheap stenographers write form letters that sound like the real thing. The flattered recipients decide that the Bunkem films are better than the Gogood, because the editor is nicer. Their dictum is accepted by their frineds, and perhaps a contract is lost to the Gogood, which is replaced by Bunkem. This is purely a matter of selling film: an adjunct of the press department, rather than the editorial office. Such letters are hurtful and in no wise helpful to the writer who wants to succeed.

A second, and smaller class, write encouraging letters to the more promising authors on the general proposition that while they cannot write good stories they can at least write suggestions that can be used. It is cheaper to write a little note of rejection than to send a check for the idea.

In the third class the letter writers are not moved by a desire to help the sales department, nor are they encouraging writers to submit ideas to be stolen. They seek merely the gratification of their own vanity. They do not know much about stories, and generally they owe their positions to some accident of favoritism. They secretly know themselves to be unfit, but will not acknowledge that unfitness. It satisfies their vanity to sit on the throne, graciously dispensing favors. They like the homage of the grateful authors. They gain a peculiar satisfaction in posing as experts and authorities, and they waste their employer's time writing letters in which they learnedly point out to the noviee his particular faults as the editor sees them, and a grateful novice never gets wise enough to see the harm that is being done.

In none of the three instances do the writers of letters ever back up their encouragement with checks. In some instances the editors are even forbidden to accept stories, but are installed merely to handle the boob material and give pleasant rejections to the better class. Their comments and their compliments are alike hurtful in that they establish a false sense of improvement and advance in the minds of the authors.

Seven or eight years ago editors were practical men. They were men selected because they knew stories; the stories which had been written and those still to be written. There were then no text books, for this was even before the time of the Wright and Letendre books—or even the correspondence schools. They had to help the real writers over the bumps, and they helped the still incompetent but promising writers as well. It was all a business proposition then. They were there to buy stories worth while. It was necessary to teach all the new art in order to get these stories. They virtually developed the first flight of new writers because they had to.

Most of those old time editors have been displaced by men who can lie better; who can flatter the stars and the directors and the bosses; who can hand out flattery along with poor stories. A few of the old times are left, but they are few indeed, and they are not writing letters broadcast now because they do not have to. They figure out that the man who has not the good sense to get a text book and go to work is not worth while bothering with. They deal with staff men and inside writers rather than with the general public, but they are watching for more inside men, though they are not writing letters to them.

A real writer does not want letters. He wants either checks or the return of his script, and he does not even mind if there is no rejection slip. If a story comes back he knows that the company to which it was sent does not want it, and that is all he is interested in. He cannot bank lengthy explanations and he knows perfectly well that the suggestions of the rejecting editor may be diametrically opposed to the opinions of the editor to whom the story will next be sent. He is backing his own judgment against the hurriedly formed opinions of someone else, and he finds that this pays better. The scheme works so well that some authors have a direct policy of sending certain rejections to a certain company. In an earlier day we used to find that a certain type of story rejected by Lubin would almost invariably land with another company in the General Film, and before that we always sold to one magazine all stories of a certain type rejected by our first choice precisely because what one did not like the other was almost certain to. This being the case, how may it be argued that the opinion of any one editor, however graciously expressed, is valuable in the slightest degree? Add to the litany of the author: "From thieves and fools and letter-writing editors, Good Lord deliver us."

Then live up to it.

Loose Leafing.

More than ever, during the past summer, we have come to appreciate the value of loose leaf books. Traveling around, we have accumulated no mass of crumpled papers. We have merely fattened up some canvas covered books, and when we want a fact we know just where to look for it, and we find it clean and fresh. We like the idea so well that we are planning to add to our outfit some loose leaf books taking smaller than the standard typewriter page, but we are not yet convinced that it is not better—and even cheaper—to use but one size of paper and books for all entries. Of course there is always the danger of overdoing system, but within bounds system is one of the greatest assets of the orderly writer, and the loose leaf is an immense aid to the systematic. But loose leaf books require editing about every three months or you will presently have too many dead facts in proportion to the live material, and for most stuff the best place of all is in the mind of the user. Put it there and then practice calling in review all your facts. In no time at all you'll find that you can get at any fact without effort of thought.

Unstable.

A baloon rises on hot air, but it can't stay up.

Who Pays?

Don't write to please your friends. It is the editor who pays.

Technique of the Photoplay

By

EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A book replete with practical pointers on the preparation of stories for the screen, answering the hundred and one questions which immediately present themselves when the first script is attempted. A tested handbook for the constant writer of picture plots. "Straight-from-the-shoulder" information from an author with a wealth of real "dollars-and-cents" experience.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

A Dreamer of Dreams.

Paul R. Lynch, St. Albans, Vermont, says:

> I am, like thousands of others, reading and studying the department; also like others I feel that when good advice is needed we can get it, and get it straight from the shoulder. I am somewhat of a dreamer, and my last dream is troubling me. Have been cranking for eight years, and want to go into business for myself. This is what I am planning to do: I want a portable machine, motor drive, mazda lighting system, which will project an 8 x 12 foot picture from 45 to 60 feet, using 110 volt A. C. Query: Is there any such animal? I want to make one night stands, repeating every week. I have a head of the Simplex portable machine, and suppose there are many others, but I have worked hard for the little I have and cannot afford to take chances, hence want your advice about machines, understanding, however, that I do not ask you to recommend any one make. What I want to know is, is there a machine on the market which will do what I have above set forth?

That depends, Brother Lynch. There are a number of portable machines which will project a really excellent six to eight foot picture, using a metallic surface screen, in a moderately dark room. I could not, however, conscientiously recommend any of them for regular theatrical work, such as you propose, with a twelve foot picture. Incidentally there is no such thing as an eight by twelve foot moving picture. A picture 12 feet wide automatically becomes and is nine feet high. But that is not the real point. You have not asked my advice on the matter of practicability of your plan, but I would feel myself remiss in my duty if I failed to try and protect you from any such venture. The small-town-one-night-stand-and-repeat-once-a-week-or-once-in-two-weeks is a thing which has alluring glitter. It seems so plausible. It FIGURES so very readily and conclusively into ready coin that hundreds have lost their little all in the venture. But at least ninety-nine times in every hundred it is failure, and the other time it means hard, hard grubbing for the scanty dollars of clear return. I know, brother, yes I know how loath you are to believe this can be true. For I myself, in the old days, also dreamed this dream, but, thanks be, was saved from actually investing in a dream which later observation tells me would have been merely a nightmare. My advice is, DON'T! But if you do, then when it is all over, and you return to the crank, probably minus your hard earned wad, remember what Richardson told you.

Adjustable Shutter.

I would again respectfully call the attention of projection machine manufacturers to the necessity for an adjustable revolving shutter. You, gentlemen, are attempting to meet widely varying local conditions with a shutter which can only properly meet one condition. You are giving the operator no chance to adjust his shutter to his local condition so that he may get the maximum of light and minimum of flicker, and I venture the assertion that you are doing this at least partly through fear that the placing of an adjustable shutter on your machine will cause you some trouble through the unquestioned fact that not all operators could use such a shutter intelligently. That you would be caused some trouble in that way is not to be doubted, still I believe it is your duty to put on the adjustment just the same. Such a shutter may be made in a number of entirely practical ways, and will involve very slight additional outlay. Let us have the adjustable shutter by all means, even though it be sent out only to operators who request it.

Nice Operating Room.

The Athens theater, Newbern, North Carolina, owned by Messrs. Lovick and Taylor, has an excellent projection plant, the same being herewith illustrated.

Illustration No. 1 is general view of the room. There are two Power's projectors, a spotlight and motor-generator set; also there are two economizers for emergency use. The tool rack and work bench are seen at the end of the room, and the huge skylight ought to provide ample fresh air, provided there is a fresh air inlet from out-of-doors and that the ports are closed with glass so that the foul air from the auditorium is excluded. But at matinees there is the disadvantage of too much light unless means are taken to exclude it.

In the second illustration we get a view of the motor generator and economizer installation, the only criticism of which is that I prefer the placing of the field resistance control, and the volt and ammeter on the front wall of the room, between the machines, where the meters will be constantly under the eye of the operator when in operating position, and the fixed control within easy reach. Of course, I well know that not every operator remains constantly in operating position beside his machine, but nevertheless, that is where he ought to be. It may also be contended that the meters could be seen just as well, and the control be reached just as handily on the rear wall when the operator is at the right hand machine. But there is a slowly growing tendency to operate both machines from a central position, and this is, in my opinion, now that motors are in almost universal use, to be preferred, particularly where the throw is reasonably long, so that the machines may be placed a generous distance apart, and a two or three-foot square observation port, covered with thick plate glass, placed between the projectors. This is, I think, an ideal condition. I am sorry that I cannot name the operator. No name came with the photographs, and a former letter was mislaid. I know the good brother's cognomen, but at the moment can't dig it out of memory's archives.

El Paso, Texas.

I present herewith the photograph of as fine a bundle of good fellows as it was my good fortune to encounter during my recent journey.

They are the theater managers of El Paso, Texas, preparing to enjoy the banquet they were kind enough to give to the editor of this department. The photograph was sent to the office of the Moving Picture World, but unfortunately was addressed to the editor personally, placed among his mail, and in some way was overlooked. It was only found after his arrvial in New York city at the end of the trip. The El Paso managers are real fellers, b'gosh—every durn'd one of 'em.

The Mazda Lamp.

The new Mazda lamp is presenting a very difficult puzzle to this department just at this time. The question is, how may we meet the demand for authoritative information concerning its present practicability, and at the same time do no injustice to either party? It is our DUTY to advise exhibitors in matters of this kind. Many of them look to this department for exactly that sort of information, to protect them from investment in goods which are impractical, or which are not desirable from other causes.

There are two questions which naturally arise when we come to consider the Mazda lamp for projection purposes. The first is, has the lamp been perfected as far as it can be perfected by factory experiment? If it has, well and good. If it has not, then the manufacturer is deliberately turning his customer's theater into an experiment station for his benefit, taking very decided liberties with audiences which have paid money to see a show, not an experiment, and running the risk of material injury to the fifth industry in this country, because anything which injures the result on the screen of any theater, of necessity will injure the industry as a whole.

In the second place, modern, high class films are very wonderful works of art, in so far as applies to their photography. They are filled with almost unbelievably delicate shading, which can only be brought out in its beauty by a very powerful illuminant. This point was well set forth by Lester Bowen, Chief Operator Rialto Theater, New York City, in an article dealing with high amperage, written for the department and published some time ago.

And the bringing out of these graduations in shading of photography has much to do with giving depth and perspective to the picture, without which it looks, by comparison, flat and dead. There can be no questioning of this proposition. It is one well understood by high-class operators, and by other students of projection.

It therefore follows that any attempt to displace an efficient electric arc with something supplying a less powerful illumination is perforce going to, in greater or less degree, work injury in many directions.

That the incandescent lamp has its legitimate field in projection we fully concede. That there are theaters in which its installation right now would work distinct improvement we believe to be a fact. The question is, where shall the line be drawn? That a line must be drawn, at least for the present, and very possibly for all time to come, no man familiar with the situation, and well versed in the art of projection, will deny, unless his denial be based in self interest.

The editor of this department feels that the following advice to theater managers is fair to all concerned—that it will work no injustice as against the manufacturer, because he, the manufacturer, is introducing a new and revolutionary article, and it certainly is up to him to produce the evidence, in substantial form, that his goods will back up the claims made for them. It is fair to the exhibitor, because he must of necessity be the judge as to local conditions in his own theater.

First: It may be accepted as a fact that if you have an electric current supply which is poor, or if by reason of that or inefficient handling of your projection arc there are constant recurring shadows and unevenness of illumination on your screen, then the substitution of an incandescent lamp will work improvement in the general condition.

Second: If you have an efficient arc, a well lighted screen and an operator who is producing good results therewith, then if exploiters of the incandescent lamp insist they can work improvement, invite them to install their apparatus IN ONE OF YOUR MACHINES on trial for ten days, and let your audiences be the judge. You can easily determine their viewpoint by talking with a selected, representative few.

Third: In considering the substitution of the incandescent for the arc, do not be too greatly influenced by specious arguments of cheapness in operation. It is quite within range of possibility that each saving of one dollar in operation would cost the box office two dollars in income. Mind you, this is only true if the screen result is injured by the substitution of incandescent for arc, and that is a matter best determined by following our second advice. There are too many men in the theater business who, particularly where projection matters are concerned, see only the immediate dollar to be saved, totally disregarding the dollars lost in the process. When the salesman talks economy of operation, don't forget to look at that item from all angles. Better see what friend audience thinks about it first, by trying out the arc and incandescent side by side for a week.

Fourth: Remember that it is not your problem alone. If you decrease illumination values so that the finer shadows of photography no longer have value, then film manufacturers are likely to drop back in that highly important detail of their work, instead of advancing.

In closing let me add that this department and its editor serves no master except the moving picture industry, the welfare of which it has been our constant endeavor to aid and foster. We welcome anything which is for the betterment of the industry, but it must first be proved to us that new things, particularly if they propose to displace the old and tried, ARE for betterment. We are right now prepared to say that the incandescent for projection is good, within its limitations. The question to be decided is, what are its limitations? We will have more to say on this subject from time to time.

Youngstown, Ohio.

Recently the editor received a communication from Mr. C. W. Deibel, manager Federal Holding Company, Youngstown, Ohio, containing the information that the company had in process of erection a new theater, to be known as the Liberty. "This house," said Mr. Deibel, "will cost fully a quarter of a million dollars, and we intend to have things as they should be. That lighting scheme you published in the August 11 issue looks pretty good. What will it cost us to have you come to Youngstown and consult with our architect with regard to the lighting plans and projection plant of the new house?"

Now, this editor had but recently returned from a long, trying trip, and was already "drafted" to attend the Maritime Provinces Exhibitors' Convention, in St. John, New Brunswick, therefore, while willing to oblige, did not long with mighty longing for an Ohio jaunt just then, so I named a fee which I figured would end the matter. I did not even expect a reply from the supposed-to-be outraged gentleman (though, mind you, the fee was no more than ought, of right, to be paid for that kind of service). But friend Deibel was (and is) a live one, hence, much to my surprise, back came a letter directing me to come on forthwith.

Youngstown is a smaller edition of Pittsburgh. Its better residence sections are pretty, and, judging by the elaborate homes, millionaires are common as blue bottle flies on a farm in summer time. Its theaters are, however, for the most part of the storeroom type, a surprising fact when one considers that Youngstown elects itself the residence place of 125,000 folks. Though there was but little time to visit theaters, only the daylight part of one day being at my disposal, I did manage to call at three of the largest, viz.: the Dome, the Strand, and The Hippodrome.

The Dome seats 1,100, and is managed by J. W. Trunk, who described himself as "plain baggage." The auditorium is very pretty, but could be vastly improved by better lighting arrangements. The operating room is good, but has no glass in the ports, and no fresh air intake; also there is no exhaust fan. Baird machines are used. I did not meet Deerfler, Chief Operator, but shook hands with the assistant, Frank Cook. Screen result fairly good.

At the Strand I met Max Schagrin, Manager, a pleasant spoken gentleman, who showed me around the house. The auditorium lighting is, I am sorry to say, none the best. Get busy, friend Schagrin, and study the finer points of auditorium lighting. Simplex projectors are used, and the operating room is good. Harry J. Ham is operator, and I believe he is pretty well posted, though just a little careless in some respects. No fresh air intake and no exhaust fan. The Strand seats about 900.

The Hippodrome is a Keith vaudeville house, seating 2,200. John Elliott is manager. One reel of pictures is run regularly, with a picture programme on Sunday. The operating room is of good size, unventilated, and just two inches or so below the clouds. One climbs, climbs, and climbs, and then climbs some more, and—there it is. W. E. Hartman, Business Agent Local Union 388, I. A., is operator.

Insofar as concerns the Federal Holding Company, Manager Deibel and the new house, it is to me a foregone conclusion the Liberty theater will succeed, and succeed big. Youngstown has urgent need of at least two things, viz., better hotels and more really up-to-date temples of the photoplay. The new Liberty will have large seating capacity, and you may take it from me, expense will not be spared in the endeavor to have things right. The operating room will be about 9x14 feet, with a nine-foot ceiling, and when I told Manager Deibel to add to the plans a fresh air intake, a sixteen-inch vent flue and a sixteen-inch exhaust fan, he remarked, after making proper notes: Consider it as being done! The projection equipment will be first class in every respect, and the best operator available will be on the job.

As to the auditorium lighting, when I got through explaining the details of my plans to Mr. Diebel, his architect and electrician, and had proven by actual, though necessarily crude demonstraion, that it would work as I said it would, they all agreed that the principle involved was correct, and that it would work out in practice. Also I was much gratified to hear Mr. Deibel say, voluntarily: "While the expense of having you here is heavy, Mr. Richardson, I feel it has been money well expended."

And let me say, uncompromisingly, the Liberty, Youngstown, Ohio, will be the First theater (unless some one else beats them to it) to be lighted on correct principles from the projection point of view. No direct ray of light can reach the screen, and no bright spot or point of light, or direct ray of light can or will reach the eyes of any one of the audience. The system is, however, purely auxiliary to the regular house lighting system, which will be installed as usual, but will be entirely extinguished while the picture is on the screen.

I cannot close this article without a tribute to Manager Deibel. He is a live wire. The Liberty is by no means his first venture into the theater managerial field. He built the Dome theater, Youngstown, and operated it successfully until he sold it out to others. He realized the fact that AUDITORIUM LIGHTING, AS AT PRESENT EMPLOYED IS FUNDAMENTALLY WRONG, and was willing to pay the price to get on the right track. The Liberty audience will be seated in comparatively bright light, while all walls, the screen, and all ceilings will be in deep shadow. There will be no bright spots of light to distract and strain the eye as it follows the action on the screen.

Flicker.

William L. Chafin, Ajo, Arizona, is having trouble with flicker which he sets forth as follows:

> Am having a great deal of trouble with flicker. Use D. C. and a ——— machine, and the projection is good in every other way. Have called in a number of operators and moving picture men, but none could find anything wrong with the machine. By taking the motor off and cranking by hand I have reduced the flicker by about one-half. My lens (condenser you, of course, mean. Ed.) is 6¾ front and 6¾ back. Throw 96 feet. Screen 13 feet; a home-made one, but very good. Am inclosing paper pattern of shutter.

If your shutter pattern is correct the light your shutter passes is represented by 10.625, while the light cut off by the shutter is represented by 16.75. This means that you are cutting about 60.5 percent. of the light with your revolving shutter—a very bad condition indeed. Certainly a shutter as badly balanced as that will produce flicker. The relation of width of the three blades to each other is as 6.375, 5.125 and 5.250. It will thus be seen that not only are the blade width very large as compared to the light openings, which are 3.75, 3.25 and 3.625, but they are not themselves evenly balanced, in that the flicker blades are of unequal width, with each other as well as with the main blade, as are also the light openings. The measurements given are straight across the blades and openings at the outer edges of the openings. If it is a true flicker you have, as well it may be under the shutter condition shown, then the only possible reason for reducing it by hand-cranking is that when you do that you run the projector faster than you do when the motor is in use. This would, of course, reduce flicker. According to your data you must have a very long focal length projection lens, and it will be impossible to reach the aereal image of the condenser (dissolving point) with the revolving shutter. I would therefore advise you to proceed as follows: with the lens in position to sharply focus the picture on the screen, hold a sheet of writing paper, or other transparent paper up against the lens tightly enough to form an impress of the end of the tube on its surface, and then mark the exact outline of the bright rectangle or spot of light thereon. I believe you will find a bright spot surrounded by a ring of less bright light. Having done this, make a metal cap for the lens, with an opening just large enough to pass the entire bright spot of light, being certain, however, that the opening is large enough to cut none of the spot off. Now make a pattern of your shutter, such as you sent me, of cardboard, and substitute it for your regular revolving shutter, setting it in time just as you would set the metal shutter. Set this shutter as far from the lens as you can get it and then carefully trim off a sixteenth of an inch from one side of the main blade, and keep on doing it until slight travel ghost shows at top or bottom of letters in titles. Then trim off from the other side until slight travel ghost shows on the letters the other way. If you have carefully trimmed just a little at a time, the travel ghost will be very slight. Now remove your paper pattern and send it to me, and I will see that you get a shutter properly proportioned and suited to your local needs. My reason for suggesting the stopping down of the lens to the actual effective ray of picture-bearing light is that with a long focal length lens it is quite probable that the ray has considerably less diameter than the lens. If so, it will be surrounded by a halo of light which, while having but little value in screen illumination, will possibly set up travel ghost if the shutter blade is trimmed down to actual requirement without eliminating this light.

In all this I am assuming that what you have is bona fide flicker, and not some other effect which you have called by the wrong name.

Something Wrong.

V. F. Grubb, Manager, Macomb, Illinois, is having trouble. He sets it forth as follows:

> We are using 220 volt A. C. from a 15 K. W. transformer, through a 30 ampere G. E. Mercury Arc rectifier, thirty ampere tube. We have an ammeter installed, and find that 30 amperes at the arc gives ample illumination, but here is the trouble: On one step the current varies from 15 to 30 amperes, averaging 25. On the next highest step we get from 45 to 60 amperes, averaging about 50. Our contention is that the transformer is overloaded, and that if we could get a steady voltage of 220 at the rectifier A. C. terminals, the step which now gives from 25 to 30 would give thirty constantly, and that would be plenty. The superintendent of the light plant says that the transformer positively is not overloaded, and refuses to give us a 5 K. W. transformer for our individual use. Could you advise us as to what sort of extra regulating resistance we could attach to the rectifier, so that the step which now gives 45 to 60 amperes would supply 30, changing the amount of resistance as required, to keep the amperage at 30. We have an idea that something on the order of a stage dinner would do the trick, but do not know how much resistance would be necessary, or where to cut it in. The 15 K. W. transformer we are on also supplies an X-ray machine, and one or two heavy motors in the building.

I am very sorry, friend Grubb, but, while it is possible such a thing might be done, I cannot recommend it. In the first place, it would be very expensive, since a large amount of wattage would be wasted in the resistance. Such a resistance might be cut into the A. C. circuit, but the amount necessary would be purely a matter for experiment. A stage dinner would be very satisfactory if you could get one of large enough capacity to supply that amperage on a 220 line, but that I think you cannot do. It is possible the resistance might be cut into the D. C. side, between the rectifier and arc, but I do not believe it would work very well. In fact, I very much doubt if there is anything you can do which will cause the old-type rectifier to give satisfactory results under the conditions named. It seems to me that it is very much up to your light company to give you steady voltage, even though they have to install a voltage regulator to do it.

However, there is something radically wrong when a change from one step of your regulating reactance to the next doubles the amperage. Something decidedly wrong there. But the General Electric Company tells me that they have told you what to do for that end of the trouble.

As to the transformer, I could not, of course, say whether it is or is not overloaded, but certainly something is when you get a variation of ten amperes. Maybe it is the wires which feed the transformer. You could easily check the overload matter out by having an assistant set his watch with yours, then you watch your ammeter while he watches the large motors in question, and make record of its precise time of starting and stopping once or twice. If your ammeter drops back when the big motor is started, and advances when it stops, that settles it beyond cavil, and in a way friend superintendent cannot dispute. Something is too small. It may be feed wires or transformer—probably the latter.

Trick Work and Double Exposure (Concluded).

THE next class of vision is that of the ghostly or semi-transparent vision, which at no time assumes material form. This is one of the simplest of double exposures, since no mattes are needed.

We will take for example of this class of vision the bachelor seated in his own room, perhaps smoking and thinking of his sweetheart. In this case he is visited merely by her shadowy outline. In order to make the vision more clear we select a portion of the film which is in shadow yet not in such deep shadow as not to show any detail, merely one which is not strongly lighted, then, after making the first exposure, the person who is to appear in visionary form is posed before the shadow box of black velvet and a second exposure is made with or without a matte, according to whether we wish to show the entire figure or whether we wish to cut part of it away and merely show the head and shoulders. The strength of the visionary figure in the scene is determined by the exposure given.

In making double exposure there are a number of things to be remembered. First among these is that in split stage work the two exposures must be very evenly matched; otherwise, one or the other of the exposures will be too light or too dark when shown upon the screen. Another point to be remembered in exposure, especially in the ghostly vision type, is that film which has been previously exposed is not nearly so sensitive as unexposed film, and that to produce the second visionary exposure upon the film which has already been once exposed requires considerable stronger exposure to impress the vision than did the first. Also, that double exposures are only satisfactory when made from light-colored objects, so that before beginning a picture in which ghostly visions are to appear it should be arranged that all of the costumes worn by the visionary characters should be as light in color as possible. Still another thing to be taken into account in using exterior mattes with small openings, especially when close to the lens, is that the matte acts as a secondary diaphragm and cuts down the exposure very materially, so that it is almost absolutely necessary unless one has considerable experience to make preliminary tests in order to ascertain the correct exposure necessary through a small exterior matte opening.

In addition to the use of the double-exposure for visionary work, there are many artistic effects which may be obtained by using for vignetting the edges of a picture both with black cardboard and with glass mattes. In using the glass matte for vignetting the effect produced and one which is particularly good for close-ups, is that of the circle or other form within which the objects are clear and in focus, outside of which the object is still visible in the lighter shade, but in or out of focus as desired. The out-of-focus edge is produced by cutting mattes in light amber colored celluloid and mounting them on glass or, if the celluloid is stiff enough to hold its shape without warping, the glass mount may be omitted.

To produce a light bordered vignette in focus, fix an undeveloped plate in hypo and clear in a solution of Farmer's reducer. The hypo will not be sufficient to remove entirely all of the silver from the gelatine. Then with a solution of light yellow dye paint your matte shape upon the gelatine side of the glass with a brush and allow to dry. This acts as a filter, thus reducing the light action through the yellow portions without totally obscuring the detail.

Stop-crank Work.—Stop-crank work applies to all of the camera tricks performed by taking one frame of a picture at a time and moving inanimate bodies by hand between exposures. This is infinitely tedious work but produces astonishing effects.

The use of mechanical devices for this type of work is limited only by the ingenuity of the cameraman.

All sorts of schemes may be employed in conjunction with stop-crank work for producing bizarre effects. In a picture called the Magic Luncheon, the dishes apparently prance across the table and arrange themselves in order, followed by the knives and forks and spoons, then the edibles arrange themselves upon the dishes, the knife and fork cut into the food, the coffee pot jumps up and pours the coffee into the coffee pot, etc. This is dne by taking one picture at a time, between each exposure, moving each object which appears to be in motion a fraction of an inch at a time, until the whole cycle of movement has been accomplished.

*Copyright, 1917, by the Chalmers Publishing Co.

Certain parts of the action can be done without stop-crank by turning, very slowly, and dragging the dishes across the white table cloth with white threads which are invisible against the white background of the table cloth. Other movements are accomplished by moving objects from behind by means of wires, thus cutting down the separate movements as much as possible. Toys and dolls may be animated in the same manner.

Jointed drawings are used to a great extent in animated cartoons, although a great number of drawings have to be made in addition to the use of the jointed figures.

Reversing the Camera.—There are many actions which may be done backwards which cannot be done forwards, such as emerging from the water and projecting oneself upon a diving board many feet above the water, to which the camera can lend veri-similitude by reversing the action, either by turning backward or turning the camera upside down, which is, in effect, the same thing.

Most of you who read this have probably already read of the familiar example of the thrilling scene in a railway picture in which the engineer climbs out over the cow-catcher, snatches a little girl from the center of the track, apparently saving her life from being crushed out by the on-rushing locomotive. This was taken by slow reverse cranking on a scene in which the locomotive backed up, the engineer stood on the cow-catcher with the child in his arms, and as the engine backed into the field of the camera he deposited her carefully in the center of the rails and climbed backward up over the cow-catcher, the engine backing out of the picture; the only inconsistency being that when the picture was shown the smoke, instead of issuing from the stack of the engine, was busily forming itself in the air and rushing down the smoke stack.

(THE END.)

Cinematography Prophesied.

Sir John Herschel, the celebrated astronomer, who was also a brilliant chemist, foretold nearly sixty years ago the method used today in making motion pictures. It was he who, in 1819, discovered the solvent power of hyposulphite of soda on the haloid salts of silver, thus introducing it as a fixing agent in photography. His prediction of motion pictures was published in 1860 in the Photographic News, a leading journal of photography at that time. He says: "What I have to propose may seem to you like a dream, but it has at least the merit of being possible and, indeed, at some time realizable. Realizable—that is to say, by an adequate sacrifice of time, trouble, mechanism and outlay. It is the representation of scenes in action by photography.

"The vivid and like-like reproduction, and handing down to the latest posterity of any transaction in real life, a battle scene, a debate, a public solemnity, a pugilistic conflict (Heenan and Sayers prize fight took place 1860), a harvest home, a launch—indeed, anything, in short, where any matter of interest is enacted within a reasonably brief time, which may be seen from a single point of view.

"I take for granted nothing more than—first, what photography has already realized or what we may be sure it will realize within some very limited lapse of time from the present date, viz., the possibility of taking a photograph instantaneously, of securing pictures in a tenth of a second; secondly, that a mechanism is possible, no matter how complex or costly—and perhaps it need not be either the one or the other—by which a prepared plate may be presented, focused, impressed, displaced, numbered, secured in the dark and replaced by another within two or three-tenth seconds.

"In fact, the dismounting and replacing needs only be performed within this interval; the other items of the process, however numerous, following these up in succession, and collectively spreading over a long a time as may be needful.

"There is a pretty toy called the phenakistoscope, which presents a succession of pictures to the eye by placing them on a wheel behind a screen, and bringing each in succession to an opening in the screen of the size of the picture and thus allowing it to be seen. The eye is in like manner covered by a dark revolving screen, having narrow linear openings in it, which allow glimpses through them precisely at and only at the instant when the pictures are in the act of transmitting the frame, and sensibly in the middle of the area.

"By this arrangement it has been found possible to exhibit figures in action, as dancers pirouetting, wheels revolving, etc., by having prepared a set of figures taken from one model presented at various angles to the visual ray.

"Coarse as the representations so made have been, the apparent reality of movements has been very striking. The persistence of the impression on the retina and its gradual fading obliterates of glosses over the hiatus in a way which would hardly be thought possible. Now there is nothing in the law of periodicity as regards the movements of the model to influence the results, and we have only to substitute for such a periodically recurrent set of pictures imperfectly drawn by hand perfect stereoscopic and simultaneous pairs of photographs duly presented to both eyes in their natural order of succession to produce a stereoscopic picture in action."

Notes of the Electrical Exposition

Exhibits of Interest to the Picture Theater Manager and Operator.

AT THE Electrical Exposition and Motor Show, held at Grand Central Palace, New York, October 10 to 20, inclusive, the Nicholas Power Co. exhibit was in charge of A. L. Ravin, assisted by F. J. Bird, Theo. Oswald, Hector McKinnon and Jos. Abram. A. J. Lang circulated on the outside and took charge of the social end of the function.

The Power exhibit consisted primarily of Power's "Excelite," the latest Power achievement in projection in which incandescent lamps are used instead of the usual carbon arc. To demonstrate the absolute efficiency of the new method of projection, the Power Co. installed an atmospheric screen in its exhibit upon which pictures were projected, and the results obtained, in spite of the brilliant illumination of the exposition hall, were excellent. One of the attractive features of the Power exhibit which excited considerable interest and comment is a fully nickel-plated 6B Cameragraph equipped with the regular Power's arc lamp.

The Power machines were used exclusively in the Exposition. Two 6B "Excelite" machines were used in the Red Cross theater to project U. S. Government pictures. Other installations of Power's machines were seen in the exhibits of the General Electric Co., Edison Lamp Works, National Lamp Works, United Electric Light and Power Co., and the New York Edison Exhibit of Household Appliances. In the General Electric Company exhibit the principal motion picture shown was "The Benefactor," depicting the principal episodes of the life of Thos. A. Edison. An interesting feature of this exhibit was the rear projection of daylight pictures on a special translucent screen. The Power "Excelite" machine is equipped with Edison incandescent 750 watt lamps especially designed for motion picture projection, which lamps are used on alternating current.

The exhibit of the National Lamp Works was especially interesting. It occupies spaces 75-77. A Power's 6B "Excelite" machine was installed in a wire glass and steel booth, especially constructed for display purposes, the first of its kind to be used in New York; it was thoroughly fireproof and very attractive. The Power lamphouse was equipped with the National 20 ampere lamp, and an atmospheric screen, erected about twenty feet from the machine upon which motion pictures showing the manufacturing process of the Mazda lamp were projected, and notwithstanding the extraneous light throwing 1½ candles on the screen, the projection was excellent. L. C. Kent, of the Engineering Department of that company's Cleveland branch, was in charge of the exhibit.

Strauss & Co., builders of electric signs, of 209-213 West 48th street, New York City, showed samples of their attractive and attracting output.

The Kinetic Engineering Company of Philadelphia was represented by two of its organ blowers, one hitched to a pipe organ and the other to an orchestrion. A feature of these blowers, which may be operated by either electric or gasoline motors, is the constant speed of operation whether the instrument is being played or not. When the instrument is silent, the quantity of current on the electrically operated type drops to a minimum of consumption. The blower may be attached to any organ already installed without the necessity of providing a heavy and expensive foundation and without putting the organ out of commission for more than a few hours.

The Palmer Electric and Mfg. Co., of Boston, Mass., exhibited its emergency lighting control, by means of which lighting switches may be operated from any desired number of distant points at will. This system may be applied to power switches as well and would allow an exhibitor to control his house lighting, ventilating fans and even the operating room mechanism from as many positions as might be desired.

Among the motors shown by the Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., of East Pittsburgh, Pa., was a line of fraction horse power alternating and direct current motors, ranging from 1/10 to 1/3 H. P. in the alternating and from 1/10 to 1/6 H. P. in the direct current type. These motors, which are particularly adapted to grinding, buffing and drilling are just the thing for the tool bench of the up-to-date picture theater and will do much to render quick and easy many operations now performed laboriously by hand.

To the exhibitor who uses a phonograph as his orchestra, the phonograph motor, shown by the Shelton Electric Motor Co., of Fort Wayne, Ind., would prove of much help. This device, which requires no fitting to the cabinet of the instrument, may be attached to any phonograph and obviates the necessity of cranking the machine.

Ferdinand Gottschalk

FERDINAND GOTTSCHALK, long associated with the Frohmans—both Charles and Daniel—management on the stage, has recently still further affiliated himself with it by making his first screen bow for the Empire All-Star Corporation which is making Charles Frohman's successes in motion pictures.

Mr. Gottschalk has not the customary tale of parental opposition to tell of his early career. On the contrary, when he told his father he had been offered an excellent part by the late Rosina Vokes with good remuneration and asked what he should do the elder Mr. Gottschalk's answer was, "Wire your acceptance." To further signify his approval of his talented son's choice of a career, he gave him all his clothes and a handsome check to boot. Those same old clothes still form a part of Mr. Gottschalk's wardrobe and he values them far more than any modern garment he possesses.

Ferdinand Gottschalk.

It was strange that an American manager should introduce Mr. Gottschalk—an Englishman—on his first appearance in his own country and the late Charles Frohman, who was the manager in question, took a characteristic delight in having the opportunity.

More recently Mr. Gottschalk remembers with much pleasure his engagement at the New Theater, where he played in many Shakespearian roles such as Aguecheek in "Twelfth Night," the clown in "Winter's Tale," Slender in "Merry Wives of Windsor" and the clown in "Antony and Cleopatra."

After that Mr. Gottschalk was in two revivals, "The Amazons" and "The Duke of Killicrankie," in both of which he played the same role as in the original production.

In motion pictures Mr. Gottschalk has just finished "My Wife," in which he played the same role he created on the screen, that of Gibby, and Herbert Threadgold in "Please Help Emily," with Ann Murdock as star.

SIMPLEX OUTING.

The employees of the Precision Machine Company recently held an outing at Belvidere Park, North Beach, L. I. Races and games of various kinds were indulged in, but the ball game between the married and single men was the main attraction. E. M. Porter, the general manager, and the heads of the different departments were in attendance, and, while the weather was not as favorable as it should have been, the twenty-piece band helped to put sunshine into things. A fishing trip was arranged for Columbus Day.

HAMILTON MAKING "THE MATERNAL SPARK."

G. P. Hamilton, pioneer of the film industry, who was recently added to the Triangle's large directing force at Culver City, has just begun work on his first picture, the working title of which is "The Maternal Spark." Included in the cast are Irene Hunt and Rowland Lee. On the opening day, in which a courtroom scene was shot, Hamilton had thirty stock people and over a hundred extras making "atmosphere" before his megaphone.

HOPPER WORKING ON NEW TRIANGLE.

Director E. Mason Hopper has completed the filming of "Blue Blood," his story of New York aristocracy, featuring Alma Ruebens, the attractive Triangle favorite, and is preparing a story in which Walt Whitman, popular Triangle character actor, will be featured as a hypocritical parson. Mr. Whitman's last screen role was "Tough Luck" Baxter, in "The Firefly of Tough Luck."

Cromelin President of Inter-Ocean

Succeeds the Late Henry J. Brock as Executive Head of Big Exporting Organization.

OWING to the untimely death of Henry J. Brock, president of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, members of the board of directors at a recent meeting elected their vice-president, Paul H. Cromelin, president and general manager.

The name of Paul H. Cromelin is too well known in the film world to be introduced in these columns again, as Mr. Cromelin's entry into the film world dates back to the very early days in filmdom as being one of the old guards and a "progressive."

Paul H. Cromelin.

"The death of Mr. Brock was a severe shock to us all," remarked Mr. Cromelin, "and a gap exists in our organization which we feel never can be properly filled; nevertheless 'business as usual' will be our slogan, and we hope to make the Inter-Ocean and its connections greater than ever and carry out the broad plans laid out by Mr. Brock."

The Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, with offices on the tenth floor of the Candler Building at 220 West 42d street, is known to carry on one of the largest export film businesses in the United States, with offices established in London, Paris, Russia and connections in all other important points in the world. It is the sole distributor in foreign fields for many of the leading American manufacturers.

Harry Beaumont

HARRY BEAUMONT, the versatile director of motion pictures, has joined the Selig Polyscope Company. William N. Selig selected "Brown of Harvard," the dramatic success, for Beaumont's first picture. Mr. Beaumont escorted a special company of players to Harvard University to film important scenes of the play.

Born in Abilene, Kansas, February 10, 1883, Mr. Beaumont accompanied his parents to St. Joe, Mo., where he graduated from the public schools. He started early in the theatrical business as a program boy in St. Joe.

Harry Beaumont.

He first became an actor with a repertoire company and then went into vaudeville. He was featured in the title role of "Checkers." He worked for the Vitagraph Company three months and then returned to vaudeville. He then accepted an engagement with the Edison Company and remained with them three years as an actor. The fourth year he was directing Edison productions. He had written over one hundred stories for the screen and has played in or produced many of them.

Later, Mr. Beaumont joined the Essanay Company and directed Henry Walthall in "The Truant Soul." He then directed Bryant Washburn in the "Skinner" photoplays and wrote two of the "Skinner" stories.

"I have been drafted for the National Army," said Mr. Beaumont in a recent interview, "and I shall gladly respond when called. I will not claim exemption. I believe that movie stars and directors should do their bit as well as others."

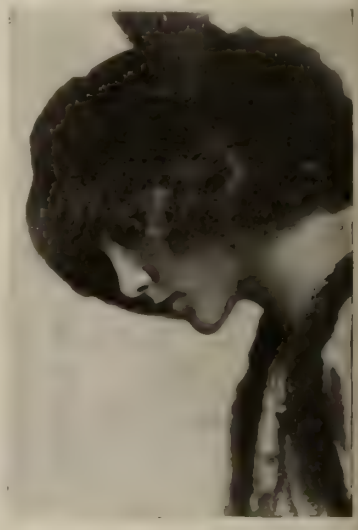
Mr. Beaumont's principal recreation, he says, is writing stories and movie scenarios. He has also written several vaudeville acts. He likes motion pictures as well as any fan. He believes that the cast should know what the story is about and explains the plot. He also explains each scene before it is rehearsed. He is one of the youngest directors in the business and, judging from his past work, has a wonderful future.

FLORENCE LA BADIE DEAD

Well-Known Moving Picture Actress Succumbs to Injuries Sustained in Automobile Accident of Two Months Ago.

IT is with sorrow that the moving picture industry and its patrons learn of the untimely death at the age of twenty-three years of Florence LaBadie, who has for the past five years been one of the leading stars of the Thanhouser studios, and was featured recently in Pathe Gold Rooster plays.

About two months ago Miss LaBadie, accompanied by a friend, was driving down a hill near Ossining, when, due to failure of the brakes to operate, the car plunged down the hill at a rate of speed which caused it to overturn at the bottom. The occupants of the car were thrown out, Miss LaBadie sustaining injuries with which the best of specialists were unable to cope. Much loved by all who knew her, she passed away on Saturday, October 13, leaving a mother and many friends to mourn her.



Florence LaBadie.

Miss LaBadie was born in Montreal, Canada, but for the past few years had been a resident of New York City, and at the time the accident was stopping with her mother at the Hotel St. Andrew. The funeral took place from the Campbell Funeral Church, Sixty-sixth street and Broadway, at eleven o'clock, Wednesday morning, October 17, to the Greenwood Cemetery, where internment was made.

ROACH ON 24-HOUR NOTICE.

Joseph Roach, a member of the scenario force at the Triangle's Culver City studio, has been ordered to hold himself in readiness to join Uncle Sam's National Army on twenty-four hours' notice. Roach passed the physical examination recently and did not claim exemption. Now they are only giving Roach stories which can be completed in one day.

JENNY LEE SUPPORTING ELTINGE.

Jenny Lee, who supports Julian Eltinge in his next Paramount picture, "The Clever Mrs. Carfax," to be released in November, is a genuine old-timer in the theatrical world. She has been a leading woman for many years and her actual dramatic experience covers half a century. In the Eltinge production she appears as an old invalid aunt around whose fortune much of the plot revolves. Her screen appearances began several years ago and she at once found favor because of her ability to interpret character roles calling for much difficult work. Jenny Lee, oddly enough, began work as a circus rider when a mere child. From this she drifted into legitimate work and appeared in many famous plays of a past generation

Red Cross Pageant

Wonderful Spectacle Enacted at a Long Island Private Estate Will Appear in Pictures.

THE great pageant held in the beautiful open-air theater on a private estate near Huntington, L. I., on October 5 was a most pronounced success. It is anticipated by the directors that a profit of $50,000 will be the immediate result and a further income of several hundreds of thousands of dollars will accrue when the pictures shall have been shown in all the picture houses of the United States. The first great attraction of this wonderful pageant lies in the fact that the leading players of the American stage took part, all giving their services for the cause which has become so vital to the interests of the "boys at the front." The great pageant consisted of a series of episodes illustrating the achievements of the allied nations, also their present condition and purposes. In the prologue the—

Genius of Enlightenment.—Edith Wynne Matthison, whose clear voice was heard all over the vast theater, invoked the powers of earth and skies as she dedicated the altar to peace. Here pupils of Florence Fleming Noyes gave the dance of invocation in the filmy costume of Greek vestals.

Flemish Episode.—Opening with Douglas J. Wood as Herald and closely followed by Ethel Barrymore personifying Flanders, Bruges by Kitty Gordon, Ghent by Margaret Moreland, Ypres by Adelaide Prince, and Louvain by Olive Tell. All these with their attendants gave allegiance to Flanders, depositing the symbol of the fleece upon the altar.

Italian Episode.—Irene Fenwick made a perfect Herald, while the great figure and powerful voice of Dr. Montgomery Irving as The Alps created a profound impression as he called upon the waters to appear with Annette Kellerman as the Mediterranean, Josephine Drake as the Adriatic, with Ethel McDonough as the Leader of the Lakes; this water scene was extremely effective.

English Episode.—The scene here is laid on the Island of Runnymede and is a representation of the signing of The Magna Charter. Norman Trevor is the Herald. King John —George Backus—arrives riding on his royal barge with the Queen (Marjorie Wood) and is met by the Barons led by Fitz-Walter (Macklyn Arbuckle). The Archbishop of Canterbury is well represented by Lumsden Hare, the Secretary by Frank Keenan and the Papal legate by Frederick Truesdale. After a brief acrimonious discussion the King signs the charter, which is also laid upon the altar.

French Episode.—This was perhaps the most attractive episode and was staged by Ben Ali Haggin, who also took the important part of Dunois, the Defender of France. Of course the central figure was Jeanne D'Arc, most ably represented by Ina Claire, Eugene O'Brien making a most representative Herald. The court group was most picturesque, this scene requiring a number of horses, which gave greater realism to the whole. Here were a larger number of talented people than in any other scene. Suffice it to name Guy Faviere as Charles VII (The Dauphin). The Pavane was danced before the court by Mrs. Ben Ali Haggin and Clifton Webb. The entrance of Joan before the court and the strange influences which accompany her were exceedingly well depicted and resulted in her leading them off to battle.

Russian Episode.—This was the occasion for much color and action. The scene is a village fair; the merchants set up their booths and the dancers add to the merriment. A fugitive from the tyrant's rage enters and is concealed by the peasants. The religious procession formed a special feature of this episode when the Ikon is brought and placed upon the altar. The tyrant (John Barrymore) carried aloft upon a palanquin by slaves enters and the fugitive (Geo. F. Smithfield) is discovered and banished.

The seventh episode, entitled the "Triumph of War," was chiefly picturesque with floral and fruit offerings which are scattered by War and his group.

The Drawing of the Sword.

The entire second half of the pageant was given over to this representation. A court had been erected with thrones for Justice (Howard Kyle, Truth; Blanche Yurka, Liberty; Gladys Hanson). The prologue was very ably pronounced by the Herald, Alice Fischer. To the court comes first Servia (Tyrone Power), stating the demands made upon him by Austria. Liberty and Justice bid him draw the sword. Truth warns him that the act will set the world aflame. Belgium (Ethel Barrymore) comes with her stricken people and orphaned children to plead her cause. To her defense comes England (E. H. Sothern), and France (Rita Jolivet), and after them Russia (Richard Bennet), each with a following; England calls to her far colonies and Canada, Australia, New Zealand, with India, respond. Japan (Michio Itow) brings his pledge of the defense of the Pacific. Then, as from a great distance, comes the cry of Armenia, Poland and Roumania, each with their touching appeals. Italy joins the allies, as does also Portugal.

Truth warns the nations of the strength of the foe and the nations lament their losses; Liberty and Justice now call to America, while the new Russia gropes her way to the fires of war and freedom. Her bewilderment falls upon the nations as a pall and they groan beneath it. At this point a new trumpet call is heard and America enters, saluting the allies and pledging her sword to their common cause. Marjorie Rambeau makes a fitting representation of America and is accompanied by a company of United States troops, who, after standing in a defensive attitude, salute, while the wooded hills around resound with the Star Spangled Banner.

That this episode cannot here be fittingly described is readily understood, suffice it to say that as the whole is immediately to be prepared for the screen, multitudes of admirers will be enabled to enjoy—with those who were privileged to see the original—this, which is without doubt, one of the greatest pageants ever enacted and one which is destined to become historical. Great credit is due not only to the great number of prominent players but also to the talented group of directors who were responsible for the staging of the whole; together they assembled a world's masterpiece.

Jeanie MacPherson in New York

Tells Plans of Future Work for Artcraft, En Route to Washington in Connection With Big Production.

JEANIE MacPHERSON, author of the forthcoming Artcraft spectacle starring Geraldine Farrar, "The Woman God Forgot," arrived in New York last week en route to Washington. Miss MacPherson, who has been closely associated with Cecil B. De Mille in the production of various cinema successes, expressed enthusiasm over the forthcoming Farrar production.

"I am now en route to Washington to consult various officials concerning a new production I am writing for Mr. De Mille," said Miss MacPherson. "This will be an Artcraft picture, of course, and will not have any one star but will present an exceptional selection of players. More than that it will be a big production with an unusal theme I am unable to say at this time."

In three years Miss MacPherson has written twenty-four stories for big photo productions, which have scored success, including "Joan the Woman," and "The Little American," Mary Pickford's recent patriotic picture. In addition to writing stories for the screen she has appeared in and directed a number of her own films. Her characterization of the cigarette girl in "Carmen" will be well remembered as an exceptional portrayal.

ALICE DAVENPORT AND MARTHA TRICK, NEW KEYSTONERS.

Among the new additions to the playing staff at the Triangle-Keystone studios in Los Angeles this week are Alice Davenport and Martha Trick. Miss Trick will probably do her first picture with Director Reggie Morris. Alice Davenport, who has been identified with Keystone comedies since their inception, is working in a new Triangle-Keystone comedy under the direction of Harry Williams.

Steger Resigns

Retires from Executive Capacities in Triumph and Crystal to Concentrate on Directing—Golden Succeeds Him.

ON Monday, October 8, Julius Steger commenced a new and important policy in the conduct of his affairs, by devoting himself exclusively to directorial work. In order to do this it was necessary for him to resign as president of both the Triumph as well as the Crystal Film Companies, to be succeeded in each instance by Joseph A. Golden, who has long been associated with both these institutions as vice-president. The change in the affairs of these two film men is entirely of an amicable nature and each wants it distinctly understood that the shift arose merely because the directorial duties of Mr. Steger have expanded to such a degree as to make it advisable for the latter to turn over the commercial reins of their past joint interests to his partner. Of course, Steger remains as a stockholder and officer in both the Triumph and Crystal. In fact the Crystal studio will be the home of most of the forthcoming Steger productions. Having just finished "Disillusioned," his new six-part feature starring Evelyn Nesbit, who previously enacted the leading role in "Redemption," a highly successful earner for Triumph, the able Julius is now working on Eugene Walters' "Just a Woman," featuring Charlotte Walker, at the same studio.

Julius Steger.

Interested with Mr. Steger in this forthcoming Charlotte Walker production, are Lee Shubert and Joseph Schenck. "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," featuring a well-known star not yet announced though already under contract, will follow, where after a very pretentious production in which Anna Case, the radiant prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will be the luminary, will be undertaken. In these as well as all subsequent Steger offerings to the state right market, both Mr. Schenck and Lee Shubert will be interested. Executive offices convenient to both the latter will soon be opened, either in the Longacre or Putnam Buildings.

Owing to the extensive and rapidly increasing film interests of Joseph Schenck, and the importance and calibre of his two associates in this, his most recent venture, much is to be looked for in future Steger creations, some of which will undoubtedly be produced in the Norma Talmadge studios as well as at the Crystal plant.

When interviewed at the latter studio by a representative of the Moving Picture World, Mr. Steger remarked: "I am indeed pleased that I can turn over the details of my business affairs to my long time associate, Mr. Golden, who, I know, will direct our common interests with as much and even greater satisfaction to myself than it was possible for me to do, burdened as I was with the making of pictures as well. Now that I am unfettered and in position to devote my full time to the work in the studios, I feel confident the result will become apparent in the productions that I turn out. Thus can I assure the highest quality of direction and contribute the fullest measure of artistry and skill."

Regarding the same matter, Mr. Golden divested himself of the following: "It is with great satisfaction that I release Mr. Steger from his commercial business cares by assuming them in his stead. For some time past I have realized that he was burning the candle at both ends, for Julius is one of the, if not, the most indefatigable workers that I have ever had the good fortune to be associated with. Henceforth I look to see even greater Steger presentations to the film market."

THE "NORTH" WIND DOTH BLOW.

With many states now sold on Pathe's seven-reel "Today," with Florence Reed, and the six-reel "The Mad Lover," with Robert Warwick, and with many buyers for unsold territory bidding for the pictures, the states right department of the Pathe Exchange feels that it is only a question of a short time before all territory will be disposed of. A gratifying interest has been shown in these Harry Rapf productions and buyers have not hestitated to call them the best pictures on the states right market.

Territory now sold includes New York, California, Nevada, Arizona, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, Wyoming, Alaska, Western Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Virginia, eastern Pennsylvania, Maryland, North Carolina, the District of Columbia, Ohio and West Virginia.

The Pennsylvania Board of Censors is said to have passed the pictures with high commendation. Tom North, of the Pathe states right department, is now in Ohio in connection with various details incident upon the sale of the pictures in that territory.

OGDEN ENGAGED ON "THE GRAIN OF DUST."

The Ogden Pictures Corporation, who have lately completed their initial Lillian Walker production, "The Lust of the Ages," now being exploited on a State rights basis, are now actively engaged in the filming of their second Walker production, "The Grain of Dust," adapted from the novel of the same name, written by the late David Graham Phillips.

Harry Revier, producing director of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, is bending every effort toward new and original effects. The production will be replete with night scenes. For three nights the company has been working on exterior locations, employed in which were not less than 180 high-powered arc lamps. The cast, exclusive of extras and bits, calls for nineteen principals and it is predicted by the makers that "The Grain of Dust" will prove one of the most pretentious modern society dramas ever staged.

Of two reels of the production which have been run off and which, however, did not contain any continuous scenes, one and a half reel embraced camera and light effects that of themselves are likely to stamp the production as extraordinary.

A. KAY COMPANY GETS RIGHTS TO "GLAD SERIES."

The A. Kay Company recites the fact that it has just consummated a deal with the Jaf Film Corporation, whereby it becomes the universal distributor for a series of pictures to be exploited as "The Glad Series." The series is composed of seven one-reelers, each a separate story in itself, and yet the entire series of seven reels carries with it one purpose, and that is, to "Brighten the Corner Where You Are."

The pictures are written and directed by James A. Fitz-Patrick, formerly connected with the Juvenile Film Corporation.

The first of the pictures is entitled "Keep Smiling." Others of the series of pictures are "Lost and Found," "Cupid at Work," "Dust Unto Dust," "Uncle Sam's Reason," and two others for which names have not as yet been given.

SIX ROAD COMPANIES FOR OVERLAND.

Samuel Krellberg, president and general manager of the Overland Film Co., New York, has started two groups of road companies out with his "The Russian Revolution" production. One of the groups, consisting of four separate traveling companies, will cover California, Nevada, Arizona, Utah, Idaho, Montana, New Mexico and Washington—in conjunction with A. P. Wilks—and the other group divided into two companies the six states of New England, New Jersey, Ohio and Pennsylvania. These arrangements are exclusive for the territories above-mentioned and will not be extended to any other states of this country which are being sold and disposed of on the regular state-right basis. The only exception is New York city, which is being booked direct from the Overland offices in the Godfrey Bldg.

LOEW BOOKS KING-BEES.

Marcus Loew contracted for a sixty days' showing in New York of Billy West (King-Bee) comedies, starting Monday, Oct. 15.

SALES OF THE WEEK.

THE firm of Hiller and Wilk report the sale of the British West Indies rights of "The Whip" to W. H. Humphreys, of Georgetown, British Guiana, South America. British Guiana itself, however, was not included in the sale.

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., sold "The Warrior" to James B. Clark, of the Clark-Rowland interests of Pittsburgh. The territory secured embraces Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Nathan Hirsch, president of the Pioneer Film Corporation of New York city, has purchased from the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., the exclusive rights to "The Cold Deck" for New York state, New York city and northern New Jersey, including Trenton. He already has it booked for Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo.

The rights to the entire foreign territory on "The Grain of Dust," the forthcoming Ogden Picture Corporation's feature starring Lillian Walker, which will probably be ready for the market before the middle of November, has been sold by Ogden to the Crest Pictures Corporation.

Carle E. Carlton, president of the Crest organization, already reports the sale of the exclusive Scandinavian rights for a goodly sum.

The Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions has bought "Today," "The Mad Lover" and "Persuasive Peggy" for Ohio, West Virginia, and Western Pennsylvania, the former two from Pathe, the last mentioned from the Mayfair Film Corporation.

The state right department of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation announce that "Enlighten Thy Daughter" has been sold to the Louisiana Enlightment Co. of New Orleans, of which George J. Diefenbach is president and general manager. The Louisiana company has purchased the state rights for Louisiana, Mississippi and Arkansas for this subject.

Harry Cummins, of the Longacre Building, has also purchased territory for "Enlighten Thy Daughter" for the following states: Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

The Casino theater, Washington, D. C., opened with the subject for the entire week of October 8.

I. Weinberg, president of the Renowned Pictures Corporation, 1600 Broadway, is very much pleased with the results obtained with the opening of his fall business. This company is the owner of the production "In Treason's Grasp" and has been successful in selling the territorial rights to the following State Rights Buyers: Enterprise Film Company for W. Pennsylvania and W. Virginia, Griever and Herz for Indiana and Illinois, Exclusive Features, Inc., for Greater New York and Globe Films Limited for the Dominion of Canada.

In addition, they have just closed contracts with William Vogel for Australia and New Zealand and Donald Campbell for India, Ceylon and Burma.

Several deals are pending for the production "Should She Obey?" for which the Renowned Pictures Corporation are the selling agents.

The projection room of the Renowned Pictures Corporation having been constructed with particular attention to ventilation, is the particular pride of both Mr. Weinberg and his associate, Maurice Fleckles. It has been handsomely decorated and the furnishings are particularly comfortable. It is open to the trade and perfect service is assured.

FRANCE FILM COMPANY BREAKS SILENCE.

Charles H. France, president and managing director of the France Film Company, Inc., has established offices in Suite 608, Candler Building, 220 West 42d street, New York. From this headquarters several feature productions annually will be exploited, some by the sale of world rights, others via the state right route. France has been known for many years as a producer, and his entry into the independent field will be marked by the release under his own company of "The Natural Law," which, as a stage play, achieved success during an eight months' run at the Republic theater, New York City.

Margaret Courtot is featured in the film version as the heroine in whom the call of youth—the natural law—was stronger than conventionality, and the pre-arranged betrothal to the older doctor, whose love she could not return. The role of the physician is played by Howard Hall, who both wrote the piece and acted this part in the Broadway production. George Larkin is the young hero.

The stage play was considered at once one of the most daring and uplifting works ever presented to the public. Its teachings were strong and the situations in it were of the kind that promoted discussion. The screen production is a duplication in every respect of the stage play—the same situations are preserved and every title shown on the screen is an excerpt from the lines spoken at the stage presentation.

Mr. France has spent nearly three months making the picture, sparing no expense.

NEW LEAGUE ADOPTS DIFFERENT NAME.

At the meeting of the Exhibitors' Co-Operative League, held on Thursday, October 11, at the Hotel Astor, it was decided to change the name of the new organization to The United Exchanges, Inc. This change was made at the behest of the majority of exhibitors and exchange men present in the belief that the new title more nearly approximates the aims of the recently formed combination.

Immediately following the adjournment of the meeting at the Astor the following were appointed as temporary officers pending a final meeting on Thursday, October 25: David A. Lourie, of Boston, Mass., temporary chairman; L. C. Card, of Newark, N. J., temporary treasurer.

The meeting was well attended by representative film men from many parts of the country and the list of membership to be made public immediately following the gathering on October 25 will embrace prominent exchangemen and exhibitors from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

"WARRIOR" SHOWN UNION LEAGUE.

In line with the remarkable popularity which "The Warrior," starring Maciste, the hero of "Cabiria," has attained since its premiere at the Criterion, Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., which controls the United States rights to the spectacle, are in receipt of another request from a private source, bespeaking a screening of the picture.

The Union League Club of New York, one of the most exclusive organizations in the city, numbering among its members leaders in all walks of life, was given the opportunity of enjoying an exhibition of "The Warrior" on Thursday evening, October 11, in the grand ballroom.

An orchestra had been especially engaged for the occasion and several members of the Italian diplomatic corps were present to witness the daring feats performed by their countryman Maciste, who is at present doing "his bit" in the front-line trenches.

DR. CRANE BOOSTS RAVER FILM TRUTH.

Among the most ardent advocates of the plan to establish Public Defenders, in every municipality which maintains a prosecuting attorney, as outlined in Harry Raver's screen production of "The Public Defender," is Dr. Frank Crane, the well-known editorial writer of the New York Globe.

Dr. Crane is strong for the movement and has written of its progress frequently. Recently in a two column article on the subject he said in part: "If we have a public prosecuting attorney, why not a public defender? Is it not as much the business of the state to protect the innocent as it is to convict the guilty? One of the best results of establishing the office of public defender is that it will help to remove the feeling entertained by so many people that the courts are only for the wealthy."

CLEVELAND STRONG IVAN FANCIER.

The Ohio Ivan Film Distributors, George Stockton, manager, reports unprecedented business done with "One Law for Both," Ivan Abramson's Russian epic. "One Law for Both" opened at the Orpheum theater, Cleveland, on Sept. 30 for a run of an entire week, and played to biggest houses the Orpheum theater ever enjoyed.

Encouraged by this fact, the management of the Orpheum theater viewing the two latest Ivan releases, viz: "Babbling Tongues," directed by William Humphrey and "Married In Name Only," directed by Edmund Lawrence, booked each of these for a week's run beginning November 5.

LAKE ERIE SECTION LIKES "REDEMPTION."

Leon D. Netter and his staff of film exploiters in the Cleveland headquarters of the Masterpiece Film Attractions are realizing extraordinary results from the execution of their fall campaign of "Redemption," according to the statement of Mr. Netter's able New York secretary, Miss M. S. Rosenfield. Ohio certainly is giving a very warm reception to the Nesbit story which will place it in the category of big money-makers in that territory. She also speaks highly of the showing made by "The Garden of Allah," "Cold Deck" and "Beware of Strangers."

HERE IS A BRAND NEW IDEA.

Ed. Rosenbaum, Jr., King-Bee's publicity director, is negotiating with one of the big phonograph companies to have them make a special record announcing the coming of Billy West comedies, giving the story, cast and novelties in the picture, on a record made exclusively for Billy West. This the theater manager will put in his lobby and his patrons will be well informed as to the qualities of the next Billy West comedy to be shown.

"KING BEE" COMEDIENNE HURT.

Ethel Gibson, one of the King-Bee's favorite comediennes, was injured at the Bayonne studio recently while taking a fall in the latest comedy made by Billy West, entitled "The Pest," in which over one hundred extra people were used. The injury is not considered fatal and she is expected to rejoin the company when they leave for the coast.

"SHAME" REPRESENTS FOUR MONTHS' WORK.

"Shame," the special production planned by John W. Noble, as his initial contribution to the state rights market, is ready for the screen after more than sixteen weeks spent in preparation, staging, cutting and titling.

Noble, whose more recent productions include Francis X Bushman and Beverly Bayne in "Romeo and Juliet," Valli Valli in "The High Road" and Ethel Barrymore in "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie," decided early last June to confine his efforts to the creation of pretentious features. In order to succeed in his new undertaking he arranged to allow himself at least three times the usual number of days required for the staging of a large production, as he maintains that the standard of motion picture productions is gradually being raised by the exceptional pictures which appear from time to time, representing the special effort of competent directors who concentrate upon a single big subject and take the time necessary for its proper presentation.

The powerful drama "Shame" was prepared for the screen without regard for time or expense. Mr. Noble worked the story into scenario form himself and selected the cast with as much care as if producing a stage play for a year's run on Broadway. The staging of the drama was given as many weeks as the thorough rehearsing and artistic photographing of its seven reels demanded, while the all-important work of cutting and titling was also done by the director's own hands.

Jules Burnstein, general representative for John W. Noble in the marketing of "Shame," will have his plans for its premiere perfected at an early date.

Zena Keefe, Niles Welch, Jack Dunn, Lionel Belmore, Paul Daucet, Joyce Fair and Dell Boone are prominent in its cast.

ROCA LANDS MUTUALS FOR CUBA.

Some months ago negotiations were started by the Oceanic Film Corporation and Mr. Adolfo Roca, of Havana, Cuba, for the establishment in Havana of a proper representation of the Mutual Company's output.

Matters were brought to a head by Mr. Roca making a special trip to Chicago, where he conferred with the Oceanic Film Corporation and the executive powers of the Mutual Film Corporation. The result of the visit was a confirmation of a contract running into six figures, whereby Mr. Roca will devote his energies and his already efficient organization to the distribution of Mutual productions. Mr. Roca immediately made arrangements whereby they will first be shown in the "Gran Teatro Fausto," which theater compares very favorably with the "Strand" or "Rialto" of New York.

ENTER ELDEE, INC.

A new name has been added to the list of film company nomenclatures that decorate the directory at 1600 Broadway, the Mecca Building. It is the Eldee Film Distributors, Inc., and is under the management of E. C. Jewett, also secretary and treasurer of the new state-right concern.

The first production being offered the independent exchange market is "A Slacker's Heart," the seven-reel production produced by the Emerald Motion Picture Company, directed by Fred J. Ireland, featuring Edward Arnold, and in which appears some three thousand individuals. Other productions will be announced in the very near future, so we are informed.

In addition to selling state-rights on "The Slacker's Heart," the Eldee Company intends to retain New York city for itself and conduct its own bookings throughout this territory only.

ABRAMSON MAKING NEW PICTURE.

Ivan Abramson, having fully recovered from the operation he has recently undergone, is rushing the completion of his much heralded production, "Sins of Ambition."

The picture has the entire force of the Ivan people on tiptoes, as General-Director Abramson intends it to be by far the foremost thing he has ever undertaken in pictures or otherwise, both from the standpoint of art as well as expense.

In "Sins of Ambition" Ivan Abramson steps forth with a proposition that may be well worth trying as a preventative of war after this war is over.

The cast that has been engaged for the forthcoming feature includes Wilfred Lucas, Barbara Castleton, Madaline Traverse, James Morrison, Anders Randolf and Leah Baird.

BILLY WEST IN "THE MEDDLER."

In the latest King-Bee Billy West comedy that has just been finished at the Bayonne, N. J., studio, one hundred and five people were engaged for one scene depicting the lobby of the Hotel Astor. It is the most elaborate set ever made by the King-Bee Company, and it is predicted it will create a sensation when seen on the screen. Although it is not definitely decided the picture will probably be called "The Meddler," and will be released Nov. 15.

ROMAYNE DOING BIG THINGS.

From its headquarters in Los Angeles, the Romayne Superfilm Company makes the announcement that it contemplates the production of historical, allegorical and industrial motion picture pageants, each to cost in the neighborhood of $100,000. George L. Hutchin, who stands preeminent in pageantry reproduction circles, having to his credit such spectacles as were presented at certain of the New Orleans Mardi Gras, the Columbian Exposition, Chicago; The Knights of Electra, Milwaukee; The Hudson-Fulton Celebration, New York City; The Lewis & Clark Exposition, Portland, Oregon, as well as the immortal parades and many of the pretentious features of the recent San Francisco World's Fair, has been engaged as supervising director of pageantry.

George L. Sargent has been engaged as general director and surrounded with a full corps of camera-men and assistants. The Romayne organization has closed an option on a twenty-acre tract in Hollywood with the intention of constructing one of the largest and most complete studios on the west coast. Their present studio is also in Hollywood.

"PUBLIC DEFENDER" IN DEMAND.

Harry Raver has received many offers for his big screen production "The Public Defender," since it was shown at the Hotel Astor. Inquiries as to the method of its distribution and marketing have been coming into the Raver offices daily since the premiere in the form both of letters and telegrams.

Mr. Raver has all of these propositions under consideration and will shortly make an announcement with respect to how "The Public Defender" will reach the theatre-going public. While the picture is scarcely a week out of the laboratory over two hundred requests from civic betterment leagues and kindred organizations have been received asking that it be shown in their towns and cities. These organizations feel that "The Public Defender" should do a great deal to create a better understanding of the movement which has resulted in the establishment of twenty odd public defenders in the U. S. In addition to the serious purpose contained in "The Public Defender," it is said to be a particularly entertaining drama of real life as well. Its cast is all of the all-star variety, containing Alma Hanlon, Frank Keenan, Robert Edeson and other players of repute and drawing powers.

BECKER STARTS HIS CAMPAIGN.

Herman Becker, general manager of Master Drama Features, Inc., has already opened the winter sales campaign of "Who's Your Neighbor?" Already Washington, Colorado, Nevada, Oregon, Montana, California, Arizona, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, northern New Jersey have been closed and deals are pending on New York, southern New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Mexico, Porto Rico and several South American countries.

Willard Mack, who wrote "Who's Your Neighbor?" broke into the dailies in early October through his marriage to Pauline Frederick. S. Rankin Drew, who directed the feature, is in France now, according to Mr. Becker, where he is serving with the American Ambulance Corps. Mr. Becker states that it was Mr. Drew's intention to produce another Willard Mack play when conditions would permit of his return from Europe. Three stars were employed by Mr. Drew in the "Who's Your Neighbor?" cast: Christine Mayo, Evelyn Brent and Anders Randolf, with Frank Morgan and William Sherwood in support. Director Drew sailed for his war work a week after finishing the picture.

PATCH PREPARES UNUSUAL ADVERTISING SERVICE.

What is termed by the Fort Pitt Theater Company as the most complete advertising service ever supplied for a special production, has been prepared for the Royal Italian Government's official war pictures. "The Italian Battlefront," which is now being played as a special attraction in legitimate houses throughout the country and which is soon to be distributed generally to moving picture theaters.

An exhibitor himself, who believes that not a small part of his success has been due to the advertising which he has put behind the picutres shown in his house, William Moore Patch, president and managing director of the Fort Pitt Company, under the direction of which the American tour of these pictures is being conducted, has seen to it that exhibitors are provided with every conceivable help to make the most of this production.

STARS HELP FILL SOLDIERS' PIPES.

Hoffman-Foursquare artists showed their patriotism last week by "doing their bit" for the benefit of the New York Sun's Tobacco Fund for the "Boys in France." Turning their backs for the moment upon their profession, they became "newsies" for a splendid cause. With evening editions of The Sun under their arms, they stopped pedestrians at Fifth Avenue and Forty-second Street and sold papers galore.

Among the volunteers were Jane Grey, Zena Keefe, Gertrude McCoy, Irene Fenwick, Leah Baird, Milton Sills, J. Herbert Frank and Tammany Young.

IN SEARCH OF FEATURES.

The Moving Picture World is in receipt of a letter from Max S. Nathan, manager of the Great Atlantic Feature Film Co., Wilmington, N. C., informing us of their desire to secure North and South Carolina and Georgia state rights to popular film productions being thus marketed. Mr. Nathan is particularly willing to consider handling such pictures on a percentage basis.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

November Bluebirds

Will Include Mae Murray and Carmel Myers in the Flock—Interesting Subjects Listed.

BLUEBIRD'S two new stars—Mae Murray and Carmel Myers—will be introduced to the program during November with Ruth Clifford (in the hundredth Bluebird) and Franklyn Farnum, furnishing the other features. There will be wide diversity in the subjects, including old fashioned-melodrama, society play, nature-study drama and mystery comedy. With these issues, Bluebird's "star-cycle" gets under way, Violet Mersereau and Dorothy Phillips, appearing in December, to complete the coterie of six stars who will figure in Bluebird's arrangements for the coming season.

"The Lash of Power," in which Carmel Myers will star, with Kenneth Harlan her leading man, will be released November 5. J. Grubb Alexander furnished the story, Fred Myton made the scenario and Harry Solter directed the good, old fashioned melodrama that starts the month. The sensational scenes and lurid episodes in "The Lash of Power" will form sharp contrasts to diversify the series.

Mae Murray's introduction to Bluebird will come Nov. 12, with the release of "Princess Virtue," directed by Robert Z. Leonard, from Fred Myton's scenario. Louise Winter's magazine story furnished the basis for Miss Murray's initiation to her new surroundings.

Bluebird No. 100 will be "The Savage," released Nov. 19, with Ruth Clifford the star and Monroe Salisbury featured as leading man. This is a Rupert Julian production, based on Elliott J. Clawson's story of the Canadian Northwest. Previous to its release on the program "The Savage" will be shown at the Broadway theater, New York, to start the Bluebird season at the theater, Oct. 21.

Franklyn Farnum, in "The Winged Mystery," will furnish comedy of a mysterious and sensational bent Nov. 26, with Claire Du Brey and Rosemary Theby having supporting roles of equal importance. William Parker prepared the scenario from O. D. Stuart's story, and Joseph De Grasse directed the production.

Violet Mersereau, in "The Raggedy Queen," will reappear among Bluebirds Dec. 3, after an absence of several months. This issue has been held back to admit Miss Mersereau to the place assigned to her in Bluebird's "star-cycle." Like all the other stars in the series, she will, in future, be seen every sixth week. "The Girl by the Roadside" has already been completed for her use, and she is now working on a third subject, under the direction of Wilfred Lucas.

VIRILE WESTERN "O. HENRY" THEME.

The famous story writer, O. Henry, at his best is found in the current Broadway Star Feature release, "Law and Order." The great American humorist established a large measure of his fame through his stories of cowboy life in the west. The film version of his well-known story is so faithful to life, so full of the quaint twists of human character that it is likely to rank as one of the most admirable of the "O. Henry" pictures.

"Law and Order" is a recital by Bud Oakley of those stirring days on the plains when court decisions were handed down with the aid of six-shooters, as contrasted with modern ideas of law and order. It relates to the domestic tragedy in the life of his ranch boss, Luke Summers, who returned home one day to find an eastern "dude" kissing his wife. He shot the latter and hurried away to the city to obtain a divorce. When he returned with an order givnig him the custody of the child, both mother and son were gone. Twelve years passed and in the meantime Luke had been elected sheriff. While taunting an eastern youth in a highly imaginative cowboy costume, "Pedro," a leading citizen of Bildad, by virtue of his chili con carne stand, was peppered with the youth's toy gun. "Luke" determined to avenge this insult to Bildad's "Law and Order" and hit the trail for New York. The latter finds Pedro's assailant, but Luke has no requisition papers Bud has recognized the youthful desperado as Luke's son by a scar over the eye. He confers with the court and displays Luke's order for the custody of the child. This solves the tangle, but Luke in his triumph wavers between paternal love and his duty to law and order. Finally he decides that Pedro was half Mexican anyway and that settles it. Chet Ryan is Bud Oakley and W. L. Rodgers is Sheriff Luke, and Frances Parks the feminine lead. The story was directed by David Smith. The next release in the O. Henry series will be "A Night in New Arabia," a four-reel picture laid in New York, in which J. Frank Glendon and Patsy De Forest are featured.

SOUTHERN YARDS BUILD A SHIP A DAY.

During the controversy which raged for months as to whether we should build steel or wooden ships, the Southern shipyards said nothing but "sawed wood." And they sawed so much of it that they are now far ahead of the schedule rate at which they promised the government to build wooden ships, and will soon be completing one wooden ship of 3,000 tons or over every working day.

The Southern Pine Association co-operated with the Gaumont Company in making a picture of the building of one of our new wooden fleet from the cutting of the monster pine and its conversion into lumber in the largest sawmill in the world, to the actual construction and launching of the largest freight and passenger steamship ever built in the South. More than 42 carloads, or 1,500,000 ft. of yellow pine lumber were used in this ship.

"Building Our Wooden Fleet," which appears in No. 79 of "Reel Life," released November 1, will restore the confidence of those pessimists who still fear the German submarines. It will show that if other sections of the United States are building ships in like proportion, our transportation problem is solved for all time.

Because that country will undoubtedly break with Germany, "Important Industries of Argentina," another subject featured in this issue of "Reel Life," is of particular interest. The Argentine Republic now ranks second only to the United States in its exportation of wheat, cattle, and hides, and will do its share towards feeding and clothing the nations fighting for democracy.

Three other entertaining subjects make up this number: "A Dry Land Periscope" describes a novel invention by which boys may see any ball game; "An Unusual Foster Mother" pictures the strange relationship which exists between a cat and some small chicks; "Had Your Mining Stock Panned Out," this week's animated contribution from "Life," shows how calmly we would have contemplated the price of coal had our dreams come true.

"THE MARK OF CAIN" (Pathe).

Caroline Wells, the popular novelist, wrote the book from which the second of the Mrs. Vernon Castle Pathe Plays, "The Mark of Cain," was adapted. This fact, together with that of Antonio Moreno being the male lead to a star so well known as Mrs. Castle, gives special interest to the play. George Fitzmaurice, a director of specially brilliant achievement, directed the feature which is in five parts. A man is known by the company he keeps and a director by the successes he has put on. To Mr. Fitzmaurice's credit are such heavily booked plays as "New York," "Via Wireless," "At Bay," "Kick In," "The Hunting of the Hawk," and "The On-the-Square Girl" to mention only a few. Such a record for achievement is remarkable. The bare statement, then, that Mr. Fitzmaurice directed "The Mark of Cain" is sufficient proof that the picture has received the most careful attention to detail and that sets, location and photography, to say nothing of the star and cast, are practically perfect.

"The Mark of Cain" is one of those thrilling detective-love-romance mystery plays that are so popular with every audience. There is something doing almost every minute, the action is rapid and the striking personality of the star, united with her attractive gowns, give the picture a tone and class that is present only in the highest class productions. Antonio Moreno is always pleasing and in this picture makes a fine opposite for Mrs. Castle. "The Mark of Cain" will be released on November 4.

Three Stars Grace Pathe Program

Molle King, Pearl White and Harold Lloyd Will Scintillate During the Week of Oct. 28.

MOLLIE KING, Pearl White and Harold Lloyd are the Box Office Stars on Pathe's program for the week of October 28. Miss King stars in the seventh episode of "The Seven Pearls" entitled "The False Pearl" with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary produced by Astra.

A crook named Stayne steals the pearl that Ilma and Harry have recovered. After thrilling adventures they get it back. Stayne and his pals pursue and trap Harry and Ilma on a little point of land on the edge of the Hudson. Harry sees some boys flying a big kite. He and Ilma grab the kite string and plunge into the Hudson. Stayne and one of his men jump into a little boat, raise the sail and pursue, guns in hand, and as the picture fades out, it is inevitable that they will catch the fugitives.

Pearl White is seen in the seventeenth episode of "The Fatal Ring," material produced by Astra. By a miracle Pearl is saved when Carslake pulls the lever and the terrific weight of the pile driver falls upon the spot from which Tom has just snatched her. Foiled again, Carslake hatches a clever plot. The former partner of Pearl's father dies and his daughter Bessie, on her way to a finishing school in the East, stops to visit Pearl. In a mysterious manner Carslake is able to trace the Violet Diamond and in a series of thrilling incidents, he finally succeeds in waylaying Pearl, Tom and Bessie on their return from a visit to a Chinese theater in the slums. To Pearl's amazement as Carslake's head appears in the door of the car, Bessie suddenly whips out a gun and speaking crisply and quietly says: "The Violet Diamond, quickly, no noise," and the film fades out.

Harold Lloyd starred in "Rainbow Island," a one-reel Harold Lloyd Comedy, produced by the Rolin Film Corporation. Harold and Snub out for a row, see a bottle floating in the water. Thinking that perhaps it contains a note from an heiress with pink ears and a flock of limousines they open it and the result is after a long row, they reach Rainbow island and are ready to see what makes it tick.

They are received in state by the King of the Cannibals. With white-faced fricasee in sight, it is a tradition of the tribe that Princess Loka-lik-a-tub who is not much on appearance, but a bear for playfulness, may select a husband. The trouble is that both Harold and Snub prefer boiling in a pot to stewing in a hut with a ten-ton princess. Life during the fifteen minutes that it takes to look at this picture is just one laugh after another.

"The Mole-Cricket," "Springtime in the Riviera" are the two halves of the Pathe colored split-reel educational and travel.

An international cartoon and educational and Hearst-Pathe News No. 88 and No. 89 complete this program.

TWO SINGLE REELS FROM GAUMONT WEEK OF OCTOBER 29.

The first single-reel produced by the Gaumont Company for the Mutual program for the week of October 29, is No. 148 of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, which will be released on Wednesday, October 31. Like its predecessors, this number of the Weekly will contain only the latest happenings of interest to the entire country. It will, of course, contain a section devoted to pictures, taken by staff photographers, of our soldiers here and abroad.

The other reel will be the Mutual film magazine, "Reel Life," No. 79 of which will be released on Thursday, November 1. In this issue are two subjects of more than usual importance. "Building Our Wooden Fleet," which was taken in co-operation with the Southern Pine Association, will go far towards assuring the public that our transportation problem is solved.

The other subject of timely interest is "Important Industries of Argentina." This great Southern Republic ranks second only to the United States in its production of cattle and wheat, and it is now prepared to do its part towards supplying the nations which will soon be its allies in the war against Germany.

Shorter, but greatly entertaining subjects, describe "A Dry Land Periscope," which will enable a boy to see any ball game, no matter how high the fence; "An Unusual Foster Mother," a cat which treats small chicks as though they were kittens; and "Had Your Mining Stock Panned Out," an animated drawing from the humorous weekly, "Life."

CAMERAMEN WORK AMID EXPLOSIVES.

For the first time in the history of a munition plant two outsiders were allowed to venture into "No Man's Land," a strip of territory given over to the powder houses. It is here that fulminate, a most dangerous explosive, is made to be used in the loading of the priming caps fitted into cartridges.

H. E. Hancock, director, and Herman Stockhoff, cameraman, of the International's split-reel staff, were allowed to enter the inclosure to "take" the first process in cartridge manufacturing. So, while the powder carrier wheeled his rubber-tired cart to the steel inclosed windows of the loading room delivering the deadly stuff, the camera was "ground." Not only was this single scene taken, but enough time was devoted to close-ups to make the picture complete. Needless to say no time was wasted, and both men breathed a sigh of relief when they had put a safe distance between "No Man's Land" and themselves. The pictures will soon be shown in the International's split-reel, released weekly through Pathe.

Hayakawa Talks of His Art

Japanese Actor Describes Difficulty of Interpreting Native Roles Due to Stoicism of Race.

SESSUE HAYAKAWA, the Paramount Japanese star, whose latest picture, "The Call of the East," was released by Paramount October 15, asserts that portraying the Oriental in his true character upon the stage or screen is no easy task.

"To properly interpret the true Japanese," said Hayakawa, "is very difficult, especially on the screen, because from childhood we are taught never to betray by our facial expression the least emotion. Stolidity of expression, indeed, is almost a racial trait. On the speaking stage, the voice might serve to 'put across' emotions, but on the screen there are only the eyes, the gestures, etc., with which to convey the feelings. Perhaps by no more than a fixed expression of the eyes, a rigidity of the lips, possibly with not a single gesticulation, we must carry to the audience the thoughts necessary to an understanding of the plot. To do this requires deep concentration."

"The Call of the East" was written by Beulah Marie Dix, and was filmed largely in the mountains of Northern California. While this sounds anomalous, the exterior settings in the picture will be found remarkably like the scenery of Japan. Sessue Hayakawa has virtually a double role—that is to say, the character is that of a young Japanese noble who changes to a modern type of the polished Oriental, a clubman in exclusive Tokio circles, educated in the West and greatly Anglicized. The actor is said to have accomplished this transition most admirably.

The startlingly Oriental quality of the scenes in "The Call of the East" is partially explained by the fact that Hayakawa, through Japanese friends, learned of a Nippon summer resort on a Northern California lake, where a group of his countrymen have banded together to form an Oriental summer colony. Every detail of the gardening, construction of the houses, costumes, etc., is reminiscent of such places in Japan. This was used as a "location."

"THE BOSS OF POWDERVILLE" (Jewel).

Action of the most exciting and intensely dramatic sort, absorbing suspense, highly spectacular effects and camera work such as has seldom been attempted in motion pictures—all of these qualities have been incorporated in generous measure in "The Boss of Powderville," the new Jewel special feature production which is nearing completion at Universal City under the direction of Ida May Park.

The cast is exceptionally capable. Dorothy Phillips plays the leading feminine role and William Stowell is the hard-hearted boss of the western town. Jack Mulhall appears in the part of a young and adventurous New York newspaper man, and Lon Chaney has great opportunities for characterization as an old restaurant keeper. Evelyn Selbie and Alfred Allen also have important roles.

One intensely dramatic moment follows closely upon the heels of another in the story, building up to a thrilling climax. The story was written by Thomas Addison, and Miss Park prepared her own screen arrangement.

As a suggestion of what the production promises in a spectacular way, a costly setting representing the town of Powderville will be burned and a spectacular explosion is planned to occur when the flames reach an extensive powder mill, the principal industry of the place.

A large force of carpenters has been busily engaged for the past month in building the town which is put to torch by enemies of the "Boss" after a spirited battle with the sheriff and his men. The scenes of the burning down will be filmed at night and unique lighting and camera effects have been planned by Director Park, aided by Milton Moore, technical director and Eddie Ullman, superintendent of photography.

MISS VALLI A DANCER OF ABILITY.

Virginia Valli, a clever young ingenue who recently joined the Essanay forces, has just returned to Chicago from New York, where she spent several weeks during the filming of the New York end of a forthcoming Essanay comedy-drama.

Miss Valli, whose most recent appearance was in "The Fibbers," literally danced her way into the pictures. An Essanay director needed a professional dancer for one scene. She must be skillful and capable of executing the most exacting interpretative steps. There were many good dancers among Essanay actresses, but no professionals.

Essanay scouts saw Miss Valli billed at a Chicago theater in a dancing act. He saw her perform and enjoyed her. A permanent contract followed.

Miss Valli also could qualify as a professional swimmer if she cared. She is one of the last to abandon daily dips in Lake Michigan near the Essanay studios. Miss Valli declares swimming and horseback riding proved great assistance to her in keeping in trim as a dancer.

PUT ON SKATES AT SENNET STUDIO.

Now it's the Sennett Skating Squad, superseding the Sennett Bathing Brigade, in Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies. It is said that once seen these gliding maidens can never be forgotten and that the bathing beauties, despite their charming costume, will vanish from memory in the face of the latest display.

Variety in Mutual Schedule

Four Big Stars Will Grace the Program for the Week of October 22.

FOUR big stars in a variety of pictures make up Mutual's release schedule for the week of October 22. Charlie Chaplin's latest picture, "The Adventurer," a two-reel comedy of the most ludicrously funny kind, is released on Monday, October 22. Miss Olive Tell is presented on October 22 in the first of her appearances in Charles Frohman's stage successes in motion pictures, "The Unforseen," a five-reel drama.

William Russell comes to the screen on the same date in "The Sea Master," a red-blooded drama of Barbary coast and the sea. The sixth chapter of "The Lost Empress," Helen Holmes' latest photonovel, is released October 22. The week's schedule includes two comedies, both one-reelers, "And Along Came Mary," starring Billie Rhodes, and "Jerry's Soft Snap," starring George Ovey. The list carries two topicals, Mutual Weekly and Reel Life.

"The Adventurer" Eagerly Awaited.

Chaplin's forthcoming comedy, "The Adventurer," has been eagerly awaited for more than two months by exhibitors. The production is long overdue, owing to the invasion of the Lone Star studios by illness, and Mutual's branch offices have been besieged with inquiries for weeks as to the release date of the forthcoming mirth-maker.

Chaplin's box office value is so well established—the demand from the hosts of Chaplin fans to see the Mutual funny man on the screen is so insistent—that the release date of a new Chaplin-Mutual special is an event among exhibitors.

"The Adventurer" shows Chaplin in the garb of a convict, making his escape over the rocky coast of southern California and up among the Sierra Madre mountains.

Olive Tell's First "The Unforeseen."

Miss Olive Tell, the well-known Frohman stage star, makes her first appearance in Frohman stage plays in the "Unforseen," a picture presentation of one of Charles Frohman's most successful productions. "The Unforseen" was originally staged at Mr. Frohman's Empire theater, New York, in 1903, and enjoyed a long and highly successful run.

Miss Tell is supported by an able cast, headed by David Powell. The picture was directed by John B. O'Brien. It is from the pen of Captain Robert Marshall, a celebrated playwright.

"The Sea Master" Thrilling Drama.

"The Sea Master," the release of October 22, starring William Russell, provides the well-known athletic hero of American-Mutual dramas with one of the most sensational roles of his screen career. Russell is cast as the skipper of a Pacific coast tramp, of doubtful reputation, with an ugly and hybrid crew. The opening scenes are laid in the notorious Barbary coast, where the rough and ready skipper rescues a pretty girl from the clutches of a dive keeper. His efforts to make her his woman failing, he makes her his wife, and it is not until the last scenes of the picture that he wins her trust and love. "Big Bill" Russell as "Bull" Dorgan, master of the ship, does some fighting which will add to his reputation as a screen scrapper of first magnitude. He engages in two free-for-all fights never before equalled in his well-known fighting.

The sixth chapter of "The Lost Express," the Mutual-Signal photonovel starring Helen Holmes, brings the thrilling mystery picture closer to its climax. Director McGowan has put a big wallop into "High Voltage," and Helen performs a number of her thrilling and death-defying stunts.

Two Comedies and Two Topicals.

"And Along Came Mary" is the fourth of the new series of Strand-Mutual comedies, starring pretty Billie Rhodes, supported by Jay Belasco. The new Mutual-Strands filled a distinct want in the industry and the bookings have been exceedingly heavy. "And Along Came Mary" is scheduled for October 23. The Cub comedy release of the week, "Jerry's Soft Snap," is scheduled for October 25.

Mutual Weekly comes to the screen October 24 with pictures of the world's latest news, including scenes among the American troops in France. Reel Life, the weekly film magazine, carries the following subjects: "Queer Trees in Trinidad," "How the American Traveler is Fed," "High Cost of Living Wins the Race," and an animated drawing from "Life," entitled "The Apparel and Not the Man Guilty."

ARTCRAFT SPECTACLE OPENS SIX THEATERS.

At the New York sales headquarters of Artcraft it was found last week that the initial Artcraft spectacle, "The Woman God Forgot," starring Geraldine Farrar, and produced by Cecil B. De Mille, has been selected to open six new theaters throughout the country. This production is expected to outshine the triumph of even "Joan." The first theater to sign the spectacle as an opening attraction is the widely advertised Kinema in Los Angeles. The California Theater in San Francisco is the other west coast house to open with this film, the others being eastern theaters. A big motion picture palace in the Middle West has also applied for this production as an opening attraction, which, when the contract is approved, will make seven new theaters throughout the country to present "The Woman God Forgot" as the initial offering.

SPLENDID BACKGROUND FOR ANN PENNINGTON.

Paramount Star Does Terpsichorean Feats in Striking Reproduction of Japanese Tea Room for "The Antics of Ann."

A RECORD in striking interior settings for motion pictures was established at the 56th Street studios, New York, where Ann Pennington's new Paramount productions, "The Antics of Ann," is being completed under direction of Edward Dillon for release during this month. It was the interior of a Japanese tearoom in a summer hotel, and in this picturesque and wonderfully simulated environment Miss Pennington did a dance, bordering on the Russian type, which will be one of the features of the picture.

As premiere danseuse of the Ziegfeld Follies, Miss Pennington has won laurels for her marvelous dance creations, but it is doubtful if she has ever done anything more original, beautiful or exotic than this, nor has she in all probability ever worn a costume so chic, daring and at the same time exquisitely attractive.

The setting, which was suggested by Director Dillon, designed by Richard Murphy, technical expert, assisted by Property Man William Riley and Jack Strickler, master carpenter, shows a long, ornately decorated room, with polished floor-space for dancing and on either side a raised platform with tables for diners, each provided with a golden hued lamp. At the rear, in a forest of palms and ferns an orchestra plays, while overhead are great Oriental lanterns depended from the ceiling.

"THE HUNGRY HEART" FOR NOVEMBER 5.

David Graham Phillips was one of the foremost American novelists, and at the same time the possessor of more than ordinary ability to search out the depths and shallows of human emotions. "The Hungry Heart," which was one of his most popular stories and which will be Pauline Frederick's next Paramount vehicle, is an example of his very best work, because it takes up and discusses frankly a problem that is met with frequently in the lives of those about us. This problem in brief is: "Can a man be true to his science and at the same time give to his wife the unadultered affection she necessarily craves?" Robert G. Vignola directed the piece with consummate skill.

Pauline Frederick, in the role of Courtney, is said to have outdone herself in portraying the depths of emotional moments with which the story abounds. Howard Hall is the husband and Eldean Stewart plays the child of the couple. Helen Lindroth has a character bit upon which much of the plot hinges.

"The Hungry Heart" is scheduled for release November 5 by Paramount.

UNIVERSAL ENGLISH BOY SCOUT PRODUCTION.

Universal has arranged with the Trans-Atlantic Film Company, Ltd., of London, to handle "Boy Scouts—Be Prepared," the big eight-reel production devoted to the work of the huge army of wide-awake English boys headed by Lieut.-General Sir Robert Baden-Powell who are accomplishing so much in the way of home defense and auxiliary service while their fathers and brothers are at the front.

Throughout the United Kingdom the production is being released in eight single-reel episodes, and is said to be creating considerable stir, as it is backed by the entire membership of the Boy Scouts Association. Every boy in this huge organization has been enlisted in the movement to put the series over with flying colors, and as a result, exhibitors are reporting record-breaking business. Baden-Powell and many other famous British military leaders appear personally in the various episodes.

Week's Work for Fox

What Was Done and Who Did It—Several Changes in Schedule.

THE little accident in William Fox's Eastern studios which gave dainty June Caprice a black eye (temporarily) and forced her into several days of idleness, has compelled another shift in the schedule of Fox releases for October.

Owing to the necessity which has now arisen for more time on "Miss U. S. A." Miss Caprice's new subject, William Fox has transposed the release dates of "Miss U. S. A." and "This Is The Life," George Walsh's play made under the direction of his brother, R. A. Walsh. In consequence of the change, "This Is The Life" will be issued on October 21 and "Miss U. S. A." on October 28, instead of vice-versa.

Virginia Pearson began work last week on another photo-drama in the Fort Lee, N. J., studios. Only the early scenes have been taken and the supporting company has not yet been selected. Carl Harbaugh, who screened "When False Tongues Speak," Miss Pearson's recent film, is again supervising the production. Miss Pearson's newest drama, "Thou Shall Not Steal," will be released for October 14. The cast is unusually large and includes besides the star, Eric Mayne, Mathilde Brundage, John Galsworthy, Robert Elliott, Martin Fuast, Lem F. Kennedy, Danny Sullivan, Dan Mason, Mrs. Patrick Foy, Victor De Linsky and William Burton.

Gladys Brockwell, William Fox's brilliant star in the West, is busy shopping in preparation for another production which will be filmed by Bertram Bracken, who directed "Conscience," Miss Brockwell's last picture. All the members of the company have not yet been selected but prominent parts will be played by such well known actors as Colin Chase, Edward Cecil and Willard Louis, who is particularly familiar to the William Fox picturegoers.

Vivian Rich is again with the William Fox forces in Hollywood, Cal. Miss Rich will appear in an important role in a feature production in the making. She has been in motion pictures for years and will be recalled for the appealing heroine which she made in "The Price of Silence," opposite William Farnum.

OLIVE TELL IN "THE UNFORESEEN."

Having finished filming "The Unforseen," the five-reel feature to be released October 22, and that will introduce Miss Olive Tell as a motion picture star, the Empire All-Star Corporation is now engaged in making a motion picture from the play of "Her Sister," which Ethel Barrymore starred in under Charles Frohman's management and which proved such a decided Broadway hit.

Miss Tell showed in "The Unforseen" that the beauty that so distinguishes her on the stage registers on the screen to such a remarkable degree, and her powers of dramatic expression lose nothing through being portrayed before the camera, that it was decided to hasten the release of her first picture by a whole month.

Miss Tell loves acting for moving pictures; she is thoroughly at home before the camera and although a perfect novice as regards picture experience knows just exactly what to do to gets various emotions "over."

In "Her Sister" she has a difficult dual role to enact, for part of the time she is just a sweet young American girl and part an Egyptian Seeress—quite a decided jump in characterization. However, it seems perfectly easy for Miss Tell and she looks wonderfully beautiful in "her daughter of the desert" garb.

BEBAN DESCRIBES HIS SCREEN IDEAL.

"It has been my one aim and desire, ever since I entered the motion picture field, to give the thinking public plays that are distinctly different, and to portray characters that are colorful, big, vital, and at the same time wholesome and clean," says George Beban.

"Of course I shall always have a sweet, tender love interest as a counterplot, but the main theme upon which the story hinges is based upon the big, human disinterested loves of everyday existence. For instance, in 'The Alien,' it was the love of old Pietro, the ditch-digger, for his little motherless child; and the people loved him because of his intense, soul-filled love for her. In 'The Bond Between' it was the love and sacrifice of the quaint old French piano teacher for his wayward son. In 'Pasquale,' the groceryman's devotion to his faithful old horse, 'Colombo'; in 'The Roadside Impressario,' the love of the mountebank for his performing bear; in 'His Sweetheart,' the love of the iceman for his old mother, and in 'Lost in Transit' the love of the ragpicker for a little waif.

"These are the types of stories I love and the public has convinced me by their support of my pictures that they believe as I do."

THREE MORE ADE FABLES FOR GENERAL.

The work of producing the new series of Essanay-George Ade Fables in Slang for release through General Film Company has reached a well advanced stage. In addition to the six subjects already announced, Essanay has completed three new subjects for current release. In the meantime these sprightly comedies, issued in two reels, continue to demonstrate their worth as box office attractions. The new subjects announced in the second half of the series are "The Fable of All That Triangle Stuff as Sized Up by the Meal Ticket," "The Fable of the Film Fed Family," and "The Fable of the Uplifter and His Dandy Little Opus."

Human Appeal in Current Essanays

Dominating Factors in Subjects Now Being Released on Perfection Program.

CURRENT Essanay productions released on the Perfection Pictures program through the George Kleine exchanges include comedy-dramas starring Taylor Holmes, Bryant Washburn, Virginia Valli, Helen Ferguson and Little Mary McAlister, and a new George Ade Fable. The comedy-dramas entitled "Fools for Luck," "The Fibbers," and "Young Mother Hubbard" contain the two predominating human appeals.

"The Fibbers," in which Mr. Washburn and Miss Valli play the leading roles, deals with the adventures of a young married couple, and is full of amusing situations. At the same time the picture carries a plot so strong that the interest of the spectator is held until the last foot of film.

Taylor Holmes and Helen Ferguson have made a wonderful screen success of Kennett Harris' story, "Talismans."

"Young Mother Hubbard" tugs at the heartstrings through its intensely dramatic interpretation of the plight of four little orphans abandoned by their step-father. Mary McAlister plays the role of little mother to the three other orphans. While the picture is of the type that brings tears it is by no means a gloomy one, and contains many a laugh timed just right to relieve the sadder phases of the story.

The Ade fable is of especial interest, for it deals with "movie fans" themselves. The picture, "The Fable of the Film Fed Faimly," unfolds the story of a family too proud to visit the movies. They spent all their money on high priced theaters. Then, one by one, they began to sneak to the pictures. They meet each other in the theater, and finally admit that they were wrong in ever condeming the screen as beneath them.

THE HUNDREDTH BLUEBIRD ANNOUNCED.

The hundredth Bluebird has been set for release. Its title is "The Savage," and Ruth Clifford will be the star. While its regular distribution date is set for Nov. 19, it will have a week of pre-showings, commencing Oct. 21, at the Broadway theater, New York, to start the Bluebird season at that theater. In addition to producing, as per schedule, one hundred features for the program, "The Eagle's Wings," "Hell Morgan's Girl," and "Mother O' Mine" have been created and circulated independent of the regular issues, as state rights productions by Bluebird's acting and distributing forces, since "Jeanne Dore" was released, on Jan. 24, 1916, as the initial Bluebird.

NEW "DAUGHTER OF DARING" STUNTS.

Helen Gibson, feminine desciple of deeds of daring, is to return to General Film in a new series of her one-reel successes known as "A Daughtr of Daring." The Kalem Company, which produces the new series in which she is featured, has announced five subjects for release in November and December.

Since the close of the last series of "A Daughter of Daring" the clamor from public and exhibitors has caused Kalem to amplify the series. The first of these subjects to be released will be "A Race to the Drawbridge," which will be ready November 7. Others to follow under consecutive weekly release dates are "The Munitions Plot," "The Detective's Danger," "The Railroad Smuggler," and "The Deserted Engine."

POWER MACHINES IN CAMPS.

The Nicholas Power Company have made a number of very important installations recently, the most notable of which are the following: Camp Meade, Baltimore, Md., 10 machines; National Y. M. C. A., Petersburg, Va., 11 machines; U. S. Internment Station, Hot Springs, Ark.; Camp Mills, Hempstead, L. I.; Fort Riley, Kans., 4 machines; U. S. S. "Bridge," Brooklyn Navy Yard; Camp Whitman, New York; Fort Sill, Okla.; Camp Upton, Yaphank, L. I.; Prisoner of War Camp, Fort Douglass, Utah; Pumpkin Island, Boston, Mass.

Two 6B machines, equipped with incandescent lamp and lamphouse, were installed at the Globe theater, Richmond, Va., and project a picture at an 80-ft. throw.

DETECTIVE MYSTERY IN FALCON SUBJECT.

Action of the thrilling sort is found in "The Clean Gun," the current Falcon release. It is a mystery story which fastens its grip on the spectator from the opening and does not release him until the last flash has been run off. Kathleen Kirkham is seen to excellent advantage in this four-reel drama, where her work as Matie is unusually good. She is supported by a strong company, in which Stanley J. Preston, Charles Edler, and Louise Sothern are found.

"Feet of Clay," another strong mystery story, will be the next Falcon release. Margaret Landis and R. Henry Grey are featured.

FOX AFTER INFRINGERS.

On the ground that William Fox's rights to the title, "The Honor System" have been infringed in advertising another picture in the Victor theater at Richmond, Va., the State Court, sitting at Richmond, has granted the Fox Film Corporation a temporary injunction restraining the use of such advertising.

It was alleged on behalf of the Fox interests that W. F. Hassell, in giving publicity to a film, "A Convict's Honor," had subordinated the real title and so emphasized the honor system idea as to mislead the public into the belief that the famous Standard picture, "The Honor System," really was being shown.

Triangle Features Completed

Variety of Subjects for Advance Schedule Keeps Large Directorial Staff Busy.

WITH seven directors working on new pictures, four waiting for or preparing stories, over one hundred performers cast and others being added to the playing forces as the need arises, the first week in October threatened to break all production records at the Triangle Film Corporation's Culver City studio, where H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager, is directing the general policy of production and expansion.

Four pictures, "The Firefly of Tough Luck," "The Stainless Barrier," "Doing Her Bit," and "Fighting Back," were shipped and five pictures are completed and ready for final editing. These are "The Fuel of Life," featuring Belle Bennett; "Easy Money," with Charles Gunn and Laura Sears; "Medicine Man," with Roy Stewart; "Regenerates," featuring Alma Ruebens and Walt Whitman, and "Indiscreet, Corinne," a new Olive Thomas.

Director Thomas N. Heffron will soon complete his latest picture, "Gentility," the vehicle in which William Desmond will next be starred before Triangle patrons. This is a winsome story of an Irish lad who rises from village blacksmith in Old Erin to the head of a mansion and rich estate in Chicago, through the death of his uncle. He is also appointed guardian of a minor child, and the way this child puts him through his paces, knocking off the rough edges in passing, is said to be highly amusing. Desmond, a true Irishman, is well cast in this picture.

Thus far Director William Gittens has experienced many unexpected difficulties with the tide and storms in his sea picture, whose working title is "The Everlasting Mercy," but has succeeded in obtaining some remarkable water stuff in the harbor district of San Diego. The Triangle three-masted barkentine, "Fremont," is being used, and last week a realistic thrill was given the whole company when "The Fremont" caught fire during a scene where real flames were not intended. Only heroic work by the crew saved this veteran of the motion picture industry from destruction.

The script called for an explosion and a ship burning at sea, so five tanks filled with film and several torches were used to secure the fire effect. The work was done at night to add to its effectiveness. The burning film shot tongues of flame fifty feet into the air and the effect was a decided success, but the woodwork of "The Fremont" caught fire and the crew of the barkentine had a sharp fight to save the craft. A tug rushed reinforcements from the shore in time to give material help to the hard-pressed crew.

In 1912 "The Fremont" began its career as a moving picture actor, and since that time has been a black-birder, pirate ship, and yacht; has been scuttled, burned at sea, blown up by submarines and shipwrecked on cannibal islands—all for the sake of movie art. It is estimated that in the five years it has been the property of film interests more than one hundred stirring dramas of the sea have been woven around the historic "Fremont."

Director Raymond Wells is making good progress on his latest story, "Fanatics," in which J. Barney Sherry, popular character actor of the Triangle force, is being featured. Olga Grey, who recently joined the Triangle playing force, is also cast in this picture, playing a modern adventuress. The setting used as the adventuress' apartments is one of the richest ever erected on a Triangle stage, including wonderful antiques and teak-wood masterpieces from the Orient.

"Up or Down?", Director Lynn F. Reynolds' latest masterpiece, featuring George Hernandez, will offer something new in the way of Western drama. Reynolds and Hernandez have just returned from Santa Barbara, where many shots of rare scenic beauty were obtained. While in the north, the director took advantage of the vast cattle range near Santa Barbara to get some unusual Western stuff. The story of "Up or Down?" concerns an ex-convict in the process of evolution, assisted by the kindness of an author without an idea. How "Dollar Mike" finally furnishes the "big idea" and aids the author to win the woman of his choice gives a surprising turn to the plot, which is said to have an especial appeal for students of psychology.

Using thirty stock players and more than a hundred people in the open scene, Director G. P. Hamilton, newest addition to the Triangle directing force, has begun work on "The Maternal Spark." Among those cast are Irene Hunt, Josie Sedgwick and Rowland Lee. It is a story of how too much vanity almost ruined a bright young country lawyer who was taken up by an influential financier, and how the maternal spark in the breast of a woman who was not all bad saved his matrimonial barque from shipwreck.

Director Cliff Smith and Roy Stewart, Triangle Western star, together with forty punchers, have just returned from the O'Neil ranch near Oceanside, California, the largest cattle ranch in the southwest. Sixty-three thousand head of stock bear the O'Neil brand, and these, together with the O'Neil ranch cowboys, were voluntary actors in the opening scenes of Stewart's new picture, "The Learnin' of Jim Benton."

Belle Benton, Triangle star, who last appeared as a vampire in Director Walter Edwards' new picture, "The Fuel of Life," has been cast for the leading role in Director Jack Conway's new picture, "Because of the Woman." Conway has already begun work on this feature.

The directors who are waiting for or preparing stories include Walter Edwards, Ferris Hartman, Jack Dillon and E. Mason Hopper.

PLOT OF "WHO IS 'NUMBER ONE'?".

That the continued photoplay is far from being on a decline is proved by the fact that Paramount Pictures Corporation is going in for serials and soon is to release "Who is 'Number One'?" a mystery story, a new kind of serial. Anna Katharine Green, greatest of mystery writers, is the author of the novel.

Kathleen Clifford, famed as a vaudeville and musical comedy star is the heroine around whom evolve the throbs and thrills of "Who Is 'Number One'?"

"Who Is 'Number One'?" has as its theme the famous quotation, "Hell has no fury like a woman scorned." It is a story of revenge, of a mysterious person who is the instrument by which the woman seeks to make a famous inventor and capitalist pay for his scorn.

Scene from "Who Is 'Number One?'" (Paramount).

In the heart of Camille Arnot, "the woman scorned," burns a terrible hatred for Graham Hale, a mental giant, a Thomas A. Edison and J. Pierpont Morgan combined. She does not seek to kill him, she wants a greater revenge. She desires that Graham Hale shall be ruined, that one by one the big things in his life shall be taken from him, and lastly, after his most beloved possession, his son, is gone, that his mind shall be utterly destroyed.

In the midst of all this intrigue, herself a victim, is Aimee Villon, portrayed by charming Kathleen Clifford. Tommy Hale, son of the financier, is in love with her and she loves him. She fights to save the Hales from the impending danger that threatens annihilation. It is she that risks everything for the man she loves.

Throughout the stroy is felt the power of the mysterious "Number One," who strikes hard, and who, the Hales know, must be destroyed unless they themselves are crushed. The thrilling tale is built upon a charming story of love unconquerable, a love devoid of selfishness, a love tested and found true in the flame of self-sacrifice.

KELLERMANN LOOKING FOR "SEA STUFF."

Having completed the Bar Harbor portion of the new subsea picture which Miss Annette Kellermann is making for William Fox's "Queen of the Sea," the company is now finishing up the studio scenes preparatory to making the deep sea portions of the film.

In order to find water of the proper temperature in which Miss Kellermann and her mermaids and sirens of the sea can work, it will be necessary for those scenes to be done either in Florida or in California.

Director John G. Adolfi is undecided whether to go to California or Florida. Should he decide upon California "Queen of the Sea" will have been made on both the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts, the introductory part of the picture having been made at Bar Harbor on the Atlantic. Even though he goes to Florida the range of the picture will have been from Maine to the southernmost bit of continental United States.

In the making of the undersea portions of the picture Mr. Adolfi will have the assistance of the officials of the United States Fish Commission which is vitally interested in the success of the apparatus which has been designed for the photographing of scenes under water.

ESSANAY TO ISSUE SINGLE SLAPSTICKS.

Essanay has completed the first of a new series of one-reel slapstick comedies featuring A. Rastrelli, noted French film comedian, on leave of absence from the trenches. Rastrelli is widely known in France, having been on the speaking stage there for years both in drama and comedy. He had a part in the first two-reel picture produced by George Melies, a pioneer in the film industry abroad.

Rastrelli's first offering, "Hard Luck John," is a fifteen-minute scream. A most interesting series of "rough stuff" one-reelers is promised.

Alma Ruebens in New Triangle Drama

"Cassidy," Featuring Dick Rosson in Larry Evans' "Post" Story, Also Released This Week.

THE Triangle program for October 21st will carry two big features, which should prove to be good drawing cards, ie a western play featuring Alma Ruebens with Charles Gunn, and the other an adaptation of one of Larry Evans' Saturday Post stories with Dick Rosson in the title role.

How a dainty sprite of a cabaret singer is forced by her ne'er-do-well husband to go out to a western mining camp to fill an engagement, gives the opening scenes of "The Firefly of Tough Luck" an unusual touch of human interest which is sustained throughout the ensuing action. Leaving a private train which carried him westward with a party of joy-larking companions, Danny Ward (Charles Gunn) stumbles upon the Firefly (Alma Ruebens) in the desert near Baxter City, a boom town long past the heyday of its glory, and claiming the faith of only one citizen, its founder, an eccentric character, portrayed by Walt Whitman. The old man's hopes are given a sudden impetus by the discovery of pay ore nearby, and, with the location of a missing vein, he and his companion become the nucleus of a revived settlement. Just as Danny's love ripens into a proposal of marriage, the worthless husband appears; but by his own self-interest the man is disposed of in a way which makes the final fade-away a satisfactory conclusion to the plot.

In the second release of the week, "Cassidy," an unusual study of derelict types is made. The youth Cassidy arrives in San Francisco hungry and broke, a sorry picture of discouragement. Realizing that his health is gone, he attempts to rob the house of the district attorney in order to make his way back home to New York. He is caught, and by an unexpected turn in events, is permitted to save the attorney's daughter from gangsters in return for a freedom which soon liberates his spirit to the "girl back home." Frank Currier, Pauline Curley and Mac Alexander are members of the supporting cast.

The double life of the city editor of a newspaper by day who assumes the role of "Swami Swobodi," crystal gazer, by night, to fool his wife and the public, is the entertaining plot of "A Hindu Hoodoo," the two-reel Keystone Comedy of the week, in which George Binns, Maude Wayne and Dale Fuller lead the merrymaking.

"His Busy Day" and "A Modern Sherlock" will also be released October 21st as one-reel Triangle Komedies on the regular program.

GRACE CUNARD IN "SOCIETY'S DRIFTWOOD."

In "Society's Driftwood" Grace Cunard has been provided with her most telling Butterfly vehicle. The story, by Harvey Gates, is genuinely dramatic in theme, and has been developed with logic and sincerity. It relates the life struggles of a sister and brother, whose whole future is darkened by the shadow of a crime of which neither is guilty. Lena Rogers and her brother Paul, physically frail lad, are operating an amusement tent in connection with country fairs during the summer. Some of the visitors to the grounds are the victims of pickpockets, and a man whose advances Lena has repulsed, hides one of the stolen purpses among her effects. In order to save his sister from the humiliation of arrest, Paul takes the blame of the theft upon himself. The judge before whom the case is tried heartlessly sentences the boy to the penitentiary, despite the pleas of Lena, who knows that the confinement will probably cause her brother's death. Lena resolves to bring the cruel magistrate to a keener sense of responsibility to the unfortunates whom he sends away so nonchalantly to death and dishonor. The manner in which she achieves this aim forms the vivid moments in a plot that moves sometimes breathlessly and always interestingly to a satisfying climax.

"THIS IS THE LIFE" (Fox).

Seven to one are the odds against the woman in the case of "This Is the Life," the William Fox Special Feature to be released October 21. Wanda Petit, however, is sufficiently in the foreground of action easily to offset masculinity's generous numerical handicap. George Walsh is the star, the picture involving the type of stirring drama in which he revels.

Scene from "This Is the Life" (Fox).

Supporting him, besides Miss Petit, are James A. Marcus, Ralph Lewis, John Eherts, Jack McDonald, W. H. Tyno and Victor Sarno. Authorship is credited jointly to Ralph Spence and R. A. Walsh, the latter, of course, being the director.

The title of the play is said to express exactly its spirit and action, being the thought always uppermost in the mind of the care-free, happy-go-lucky, dare-devil hero who becomes involved in all sorts of trouble, including principally a South American revolution, which he mistakes for a moving picture setting. As a result he wins the love of just the girl who is capable of inducing him to settle down, which condition, as one might expect, turns thumbs down on this-is-the-life sort of living.

STAGE "SCRAP" IN JACK PICKFORD PICTURE.

Vernon Arena, near the city of Los Angeles, is historic in sporting circles; once it was famous in the annals of the squared circle. Memories of the palmy days of the boxing game in the West will be revived by the prize-fight scene in "Jack and Jill," a forthcoming Paramount picture, starring Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, which takes place in this once popular home of the fistic fraternity.

The bout shown in the picture is between Jack Pickford and a Los Angeles lightweight, who acted as trainer for the young player prior to the taking of the picture.

Jack Pickford puts up a nifty bout in the picture, which includes also a charming love story. Louise Huff, of course, appears as his sweetheart. The story is by Margaret Turnbull, prepared for the screen by Gardner Hunting, and the production was directed by William D. Taylor.

The many Paramount pictures in which the two youthful stars have appeared have endeared them to the screen patrons. Their latest co-starring vehicle was "The Ghost House," released October 1. "Jack and Jill" will be seen in November.

"HER SECOND HUSBAND" (Mutual).

American metropolitan life, the pitfalls it holds for the young wife in society, and the follies of social custom as observed in certain metropolitan circles, are very pointedly and effectively dealt with in a new Mutual photodrama, "Her Second Husband," in which Miss Edna Goodrich is starred.

The new play was written by Hamilton Smith, who also wrote "The Vampire" and "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel." It is based on actual happenings that have cropped up in connection with the social upheaval created by the amassing of enormous fortunes in "war brides," as a result of which great numbers of hitherto unknown names began to appear in the social register and exclusive doors were thrown open to men and women who never in their wildest dreams had expected to enter them on any social mission.

Miss Goodrich believes "Her Second Husband" to be a play of great power, and one that must needs exert a salutary influence on American life.

"THE ADVENTURER" READY FOR RELEASE.

"The Adventurer," next of the series of Mutual-Chaplin specials, is ready for release on October 22. The first print of the two-reel comedy was received at the Mutual executive offices early last week and the original screening proved that it was fully up to expectations. It has been pronounced by the studios as the masterpiece of Mutual's comedian.

UNIVERSAL SCORES WITH WORLD SERIES.

An unusually full and effective record of the opening games of the world series baseball championship played in Chicago is the outstanding feature of the 93d issue of the Universal Animated Weekly. Some twenty-eight scenes are shown, including a large percentage of the crucial plays. Felsch's fatal homer, which put the first game on ice for the White Sox; George Burns, singling twice as the lead-off man for the Giants; and Lew McCarthy's injury at the plate in the second contest, when he attempted to block off Liebold, are but a few of the exciting moments pictured. A number of effective studies of the crowds, both outside and inside Comiskey park, have been caught by the alert cameraman, who has also secured close-ups of Cicotte, Sallee, Jackson and other stars in action.

The Universal is said to have been the only concern to secure so large a number of striking pictures of the great American sporting classic. This was due to the untiring patience of Cameraman Rucker, who trailed Garry Herrmann, Chairman of the National Baseball Commission, for nearly twenty hours until Herrmann finally granted him permission to shoot the games in order to get rid of him. On Saturday evening, less than three hours after the completion of the first game, the pictures were being shown in the leading theaters of Chicago.

An equally complete series of scenes of the games staged at the Polo Grounds in New York have been taken, and will be released as one of the features of the 22nd issue of Current Events, to be released Saturday, October 13th.

"THE MATE OF THE SALLY ANN" (American).

There's a title for you. Mary Miles Minter, who is taking an active hand nowadays in reading plays and deciding on approprite titles, is so engrossed in her new play, "The Mate of the Sally Ann," that she is developing a decidedly nautical roll to her graceful walk and a sea tang to her personality. She likes the part of "Sally" because she can wear nice sea-going togs and have a good jolly time filming the play. Henry Albert Phillips wrote the play and Elizabeth Mahoney adapted it for the screen.

Alan Forrest, that good looking young chap who is adored by the screen fans, will again appear in the leading masculine role. He has played the lead in three or four of the Minter productions, notably "Charity Castle," "Her County's Call" and "Peggy Leads the Way," recently completed and released late in October.

George Periolat, as Captain Ward, the gruff, forbidding old grandfather of little Sally, promises to give another one of his wonderful impersonations, such as we saw in "Periwinkle," "Melissa of the Hills" and "Her Country's Call."

Mr. Phillips has supplied Miss Minter with a wonderfully suitable vehicle, with many clever and novel surprises.

The scene of the story is laid in the stranded hulk of an old ship in which Sally, with her grandfather, lives. To humor his fancies, she figures as mate and crew of "The Sally Ann," the name he gives the old hulk.

Jack Connolly and Adele Farrington have been given good roles in this forthcoming play.

CAVALIERI FINISHES PARAMOUNT PICTURE.

Lina Cavalieri, prima donna, and now a star of Paramount productions, has finished the portion of "The Eternal Temptress," in which she appears, and has departed from the studio at Fort Lee. Director Emile Chautard is completing the other scenes which make up the photodrama, principally street scenes in Venice and the poorer quarters of Rome.

Lina Cavalieri, with the animation which is an accompaniment of her Latin temperament, will, it is said, create a veritable sensation in her first Paramount picture.

EDNA GOODRICH IN "A DAUGHTER OF MARYLAND."

Miss Edna Goodrich, who is admitted to be the typical American girl of the American stage, has never had a better opportunity to demonstrate her right to the title in versatility of characterization, than is offered here in a new Mutual production, "A Daughter of Maryland," to be released October 29.

In this charming little drama Miss Goodrich is a patriotic southern girl, surrounded by all the passion and chivalry of the south—a part that admirably suits her rather southern type of beauty.

The locale of the piece and its action, afford Miss Goodrich the opportunity to wear some particularly stunning gowns, as well as to illustrate anew her subtle grasp of the quaint little turns and twists of southern girl character—one minute the gentle smiling beauty of the ball room, surrounded by beseeching beaux, the next a woman, defending her beliefs and birthright with all a woman's determination and finality.

"A Daughter of Maryland" was written by Samuel Morse and scenarioized by Anthony Kelly, author of "The Great Divide," "The Walls of Jericho" and other famous productions. It is one of the happiest characterizations in which Miss Goodrich has so far appeared pictorially.

REALISM IN THIRD "SUB-DEB" ADAPTATION.

Maxine Elliott's theater on Thirty-ninth street, New York, became for one afternoon recently a Paramount studio, when Marguerite Clark enacted some of the playhouse scenes in "Bab's Matinee Idol," third of the "Sub-Deb" stories from Mary Roberts Rinehart's series of highly amusing tales. Also some three hundred "extras," constituting an audience of first-nighters, saw Miss Clark act in a theater which was not, for the moment, a theater but a studio; and while she acted it was not for the audience but for the camera—or rather for future screen audiences.

Never a first-night performance in reality has seemed more brilliant than this one, with the women in evening gowns of latest mode, then in full-dress attire, the ushers, water carriers, everything belonging to the actuality but in every instance merely a makebelieve.

Director J. Searle Dawley left nothing out, even to the programs, the smallest details familiar to every theatergoer. Miss Clark sat demurely in the left stage box and looked her daintiest.

"PRINCESS VIRTUE" (Bluebird).

Mae Murray, directed by Robert Z. Leonard, is introduced as a Bluebird star with the release of "Princess Virtue" on November 12. Louise Winter's magazine story was used by Fred Myton in preparing the scenario from which Mr. Leonard produced what is declared to be the most artistic and sumptuously mounted offering Bluebird has ever presented on its program. As the scenes reflect life in Parisian society, the necessity for elaborate settings and fine raiment required heavy expenditures in framing Miss Murray's introduction to the Bluebird series.

The supporting cast has Wheeler Oakman as leading man with Paul Nicholson playing an equally important role. Lule Warrenton, Gretchen Lederer, Clarissa Selwynne, Jean Hersholt and Harry von Meter are others in the cast. An unusually large company of supernumeraries were employed in filming the scenes in Parisian salons, and their customers, together with Miss Murray's own creations, as well as the dresses of the principal ladies, promise a veritable "fashion show" that exhibitors will do well to especially feature in their announcements.

Miss Murray's established popularity as a star in other programs is depended upon to draw new friends and patrons "Bluebird Day" to theaters throughout the country. Robert Z. Leonard, her director, has established an excellent reputation as an artistic producer, and now comes back to Bluebird after a protracted absence. In the early issues he directed Ella Hall as a featured Bluebirder and also acted as her leading man in several subjects.

New T. & D. Plant

Turner and Dahnken Circuit Erects Its Own Film Building on Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco.

TURNER and Dahnken Circuit, of San Francisco, has just located in its own new T. & D. Building, 134-146 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco. This structure is 70x137 feet, a Class A reinforced concrete building. The decorations in the front of the building are of the Grecian Spartan type. The entire building is occupied by the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, no sub-leases being made or will be made at any time.

Many innovations have been provided for the convenience of the exhibitors. There will be lockers where they may check their film or packages, telephones have been installed for their use, an office will be placed at their disposal, and the Turner & Dahnken Circuit invite the exhibitors to make this their meeting place and headquarters without any obligation whatsoever to them.

The executive offices, under the direction of J. T. Turner, Fred Dahnken and E. B. Johnson, are located on the first floor of the new building. The Film Exchange is under the management of E. M. Asher and will handle all productions of the First National Exhibitors Circuit and such other productions which have the stamp of quality. A. B. Crawford will be in charge of the Supply Department, which will carry everything necessary for moving picture theaters.

The Turner and Dahnken Circuit are members of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, and control their productions in northern California, Arizona and the Hawaiian Islands. This concern is interested in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for New York state, and Ralph Clark is now on his way to open offices in New York city.

The houses controlled by this circuit are as follows: Tivoli Opera House, San Francisco; New T. & D. theater, Oakland; T. & D. theater, Berkeley; T. & D. theater, Richmond; T. & D. theater, San Jose; T. &. D. theater, Sacramento; T. & D. theatre, Stockton; T. &. D. theater, Hanford, and T. & D. theater, Watsonville.

"THE SEA MASTER" (American).

They say that William Russell, athletic star of the American Film Company, took Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the company, off on one side one day out in Santa Barbara, to tell him that he considered "The Sea Master" the best story he had done in a long time, because it had so many good punches in it.

That was just Bill's point of view. Not but what there are plenty of punches it it from the time when "Bull Dorgan," the sea-master of the "Southern Cross," a tramp steamer bound on a long cruise, rescues Emily Gordon (Francelia Billington) and Rev. Hugh (George Fischer) from the Black Dog Cabaret.

It seems Emily, a nice little shop girl, had gone there to see a dying friend of her childhood. Joe, the proprietor, sort of likes her looks and thought she ought to stay and join the staff. Emily fussed about it and Bull, always ready for a fight, carried her off to his ship, where Hugh married them—but they didn't live happy ever after.

Not by a long shot!

Emily couldn't seem to forgive Bull for marrying her out of hand, as it were. And she didn't like to spend Christmas in the tropics, either.

It was not until the baby, born on the ship, falls sick and good old Bull stops punishing the mutinying sailors long enough to risk his life to bring a doctor on board, that Emily forgives him and concludes that a sailor's life is the life for her.

I'll tell you. The "Sea Master" is the kind of story that makes you glad you went in to see it. It sends you out with a good salt sea tingle in your blood and the knowledge that you have seen a good man put up some good fights.

Sheehan Boosts Fox Business

General Manager Gets Big Results From a Trip Through the Middle West.

AS a result of a flying trip through the Middle West, Winfield R. Sheehan, the live wire general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, there has been a big increase in the demand in that section for the Fox pictures. Mr. Sheehan knew his field. He knew what he had to offer. He knew he had the greatest box office pullers today in the motion picture world. But he wanted the exhibitors and exchange managers to know what he knew. And he knew that the only way to reach them was in a personal talk.

Under General Manager Sheehan's direction, practically every large city in the country has been personally visited by a Fox publicity representative in the interests of Standard pictures and the Fox Special Features.

Mr. Sheehan not only has direct charge of the enormous United States business of the Fox Film Corporation, but directs its business in Great Britain, Australia, South America, Russia, China, and Japan, and other foreign countries, where Fox exchanges and agents are located. From the London office of the Fox Film Corporation the troops in France enjoy Fox pictures. They are sent overnight twice weekly to the various cantonments and to the trenches.

MARGARITA FISCHER'S NEW PLAY, "A DAUGHTER OF JOAN."

Margarita Fischer, now a star of the American Film Company, to appear in five-reel features, will have three new players in her forthcoming feature, "A Daughter of Joan," written by Beatrice Vander Pluym and William Parker and adapted for the screen by Chester B. Clapp. Jack Mower will play the lead opposite Miss Fischer, and L. C. Shumway and Hal Clements will have important roles.

Mr. Mower was Miss Fischer's leading man in previous productions, and as Lieutenant Adair will have a part particularly fitted to give him an opportunity for good work. As he has had experience in the army, we may look for a good interpretation here. Mr. Shumway, as Lieutenant Wilbur, will play his first role in an American Film Company production, while Hal Clements, as Major Kerwood, will prove the wisdom of Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the company, in selecting only the best of talent for his new features.

As Jackie Kerwood, Miss Fischer will give to her admirers an excellent characterization of the energetic daughter of Major Kerwood, commanding officer at Fort Wayne. Jackie wants to be a boy so she can shoulder a rifle and fight for her country, but the scenario gives her an opportunity to aid her country more materially because she is a girl and knows how to employ her clever brains in tracing out a spy.

The story is unusually strong and Miss Fischer's friends may be sure that it measures up to her standard of corking good plays.

TIMELY NOVELTIES IN LATEST SCREEN MAGAZINE.

A most unusual feature is presented in Universal Screen Magazine No. 44, to be released November 9th. It depicts a new method of teaching the violin, evolved by Dr. Mitchell, of the New York University summer school. Revolutionary as it may seem at first, Dr. Mitchell demonstrates before the camera that by his new system dozens of pupils can be instructed in a class at the same time. The instructor uses his own specially constructed violin for teaching the students, with dummy bow, non-slipping pegs, shoulder rest, etc. After the proper way of handling the violin and bow is mastered, exercises are taught from a big fingerboard chart and the demonstration of what pupils have played after only four weeks of practise is truly astonishing.

How many picture fans know that a diamond, perfectly cut has 57 sides? This fact and many other interesting ones are revealed in the picturization of the art of transforming those tiny pebbles of the hardest known substance into the costliest of gems. Just what the young raw recruit may expect during the early days as a member of the National Army is shown in the preparedness topic, "Making an Infantryman." Sir Douglas Haig says that decisive battles are won with bayonets nowadays, and the Screen Magazine demonstrates that Uncle Sam is acting on his service. The Nature Study section provides photographs of a number of the more interesting varieties of fish, and Willie Hopkins closes the program with some of his laughable Miracles in Mud, his subject being "Exemption Please."

P. P. A. MEETING NEXT WEEK.

Last week was no time for meetings anywhere within fifty miles of New York. The fact that the Polo Grounds were to stage the feature film spectacle of the year, as produced by the Giant-White Sox Motion Picture Enterprises, Inc., and that Friday last was furthermore a legal holiday, was overlooked by William L. Sherrill, president of the Producers' Protective Association, when he called the meeting for October 12.

The receipt of his own ticket for last Wednesday and Thursday's games and the reminders sent out by his office staff that Friday was Columbus Day soon made Sherrill conclude that the meeting had better be postponed until next week, whereupon the various members were notified accordingly instanter.

"CUTE KIDS AND KIDNAPPING" (L-Ko.).

General Director J. G. Blystone is concentrating his inventive faculties upon L-Ko "slap-sticks" that are intended to depart, materially, from the usual run of "rough-house" comedy. He is depending more and more on tricks and trick-photography to get results while the players are directing their efforts to heightening the illusions.

"Cute Kids and Kidnappers" will mark a considerable advance in Archie Mayo's means to fun-making ends. Gladys Varden will be the featured comedienne, with Eddie Barry and Charles Larkin hustling each other to capture the rough comedy honors among her associates. To forestall any doubts among exhibitors, President Stern, of L-Ko, declares that this number carries his personal assurance of excellence in comedy results, in maintaining L-Ko standards.

ARMY CANTONMENTS IN HEARST-PATHE NEWS.

"See Your Boy in the Army." Under this slogan the Hearst-Pathe News announces its plan to show motion pictures of all National Guard and National Army cantonments.

There are more than two million homes throughout the United States that have some relative, husband, son, or brother, in the military service. As the new contingents of the National Army are called from their homes this number will constantly increase. These pictures are, therefore, not only of special interest to the people affected but have a direct appeal to the hundred million people throughout the United States, the greater part of whom will be directly affected if the war should continue any great length of time.

According to the plan of the Hearst-Pathe News, every motion picture theater that is a subscriber to this film will be enabled to show its patrons pictures of the various cantonment camps to which the boys from their locality have been sent, the conditions under which they are living, and the training which they are undergoing.

With the co-operation of the Committee on Public Information the work of gathering this film was undertaken several weeks ago and cameramen were dispatched to every cantonment camp in the country. This work is now practically completed and the films will be released in the regular editions of the Hearst-Pathe News, each exchange receiving prints that will contain pictures of only the cantonment camps in which the theaters they serve would be interested. This will give the New York theaters an opportunity of showing pictures of the New York boys at Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, S. C., while Cleveland and Cincinnati theaters will show the pictures of the boys at Camp Sheridan, Montgomery, Ala.

All pictures of the National Guard cantonments will be shown in the Hearst-Pathe News No. 84 and 86, while the pictures of the National Army cantonments will be shown in Nos. 91 and 93.

HERBERT BRENON'S ACTIVITIES.

Within the next twelve months Herbert Brenon plans to make five productions, maintaining in each the high standard which has always characterized Brenon productions. Two big subjects have already been secured, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," the novel by Hall Caine, and "Kismet," with Otis Skinner. Mr. Skinner will begin his work in "Kismet" next summer. The securing of these are considered as two of the biggest deals of the season. Otis Skinner, it is further announced, has consented to appear in one production only, so from all accounts in "Kismet" this great actor will make his first and last appearance. With these two subjects to begin with, it leaves three more yet to be chosen.

At the present time "Empty Pockets" is progressing at full sway at the studio, judging from the amount of work that has been accomplished since Mr. Brenon's return from Atlantic City early last week. It will not be long before Mr. Brenon's second venture into the realms of melodrama will be produced.

A Trio of Great Funmakers

To Appear on the Pathe Program During the Week of October 21.

IN "Lonesome Luke From London to Laramie," a two-reel comedy to be released on Oct. 21; "Rainbow Island," a one-reel Rolin, on Oct. 28, and "Lonesome Luke in Love, Laughs and Lather," a two-reel comedy for Nov. 4, Pathe offers to exhibitors the well-known and well-liked comedians, Harold Lloyd, "Snub" Pollard and Bebe Daniels, in three comedies that, it is said, are sure to please every exhibitor and tickle his public. Harold Lloyd has been growing steadily in popularity ever since the first "Luke" comedy was put out nearly two years ago and Director General Hal Roach of the Rolin Company is now generally recognized as being one of the best comedy directors the business has yet produced.

"Lonesome Luke From London to Laramie" shows Lloyd as the valet to an English Lord, played by "Snub" Pollard. The pair arrive in the untamed West and become very suddenly initiated into the ways of sundry barbarous cowboys, of bucking bronchos and primitive ways of living. The comedy will take its place among the very best of the rough and tumble playlets that Mr. Roach knows so well how to produce.

"Rainbow Island" takes the fun makers to the South Sea Islands where they run foul of various and sundry brown-skinned natives in deshabille. They escape the perils of the meat pot only to fall foul of husband-seeking females of peculiar unattractiveness. Their efforts to escape this new and hardly less-to-be-feared danger are bound to produce many laughs.

"Lonesome Luke in Love, Laughs and Lather" shows our hero in the new and comical role of a barber. Every man, unless he cuts his own hair and shaves himself, will find this burlesque on a business with which he is in almost daily contact, laughable in the extreme. Harold Lloyd shines as the dandified barber who is less a slave to his profession than he is to the beauty of womankind.

CHARLES RAY IN VIRILE ROLE.

When Charles Ray makes his screen appearance October 22 in "The Son of His Father" it will be his debut under Paramount auspices. The player has, it is said, outdone himself in this new picture, which affords him material for red-blooded, virile action, a portrayal of a typical young American.

None of the weak traits of character such as were frequently given Mr. Ray to interpret in previous productions are embodied in this role, which is one of the most congenial in which he has ever appeared.

The story is by Ridgwell Cullum, directed by Victor Schertzinger, and has as its leading features a tremendous fistic encounter in which Ray proves his prowess as a boxer; numerous sensational scenes and a plot that is original and full of splendid screen material. Viola Vale supports Mr. Ray, and is the only woman in the cast.

"SINS OF AMBITION" (Ivan).

Ivan Film Productions, Inc., announces the early release of Ivan Abramson's "Sins of Ambition" and it is declared to meet fully the great expectations of the Company. The play written and directed by Mr. Abramson is the first of the so much heralded new problem plays that Mr. Abramson proposes to produce during the coming year. While it vigorously treats of the problem in question the situations are said to be held in such tense dramatic grasp that an exceptional fine cast was necessary to act as a proper vehicle for the author-director's ideas. Among the players are Wilfred Lucas, Leah Baird, Barbara Castleton, Anders Randolph and James Morrison.

Scene from "Sins of Ambition" (Ivan).

"THE AEROPLANE MACHINE GUN" (Bray).

No part of the great war is so spectacular as that which goes on high above the clouds. The aeroplane of today is vastly different from the one that took the air in the first day of Germany's invasion of Belgium. The ability, however, of the air-fighter to put it over his opponent is due to the present type of machine gun as much as the plane and his daring. It is this gun and the wonderful fighting machine of the allied armies, the plane that has given them the mastery of the air, that is depicted in animated diagramatical drawings by J. F. Leventhal of The Bray Studios, whose master hand has given to Paramount audiences a first-hand knowledge of how the mechanical marvels of the war operate. This subject "The Aeroplane Machine Gun," will be a part of the 90th release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, the "magazine-on-the-screen."

Aeroplane Machine Gun (Bray).

Another exciting subject, "Humpback Whaling in the Pacific," taken on the outer fringe of the Antarctic, together with a graphic description of how to beat the butcher by means of meat substitutes, called "A Meatless Meat Loaf" and made in conjunction with the N. Y. State Food Supply Commission, round out a most interesting release.

LOMBARD ADDRESSES THE I. P. A.

A. P. Lombard of the Precision Machine Company addressed the International Projection Association last Friday and selected as his subjects "The Operator As I Have Found Him" and "The Simplex Mechanism—Its Care and Up-Keep." Mr. Lombard was ably assisted by Al Kindlebann, foreman of the Assembling Department of the Precision Machine Company.

A mechanism was taken apart to show the members of the association just how easy adjustments could be made, and when the intermittent oil box was removed and its parts shown the boys remarked "No wonder they call it Simplex, it's so simple."

One of the Type "S" Simplex lamps and lamphouses was also on exhibition and caused favorable comment upon its extraordinary size.

Picture Theaters Projected

MONTGOMERY, ALA.—Pekin Amusement Company plans to erect a moving picture theater here.

Liberty Loan Films Quickly Distributed

Massachusetts Branch of Motion Picture War Service Bureau Shows Efficiency by Smooth Distributing of New Bond Selling Films.

By Richard Davis Howe, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—Through the voluntary co-operation of local film exchanges the distribution of New England of the five different pictures boosting the Liberty Loan was carried out with speed and efficiency and without a hitch. Because of the lack of prints it was found necessary to confine the pictures to the larger towns and cities and arrange to have the smaller places exhibit lantern slides, which were sent to them direct from the New England Committee of the Liberty Loan Campaign.

The following exchanges in Boston worked together in distributing the films, which were sent to more than two hundred towns and cities in New England: The Paramount, Metro, Fox, Universal, Pathe, Select, Triangle, Goldwyn and Vitagraph, V-L-S-E. Each exchange volunteered the services of their booker to aid in the work of distribution. Details for distribution were completed at a meeting of the various bookers and Manager Harry Asher of the local Paramount office, who is in charge of the distribution.

Louis B. Mayer, who is director of the Massachusetts branch of the Motion Picture War Service, has general supervision of all work being performed by the exhibitors and is ably assisted by Mrs. Alice Rice Carroll, a prominent Massachusetts exhibitor and lecturer.

Pratt Circuit Takes New Stoneham House.

Stoneham, Mass.—Stoneham's new moving picture theater, built at a great cost for Joseph Deffarari, one of this city's most prominent merchants, has been leased by Ralph Pratt, owner of the Premier theater in Newburyport, Mass., Ioka theater and the opera house in Exeter, N. H.

General Manager Eberhard of the Pratt circuit will have supervision over the new house in this place and has contracted for the Goldwyn service through Manager Harry F. Campbell of the Boston exchange of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

Herman Ribkin Handling New Ivan Film.

Boston, Mass.—"Married in Name Only," the latest Ivan production, is being exploited in New England territory by Herman Rifkin, president and general manager of the Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston. He has the New England rights for this production and predicts that it will go strong.

Frederick Summers Takes Olympia Theater.

Farmington, N. H.—Bert Avery, who recently took over the control of the Olympia theater, a moving picture house, has sold his rights to Frederick C. Summers. The theater was formerly controlled by Walter Young, who has joined the National Army at Camp Devens in Ayer.

Manager Shapiro Ready to Move.

Boston, Mass.—With a few minor details to be completed Manager William D. Shapiro of the Fox Film is ready to occupy the company's new headquarters at No. 45 Piedmont street, in the heart of Boston's film exchange district.

The main office is located in the center of the first floor and covers one-third of the large floor space of the main building. Manager Shapiro has a large, airy office leading from the main entrance. Adjoining the manager is the office of Thomas Jennings, the Fox booker. Then come the bookkeeper's offices and the stenographers. The main offices are exceedingly well planned for convenience and the systematic handling of business with speed and accuracy. All the rooms are sunny, well ventilated and well lighted. The shipping room is so located that the Fox automobile can drive right into the room, be loaded, and off to its destination without any delays.

Several fireproof vaults are located on the second floor and a dumb waiter connects this department with the shipping room.

The re-wind room is on the second floor and is a large airy room giving the score or more girls excellent conditions under which to perform their work.

One of the main attractions of the new exchange is the exhibition room, a classy little theater in which two score exhibitors can see the run-offs with every degree of comfort.

The advertising department is in the basement where huge quantities of the Fox advertising paper is handled.

Letters of Commendation to Exhibitors.

Boston, Mass.—Every Massachusetts exhibitor who exhibited slides advertising the "Liberty Fund" campaign, which was conducted recently, or gave permission for "four-minute" men to speak in their theaters, or allowed sailors to solicit money in the lobbies of their houses, were the recipient of a letter of acknowledgement and thanks from the committee in charge of the campaign.

In the letter the Committee praised them for their patriotic spirit and the great good which they did in making the campaign a complete success. They also enclosed a written statement of the amount of money collected in the various theaters and lobbies.

Strand Film Company Opens Office.

Boston, Mass.—Another addition to the ranks of state rights distributors in New England is that of Edward L. McEvoy, organizer and general manager of the Strand Film Company, of No. 23 Piedmont street, this city. The Strand company is now in the field for the best big features in the market. Already Manager McEvoy has contracted for the King Bee comedies, which he expects to make a lot of money with in this territory.

Mr. McEvoy has attached to his staff Frank H. Wotten, formerly a motion picture exhibitor in Waltham, Gardner, Natick, Cambridge and other cities, and George H. Grant, a prominent business man of Ellsworth, Me., who though without a great deal of experience in the picture industry is possessed of unusual executive ability.

Manager McEvoy has secured the services of two well-known film salesmen, Joseph Benoit and Joseph Dumas. With this staff Mr. McEvoy is equipped to exploit any feature picture promptly in all parts of New England.

War Films at Keith's Make Hit.

Boston, Mass.—Excellent notices were given by the various leading Boston newspapers to the first showing in the Keith's theaters in this city of the British official war pictures known as "The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras."

The Keith interests have booked the entire set of pictures for their two Boston houses—Keith's vaudeville theater and the Boston theater, the largest motion picture and vaudeville house in New England.

Reopens Sanbornville Show.

Sanbornville, Maine.—The Town Hall, the leading moving picture house of this territory, has been reopened by A. N. Sanborn. Mr. Sanborn was recently drafted into the National Army and closed his house when he saw the duty of serving his country before him. The district board later ordered his exemption because he has a wife and three children.

Notes from New England.

Clinton, Mass.—A whole half of the front page of the Clinton Item was used by the Star theater in its advertising of "The Birth of a Nation."

Boston, Mass.—Many of the leading publications in New England are carrying advertisements of the first Paramount serial, "Who is Number One," which is to be released October 29.

Robert Clark Takes Charge at K-E-S-E.

Boston, Mass.—Robert Clark, well known in New England film circles, has been appointed manager of the Boston office of K-E-S-E, relieving B. N. Moran, when R. D. Marson, one of New England's veteran film men, left George Kleine to establish a state's rights concern of his own. Mr. Moran has returned to the Texas office, where he will once more take charge of affairs there.

Mr. Clark is a welcome addition to the Kleine forces and should prove a most successful manager, as he is very well acquainted in this territory and knows the film game well.

Exchange Man Answers Call.

Boston, Mass.—Edward Kleine, one of Boston's independent distributors and head of the Central Film Feature Film Company, located on Church street, has been called to the colors in Uncle Sam's draft army and reported with the "second forty" to Camp Devens at Ayer, Mass., last week. He has closed up his business until the war is over. Last reports were that he was enjoying the new life.

Philadelphia Film Business Does Its Part

Meeting at Office of Chairman S. V. Mastbaum Completes Plan for the Distribution of the New Liberty Loan Appeal Films.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—A meeting was held on Tuesday morning, Oct. 9th, in the office of the Stanley Company, 1214 Market street, to complete plans for the distribution of a picture made to boost the second Liberty Loan. The production consists of five distinct episodes, each 500 feet in length. Among the many celebrities are the President appearing in the picture together with more than forty stars of the stage and screen. Local distribution of the picture is in the hands of the committee, of which Stanley V. Mastbaum, managing director of the Stanley Company, is the chairman, and Harry W. Schwalbe, of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is secretary. The following are members: John Clark (Paramount Artcraft); George Ames (Goldwyn), Joseph Hebrew (Vitagraph), Robert Lynch (Metro), Max Milder (Select), James Flynn (Peerless), W. R. Priest (World), George Dembo (Fox); W. S. Seymour (Triangle), William Sachsenmeyer (Universal), H. O. Osborne (Pathe) and A. L. Einstein of the Stanley company.

This committee has arranged for distribution through their various exchanges, and in order to avoid any possible confusion, each episode has been assigned exclusively to two of the ten companies, as follows: The first episode will be handled by Universal and Vitagraph, the second by the Metro and Paramount, the third by Fox and Goldwyn, the fourth by Pathe and Triangle and the fifth by the World and Select. Exhibitors are earnestly requested to facilitate the handling of these pictures to the greatest possible extent, and it is particularly called to their attention that the pictures are distributed to them absolutely without any cost to themselves.

Charles Segal Now Sole Owner of the Apollo.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Charles Segal terminated an existing partnership on Saturday, Sept. 1, and became the sole owner of the Apollo theater, at 52d and Thompson streets, by buying out his two partners. Mr. Segal is a pioneer in the picture business, and has, since the early days of the business, paved the way for many theaters to a successful career. The Apollo, which was his latest enterprise, had the reputation of a "white elephant" three years ago, when he first took hold, and it was his personal perseverance and attention that brought about its success. Today the Apollo stands high among the leading theaters of this city and is a fair example of the results of following the Stanley system methods. Alterations, decorations and improvements are now being made here to the extent of $5,000, which will include a ladies' retiring room and a gentlemen's smoking room. New carpet is being laid through the house and rich velvet curtains hung. The front part of the building is of glazed terra cotta, which will be treated by a process to bring back its original color and luster. The theater has a seating capacity of 1,200 and furnishes excellent musical accompaniments for its big productions with a Kimball organ.

Shows and Features of Recent Date.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Following is a list of the important film attractions which were shown here during the week of October 8.

At the Stanley Maxine Elliott made her screen debut in this city in "Fighting Odds," the Goldwyn feature. The Paramount's first Mack Sennett comedy release was roundly applauded.

At the Victoria D. W. Griffiths' "Intolerance," the much-heralded feature, opened a week's engagement. The attendance at times was overwhelming and some difficulty was experienced in handling the crowds.

There seems to be as many grown-up children in Philadelphia as there are children of more tender years who came to see "Jack and the Beanstalk," which commenced its second week at the Arcadia. The attendance was so great that the house was taxed to its capacity of both varieties.

The Regent's first attraction of the week was "Rasputin, the Black Monk." Olga Petrova in "Silence Sellers" and Vivian Martin in "The Trouble Buster" followed.

The Strand, where many important first-run pictures are to be seen, had a novelty in the presentation of "Bab's Diary," picturized from the story by Mrs. Rinehart, with Marguerite Clark as Bab, and Julian Eltinge in one of his famous female impersonations, in "Countess Charming."

The Palace, as the first of its two feature plays of the week, offered "When a Man Sees Red," with William Farnum, and a new film production entitled "Parentage."

The Alhambra presented the new Mary Pickford photoplay "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."

Patrons of the Great Northern for two days enjoyed "Polly of the Circus," with Mae Marsh, with Ethel Barrymore in "The Lifted Veil," and Douglas Fairbanks in the "Lamb," which followed.

Pauline Frederick was seen for the first time in West Philadelphia at the Locust in "Double-Crossed," with Mme. Petrova in "Exile." The Belmont had Anita King, in "Girl Angel," followed by "Sands of Sacrifice" and "A Rich Man's Plaything" for two days each. The Leader started with George M. Cohan in "Seven Keys to Baldpate."

The Family is now showing six first run productions each week. Al Boyd, who has permitted Joseph Murphy to go in for this new policy believes in doing things in a new way. At present several hundred complimentary tickets are being distributed for the purpose of encouraging the feminine theatergoers to patronize this house.

W. D. Neilds Steers Tioga Theater.

Philadelphia, Pa.—W. D. Neilds, manager of the Tioga theater, which comes into possession of William Boogar about the first of February, has had a long and notable career. His experiences have been varied, manager of theatrical enterprises, advance press agent and treasurer. His connections have been with Mr. Reese and Ed. Mozart of New York and many others. Mr. Neilds was also manager of the Coliseum in West Philadelphia for C. Stamper, before coming to the Tioga, where his popularity has become widespread.

Superior to Get State Rights Films?

Philadelphia, Pa.—C. H. Goodwin, secretary of the Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia, went to New York last week. It is rumored that he intends to secure some remarkable state right productions to release through the Superior Film exchange, which he has recently opened.

Some Good Ideas to Boost War Film.

Philadelphia, Pa.—H. A. Sullivan, manager of the Belmont, one of the theaters belonging to Fred Nirdlinger circuit, is preparing a novel and attractive display to be used in conjunction with the presentation of "In the Wake of the Huns," to be shown here during the week of October 22. The scheme involves several original ideas. Upon the sidewalk in front of the theatre, a war-time trench will be built of sand bags, and soldiers of the various allied nations will be in them. Also four sentinels, in the uniforms of an American-British, French and Russian soldier will pace up and down in front of the theater. Upon the opposite side of the street a search light will be placed upon the roof of a building and operated by a capable man. Occasionally the lights in front of the house are to be extinguished so that the full effect of the searchlight playing on each of the sentinels may be observed. The front of the building will also be profusely decorated with flags and bunting.

F. W. Buhler Decides on New Uniforms.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The new uniforms supplied by General Manager F. W. Buhler are now being worn by the girl ushers and cashiers of the Victoria, Ruby and Savoy theaters. Each one has been specially tailored to fit the individual. They are also decidedly distinctive in character and give the wearer a sort of military bearing. The jacket is close fitting and is trimmed with velvet collar and cuffs being edged with gold and white braid, which gives it a very striking effect. The skirt is plain tailored, having graceful lines. No caps are worn by the girls, which enhances the dainty effect given by their carefully arranged coiffure.

A. G. Buck Leaves Perfection for Select.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A. G. Buck resigned as manager of the Perfection exchange after making new records for increases in business during the past summer months. Mr. Buck was exceedingly popular among the trade and the local exhibitors, who responded quite freely with their bookings. He leaves with the greatest respect and best wishes from his former employees, who wish him future success. Mr. Buck goes to the Select exchange on Monday to assume his new duties.

Bert M. Moran, who arrived here recently from the Boston branch, will be his successor. He has had considerable experience in this branch of the business, having represented Geo. Kleine in many cities throughout the United States and Canada.

Hippodrome Has Splendid Openings.

Allentown, Pa.—George Bennethum opened the doors of his Hippodrome theater here for the first time Saturday, October 6. Tremendous crowds were in attendance to witness Pauline Frederick in "The Love That Lives" on the opening night. The theater presented a most inspiring sight to the local theatergoes with its rich and beautiful decorations and up-to-date appointments.

Another Allentown Theater Soon.

Allentown, Pa.—Dr. Stuckert, a dentist, is expected to open the Strand theater soon for its initial performance. This house will have about 800 seats and is reported to be strictly up-to-date.

George Meeker to Engineer New Idea.

Philadelphia, Pa.—George Meeker, formerly manager of the World Film local exchange, has been given a highly important position by Stanley V. Mastbaum with the Stanley corporation. He will shortly engineer a very promising co-operation plant whereby the local exhibitors will be helped to better their conditions in their respective neighborhoods.

Theater Notes from Western Pennsylvania.

York, Pa.—J. Barry, of the Jackson theater, has spent about $15,000 in practically rebuilding this theater. An orchestra will furnish the music when completed for the features to be shown here. The seating capacity is estimated to be about 1,000.

York, Pa.—The Wizard theater has been subjected to a considerable amount of alterations and many improvements. When completed Mr. Dickman proposes to install an orchestra to furnish the music for his feature presentations.

MORE ONTARIO JOTTINGS.

Strand's "New and Steadfast Policy."

Toronto, Ont.—Manager Clarence Robson, of the Strand theater, Toronto, has come out with a big announcement regarding the "new and steadfast policy" of his theater. He has decided to book features on the open market and programmes will be entirely changed every Monday and Thursday. Prices will never be changed, he declares. The evening scale is 10c, 15c and 25c, while for matinees the prices will be 10c and 15c. The 1917-1918 season for the Strand officially started on Monday, October 1, with "The Law of the Land," featuring Olga Petrova. The attraction during the second half of the opening week was Fox's "Some Boy," with George Walsh. Manager Robson has adopted "Three Days Each Production" as his programme slogan, while he calls his theater "The House of Big Stars."

Big Shows in London (Ont.) Theaters.

London, Ont.—Manager Minhinnick, of the Grand theater, London, Ontario, has spoken with reference to the future policy of his theater. He has booked nothing but multiple-reel subjects, particularly state right features, for the coming season. He will present some vaudeville with each big feature to fill out the programmes. Some of the attractions which he has booked include "Beware of Strangers," "Redemption," "The Public be Damned," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "The Honor System," "The Conquerer" and others.

The Patricia theater, London, is giving double feature matiness. Starting Monday, September 24, two features are being presented every afternoon while the regular feature attraction only is shown at night.

For some timé the Majestic theater, London, has given two five-reel features each matinee, changing them three times each week.

Business Notes and Personals.

Toronto.—Both the Strand and Loew's Yonge Street theater, Toronto, have booked the Alice Howell Comedies. Loew's theater has also signd for the Harvey Lloyd Comedies, Pathe made.

Toronto.—The General Film Company donated four reels of pictures for use at the special children's benefit matinee performance at the Temple theater, Hamilton, Ontario, which was staged recently by Manager Wall for the St. Hilda's Chapter of the Daughters of the Empire. About $200 was realized from the show for comforts for Canadian soldiers overseas. More such matinees are promised.

Hamilton, Ont.—During the course of a recent entertainment for returned soldiers at Edgemount, the Hamilton Health Association was presented with a projection machine by the Lucky Patriotic Euchre Club. Manager Stroud, of the Savoy theater, Hamilton, loaned a five-reel feature for the occasion and a show was given for the crippled warriors.

Toronto.—Benny Rogers, Ontario branch manager for the Fox, has secured the third week in December at the Grand Opera House, Toronto, for the first run of "Jack and the Bean Stalk" in Canada. This feature will be put on as a road show throughout Ontario.

Toronto.—Manager William Sturgess, of the Imperial theater, a Universal booster, has made a number of nice improvements in both the interior and exterior of his house. One of the new fixtures is a big electric sign of startling design and effect.

Atlanta, Ga.—It was quite apparent from the capacity crowds at the Forsyth theater this past week that the wild west film has lost none of its appeal, and that Douglas Fairbanks still retains his great host of admirers in Atlanta.

"Redemption," featuring Evelyn Thaw and son, is playing this week to capacity at the Criterion theater.

North Carolina Exhibitors Are Not Asleep

President Wells and Secretary Varner Are on the Watch to Combat Any Ill-Digested Film Laws that May Be Proposed.

By D. M. Bain, Wilmington, N. C.

WILMINGTON, N. C.—With the forthcoming sessions of the North Carolina Legislature less than sixty days off, President Percy W. Wells, of the North Carolina Exhibitors' Association, is bending every effort to mobilize the forces of the association and be in readiness to combat all efforts to put over harmful legislation which threatened at the last session, but which was forestalled through prompt action of the league. The state organization employs a representative regularly to stay in Raleigh during the sessions of the Legislature, a shrewd observer who keeps President Wells and Secretary Varner posted of any threatening clouds.

State censorship for North Carolina seems hardly possible, as there has been very little agitation along this line from any section of the state and the lawmakers are content to let the matter rest in oblivion until such a time as there is a strang and insistent demand for it. Several localities, among them the city of Greensboro, already have local censor boards, but no trouble has ever been experienced with them. Representative L. Clayton Grant, from this county, is one of the most sincere friends the motion picture industry has ever had in a law-making body and his missionary work alone has resulted in warding off several dangerous movements in the past.

The fluke bill passed by the last session which was intended to exempt theaters from taxation by the counties, but which in reality left it to the discretion of the several counties, will probably be corrected early in the present session. The error occurred in engrossing the bill for the signature of the governor, the exemption clause having been omitted.

Picture Theater Becomes Vaudeville House.

Raleigh, N. C.—E. D. Hines, of Roanoke, Va., has taken over the handsome Strand theater, built a year and a half ago for the Aronson & Browne Amusement enterprises, and will convert it into a vaudeville theater. The Strand, one of the handsomest theaters in the South built for pictures, has never been successful and this is the third deal in which it has figures since its first opening. Its location on a side street away from the center of business has kept it from being the success that it would otherwise have been, and the less commodious houses situated on the main thoroughfare get the business while the Strand barely exists. Mr. Hines will open with Keith vaudeville on October 22.

Mr. Hines, who apparently has aspirations towards becoming a theatrical magnate, has also closed a deal by which he takes over the Trenton theater in Lynchburg, Va., at an early date. This theater also will be changed from pictures to vaudeville. He has signed contracts with the Charlotte Pathe exchange, through George V. Atchison, for Hearst-Pathe News which he will feature at all his theaters in connection with his vaudeville bills.

Tar Heel Exhibitors Will Do Their Part.

Lexington, N. C.—"Hooveritis" is reported as the latest malady affecting Hon. Henry B. Varner, and the North Carolina state chairman of the United States Food Administration is busy these days lining up the Tar Heel exhibitors to do their part in food conservation. The southern exhibitors as a whole are patriotic to a marked degree since the war has entered the United States and Mr. Varner states that he has yet to meet the first exhibitor in the state who is not anxious to do everything the Government asks of him in helping to conserve the world's food supply.

G. F. Daniels Will Manage House at Durham.

Durham, N. C.—George F. Daniels, formerly manager of the Piedmont theater at Greensboro and recently a road man with the Washington K-E-S-E exchange, becomes manager of the new Orpheum theater here the latter part of the month.

Manager Barron Pays a Visit.

Greensboro, N. C.—Traveling in a late model benzine buggy of liberal proportions, Manager C. H. Barron of the Washington Paramount-Artcraft exchange paid this city a visit last week, being one of the stops on a tour which Mr. Barron is making over his territory, combining both business and pleasure. Mr. Barron states that his road men in this territory, Messrs. Busch and Randall, are now working on the Paramount serial exclusively, the regular feature service having been placed in practically every town of five thousand population or over in the territory covered by the Washington exchange.

New Mayoden House Wholly Concrete.

Mayoden, N. C.—The New Pickwick, Mayoden's modern theater, is nearly completed and Manager Tullock expects to open about the middle of November with exclusive features. The Pickwick is one of the most modern theaters in a small town in the South and is quite a novelty in theater construction, being built entirely of concrete with reinforced concrete girders and beams. The old Pickwick, formerly conducted by Mr. Tullock, will be closed upon the opening of the new house.

C. E. Wagner Buys Grotto Theater.

Burlington, N. C.—C. E. Wagner, owner of the Palmetto theater, Chester, S. C., has purchased the Grotto theater here and has already assumed its management. Mr. Wagner is becoming largely interested in theater properties throughout the Piedmont sections of North and South Carolina and expects to obtain control of a chain of eight or ten theaters within the near future, according to a statement.

Broadway Theater at High Point Sold.

High Point, N. C.—A. B. Huff, formerly manager of the Isis theater at Greensboro, has taken over by purchase from J. Lee Stone the Broadway theater here.

George Does a Lot of Things.

Charlotte, N. C.—"Let George Do It" in the local Pathe exchange means George V. Atchison, one of the hustling young men who market Pathe productions from that office. George has recently had produced a series of blotters which he is mailing to the managers in his territory, the reading matter on the blotters starting off with the declaration "If there were better pictures made I would handle 'em, (signed) George, Pathe, Charlotte." That George has the courage of his convicions is proven by the fact that he recently booked three serials in one theatre—each for a two-day run—making a solid Pathe week in that theater. With "Diamond Dick" Anderson in command of the Pathe baliwick and "Let George Do It" Atkison and C. E. Livezy (pronounced "live easy") on the road, this office furnishes fat pickings for the punsters.

Ruling on Theaters in Training Camps

War Department Issues Order on Amusement Companies in and Near the Cantonments—Control of and Income from Concessions.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—No concessions to private enterprizes are to be granted within the mobilizatilon camps, according to an order just issued by the War Department, which states that "In view of the provisions that have been made and of the additional facilities planned for the amusement and recreation of troops in division camps and cantonments, the following instructions are published for the information and guidance of all concerned:

"1. No concessions to private enterprises will be granted within the camp proper, but camp commanders will make such arrangements as local conditions may warrant for the location of private amusement enterprises in the vicinity of camps (on Government property, if possible) and for exercising such control over them as may be necessary.

"2. The co-operation of local citizen organizations that have been formed under the direction of the Commission on Training Camp Activities in the vicinity of every camp will be at the service of camp commanders in the supervision and control of amusement enterprises.

"3. Camp commanders will not hesitate to close undesirable amusement places located on Government property or to prevent by use of the provost guard or otherwise the attendance of soldiers at such amusement places located on private property.

"4. Concession privileges should be sold on a cash or percentage basis and the receipts therefrom devoted, under the direction of camp commanders, to the various institutions having to do with the welfare of the soldiers both within and without camps.

"5. In view of the varied conditions existing in the different camps special and unusual local situations with respect to amusements may be taken up with the War Department for special action."

Select Pictures Takes Office Space.

Washington, D. C.—The Select Pictures, the organization recently formed to take over the Selznick interests, has secured a location in the quarters formerly occupied by the V-L-S-E exchange at 811 E street, Northwest. The lower floor has been repainted and redecorated and fitted out with heavy quartered oak office furniture.

In Manager Vivian Whitaker's office, back of the main office, the buff colored walls form a fine background for the framed pictures of the stars appearing in the releases handled by the corporation. The front office is railed off from the space serving as the reception room. The third floor of the building is used as the film and poster and delivery departments.

Mr. Whitaker now has his office going in good shape and is well pleased with the way bookings are being obtained throughout the territory. W. A. Ballenger is covering Virginia, and O. R. Brown, of the firm of Aronson & Brown, operating a motion picture theater in Raleigh, will look after the interests of the company in North Carolina. A third man is soon to be put on for Maryland.

Charles Moss Gets "Maciste" Rights.

Washington, D. C.—Charles Moss, who has been covering Virginia for Pathe's Washington exchange, has resigned his position to become a magnate on a small scale. He has bought state rights for Virginia on "Marvelous Maciste" and will add others if the opportunity presents itself.

Mr. Moss is one of the best known traveling men in this section. He had been with Pathe for three years, a part of which time he was stationed in Charlotte. He broke into the game a number of years ago as owner and manager of the Lyric theater in Petersburg, Va., later going to Cincinnati, O., where he opened an independent exchange. Upon coming to Washington he joined Warner's Features, this being his last place before going with Pathe.

Time to Renew Capital City Licenses.

Washington, D. C.—Wade H. Coombs, superintendent of licenses for the District of Columbia, has just issued a notice informing the owners and operators of motion picture and other theaters in Washington that all theater licenses for this year will expire on October 31. All persons desiring to continue in the motion picture and theater business must promptly renew their licenses.

Theaters Paid $87,625 Tax in August.

Washington, D. C.—Motion picture and other theaters, museums and concert halls paid into the treasury of the United States during the month of August, according to figures just compiled by the Internal Revenue Bureau, the sum of $87,625.45, as a result of the imposition of war taxes based on the seating capacity of the houses. This is $32,554.17 greater than the receipts for the same month of 1916, totaling $55,071.28.

Guy Brandt Made a Corporal.

Washington, D. C.—Congratulations are being sent forth from filmland of Washington to Guy Brandt, late assistant manager of the local K-E-S-E exchange, now a member of the New National Army. Although in Uncle Sam's service but about two weeks, Private Brandt has become Corporal Brandt, with every chance of further promotion even to the extent of shoulder straps.

Toronto News Letter.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St. East, Toronto.

Operator Knew What He Should Do.

TORONTO, ONT.—An unnamed projection machine operator at the Crown theater, Toronto, is something of a hero. He did his duty and used his head when fire broke out in the booth of the theater at 591 Gerrard street East, on the afternoon of the Canadian Thanksgiving Day, Monday, October 8.

When the film burst into flame the operator quit his cabinet, the door of which he closed, proceeded to the stage and announced to the crowd that his machine had broken down and could not be fixed until the evening performance. He asked the people to be good enough to leave the theater at once. The house, which was built only one year ago, seats 900, and was almost filled at the time.

A new feature was obtained for the evening performances, which were held without a hitch.

Moving Picture World requested the name of the thoughtful operator, but the latter did not wish it to appear in print. Fire Department officials complimented the man for his coolness and promptness of action.

Order Regarding Comments on Pictures.

Toronto, Ont.—The Canadian Government, through Colonel Ernest J. Chambers, chief press censor for Canada, has advised all newspapers not to publish quoted comments about moving picture releases from newspapers of the United States whose circulation in Canada has been barred. The comments by the newspapers in question have formed part of the advertising matter sent out by one prominent film company. It is not desired to have the name of any prohibited newspaper appear in any publication in the Dominion.

New State Rights Exchange Formed.

Toronto, Ont.—An exchange to be known as Griffin Pictures and heated by Peter Griffin, the Canadian theater veteran, has been organized with headquarters in Toronto to handle a number of state right attractions and other pictures. The company has secured the Canadian rights for Herbert Brenon's "The Lone Wolf" and also "Salambo" and "Vera, the Medium."

Canadian Universal Doings.

Toronto, Ont.—Maurice Fleckles, of Jewell Productions, Inc., conferred with General Manager Clair Hague of the Canadian Universal, at Toronto, during the week of October 1, after which it was announced that the state right features department of the Canadian Universal would handle Jewel Productions throughout the Dominion.

Lloyd Evans, a popular member af the office staff at the Canadian Universal's headquarters here, has joined the Canadian Colors for war service.

A. W. Perry, an advertising man of Toronto, has joined the advertising department of the Canadian Universal.

Record Business With "Fighting Odds."

Toronto, Ont.—The Regent theater, Toronto, did record business with the third Goldwyn release, "Fighting Odds," on Monday, October 8. The box office sold no less than 4,500 admission tickets on the one date, which means that the house was filled to capacity three times during the day. This was the biggest day at the Regent since the showing of "The Battle of the Somme," one year before, when practically the same record for a day's business was established. The top admission price for the orchestra floor at the Regent is 35 cents.

New Pictorial Weekly Company.

Toronto, Ont.—Announcement has been made regarding the organization of "Commercial Films, Limited," with headquarters at 102 King street West, Toronto. The general manager is F. St. Austell. The company will produce the "All Canada Weekly," a news pictorial covering current events in the Dominion and other pictures.

New Policy for Regent at Ottawa.

Ottawa, Ont.—The Regent theater, Oatawa, has outlined its policy for the coming season. The Regent has signed for Goldwyn and also "The Slacker," "Womanhood," "Mother o' Mine," "Twin Beds" and others. The Regent orchestra consists of seven pieces under Director Rudolph Pelisek. Coming soloists include Willis Flanagan, of Boston; Mlle. Rubanni, Mme. Choiseul and Harold Jarvis, of Detroit. Prices for the season will be 10 and 15 cents for matinees and 15, 20 and 25 cents for evening performances.

Wanted, Some Queer German Dog.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.—As an advertisement for the Mutual serial, "The Girl and the Game," Manager Leo Crume of the Princess theater, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, offered a reward of $250 for a brindle dachshund "5 feet long and 7 inches high." The impossible canine also had other unusual characteristics and Manager Crume offered in addition one reserved seat ticket for the whole series for every foot of dog returned to him. He warned the public, however, to make haste in looking for the pup, as it was liable to shrink. "He shrinks from water, so catch him before it rains or he'll shrink a couple of tickets on you," was the amusing announcement by Crume. "His distinguishing mark is that two back teeth are missing. Let him bite you and then examine the marks. No questions asked. I will be up all night waiting."

Short Interesting Jottings.

Toronto, Ont.—The first release of Wharton's "The Great White Trail," was to the Hippodrome, Toronto, during the week of October 8. The Canadian and Alaskan rights to this feature were secured by John C. Green, the veteran exhibitor of Galt, Ont., but the Canadian distribution is being handled by Regal Films, Limited.

Toronto, Ont.—A recent visitor at Toronto exchanges was Mrs. Moore, who is the proprietoress of Moore's theater, Grimsby, Ont.

Toronto, Ont.—Manager W. F. Sexton of the Family theater, Toronto, one of the oldest exhibitors in Toronto, has been spending a late summer vacation at Monteith House, Muskoka, for a needed rest.

Toronto, Ont.—Manager Barrett of the Greater Vitagraph branch at Toronto, announced on October 9 that no less than thirty-three Toronto theaters had booked the latest Vitagraph serial, "The Fighting Trail." Twelve theaters on Queen street alone had signed contracts for the series.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compete with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

H. Marsey Out of Rialto Theater Company.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Harry Marsey has disposed of his interests in the new Rialto moving picture theater, formerly the Family, Buffalo, to a New York theatrical syndicate. The managers of the house are Samuel Caver of Boston and John R. Stevens of Buffalo.

Metro Employes Are Bond Buyers.

Buffalo, N. Y.—All members of the Metro Film, Buffalo, have purchased Liberty Loan bonds. An effort is being made to interest every film man in Buffalo in Liberty Bonds. Throughout the city they are buying freely.

Metro Exchange Notes.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Metro Film Co. is enlarging its quarters. It will occupy the entire second floor of the Palace theater. The new offices will be fitted up into a beautiful modern exchange, elaborately furnished and equipped.

Ben Fitzer has been appointed salesman for the Metro to cover the Syracuse territory.

"Draft 258," the successor to "the Slacker," is booking heavy. The new feature is arousing patriotism by its appeal to the drafted men.

Universal Office Jottings.

Buffalo, N. Y.—G. H. Christoffers of the Universal, Buffalo, was in New York last week. Mr. Christoffers visited the Universal offices and also his family, who live in New York City.

Frank J. Leonard, road man for the Universal, is signing exhibitors up for the Animated Weekly. Mr. Leonard covers the territory east to Rochester and part of Pennsylvania. He reports that the bookings are heavy and in great demand.

Clarence Ross and Frank Schulman, members of the Universal, are now at Camp Dix, although Mr. Ross has just been married.

Buffalo Theaters Boost 'Smokes Funa"

Manager Franklin Co-operates with Buffalo Paper and Puts on a Special Tobacco Fund Show—Other Theaters Help the Cause.

By Joseph McGuire, 152 North Glenwood Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Another example of the practical patriotism of the moving picture theaters during war time has been brought to the attention of Buffalonians. Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, is among those who realize that American soldiers must have "smokes," and plenty of them. He therefore arranged a stage tableau illustrating the need of tobacco by soldiers. In this work he co-operated with the Buffalo Evening News, which is taking subscriptions for a "soldiers' tobacco fund." At several performance at the Hippodrome collections were taken up to add to the fund.

The special attraction was well advertised and drew capacity houses. Douglas Fairbanks in "The Man from Painted Post" was the film feature. Mr. Fairbanks wired personally his congratulations to Mr. Franklin and The News on their "splendid tobacco campaign." The Hippodrome orchestra furnished appropriate music.

Patriotism Marks Theater's Premier.

The Broadway, formerly Sattler's theater, at 512-516 Broadway, opened under new management Friday evening. The new owners decided that patriotism should mark the launching of the enterprise and agreed to offer their entire proceeds for the opening day to the "smoke fund." The plan was a marked success. There was a musical program of patriotic airs. One of the features of the program was Gail Kane in "Souls in Pawn."

Jewel Films Distributed by Bluebird.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Buffalo luebird office has taken over the distribution of the Jewel productions for New York State.

Mr. and Mrs. J. L. White of Galeton, Pa., visited the Victor Film offices last week. Mr. White is planning a hunting trip for F. M. Zimmerman and G. H. Christoffers of the Victor.

The Gordon theater of Rochester is offering three acts of vaudeville, five reels of features and a comedy. J. J. Raymond, manager, is enthusiastic over the new policy and he reports a liberal increase in patronage. Recently Manager Raymond introduced a great drawing novelty in the presentation of "Mother of Mine," the new five-reel bluebird specialty. While the production was being shown a quartet rendered a number of selections in harmony with the features of the play.

Carroll Theater at Rome Changes Hands.

Rome, N. Y.—Charles P. Gilmore of Oswego has taken over the lease of the Carroll theater of Rome, N. Y. His policy will be to feature vaudeville in connection with the regular pictures.

Harry Dixon Takes Over Globe Theater.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Harry Dixon, manager of the Sun moving picture theater, Buffalo, recently took over the Globe, Buffalo. "Put down in your note book," said Manager Dixon, "that we show the best pictures at the Globe, have a three-piece orchestra and have tripled our business."

Warn of Possible Express Delays.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The volume of general traffic now being tendered to the express companies is so great that the managers of the local offices have received instructions to inform shippers that moving picture films going to or from or within the territory east of the Mississippi will be receipted subject to delay on account of congestion.

Shippers of film have been requested to get their express shipments ready as early in the day as possible. All packages that can be sent by motor trucks should not be sent by express until the congestion is relieved, it is said. On account of the large volume of business for the Government and the number of freight and baggage cars being used in the troop movement, the express companies announce that they have much of the loads that would ordinarily be shipped by freight. In order to relieve the situation exchange managers and others have been requested to co-operate with the express companies as much as possible at this time.

J. H. Stoffel Praised as Showman.

Buffalo, N. Y.—"The livest wire in the community" is the name applied by local road men to Joseph H. Stoffel, manager of the Family theater, Albion, N. Y. His picture appears herewith. In a town of less than 5,000 inhabitants, including many prosperous retired farmers and other wealthy men, Mr. Stoffel is featuring the biggest productions, such as the "Slacker," and making a decided success of the venture. This Manager Stoffel believes that it pays to advertise and probably it is due to his originality in keeping his theater before the public that has contributed in a large measure to his drawing crowds. Film men predict that a future lies before Mr. Stoffel in a much deserved larger field. They say he could give points in showmanship to some of the big town exhibitors.

Joseph H. Stoffel.

New Moving Picture Corporation.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Buffalo Moving Picture Corporation, capitalized at $125,000, has been organized. One of the incorporators is Frank L. Talbot, who organized and managed here the Allied Bazaar, conducted to raise a fund for war sufferers. The directors are Mr. Talbot, Maxwell M. Nowak, Ben Starr, S. K. Talbot and Charles McCready.

J. L. Drohen to Build at Dunkirk.

Dunkirk, N. Y.—Drawings have been completed for a $75,000 theater to be erected here on the Blood property in Central avenue by James L. Drohen. The structure will be concrete and brick, with a seating capacity of 2,000. The house will be fireproof and will be known as the Drohen Hippodrome.

Popular Cinema Extends.

Buffalo, N. Y.—John M. Sitterly, manager of the Popular Cinema exchange of Buffalo, and Harry Marsey have taken over the western New York branch of the Modern Film Company. The new company will move to 47 West Swan street, where it will operate under the name of the Popular Cinema. The Popular will continue releasing Art Dramas in addition to the present features. Miss Rappeport and Miss Frey of the Modern office staff will continue in the same capacities under the new management.

Stephen Clark in Khaki.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Stephen Clark, operator of the Rialto theater, Buffalo, is at Camp Dix.

Cleveland Exhibitors Arrange Flat Rate

Operators Accept New Scale Providing Sixty-two and One-half Cents an Hour for Projecting Film—Result of a Get-Together.

From M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, O.—The discussion over the wage scale demands recently made by the local operators' union to the theater managers has been brought to an end by an amicable agreement between the union and the exhibitors. The discussion has resulted in a flat rate of 62½ cents for an hour's work, regardless of the number of seats or the number of shows. Laying aside all discussion of the amount of the rate agreed on, the fact that the same wages is paid for the same hour's work seems to be the only fair and business-like arrangement possible. What difference does it make in the booth whether there are two thousand or two hundred seats in the house? Few of the smaller houses can afford to have sloppy work in its booth. Then again it is not good for the trade to have the jealousy among operators that would have been sure to result in any other wages plan.

Picture of Kaiser? Yes, If Funeral.

Cleveland, O.—More revelations of German propaganda have come to light recently—this time in the film business.

It seems that shortly after the United States entered the war, a moving picture of several reels, showing the kaiser, the crown prince and Germany's armies was offered for censorship at Columbus.

The board looked at one reel of it and rejected the films. Later reports came to the board that these films were financed by German money and the object was to distribute them in this country in the interests of the German Empire.

Chairman Williams, of the Ohio Board of Censors, when asked about the truth of this matter, did not deny it. He remembered very distinctly the occurrence and how the pictures were rejected.

"Is the ban on pictures of the kaiser for use in Ohio?" Mr. Williams was asked.

"We will be very glad to pass a picture of the kaiser but it would have to be his funeral," he replied.

Bad Weather Lessens Business.

Cleveland, O.—After enjoying a good business the past summer the theaters of Cleveland have been experiencing very poor patronage during the last two weeks.

This is due primarily to the rainy and cold weather. Up to Saturday, Oct. 6, it had rained for seventeen consecutive days. Some days it was so cold that folks thought snow was ready to fall, and the result was that thousands remained indoors evenings.

Elmer Sell Cashes on Serials.

Youngstown, O.—Elmer Sell, manager of the Palace theater, Youngstown, has gained the reputation of the "serial" king in his town. Elmer has a small house, but an all-day grind and finds that serials pay best. He uses not less than three at one time, booking the latest thrillers that come forward.

Mr. Sell has been an exhibitor of Youngstown for nearly ten years.

Local Conference on New Tax.

Cleveland, O.—Cleveland exhibitors expect to hold a meeting shortly, at which the details of the new ticket tax will be discussed and outlined in full by a representative of the mayor's war board.

They are at sea as to how this tax will be handled and are anxious to learn the full particulars.

E. J. Schmidt New U. Manager.

Cleveland, O.—E. J. Schmidt, who is the new manager for the Victor Universal exchange in Cleveland, has had a wide experience in the film business. He was with Bluebird in New York, and later with the Victor Film service of Buffalo. He also has handled many state right pictures and evidently qualifies as an expert in both branches of the distributing end of the film business.

National Circuit Has Cleveland Office.

Cleveland, O.—The First National Exhibitors' circuit has now been firmly established in Cleveland territory through the opening of offices in the new Sloan building by E. Mandelbaum, who holds the franchise.

The Wolfberg Attractions, which is distributing the First National's pictures for Mr. Mandelbaum also has quarters on the third floor of this building. T. M. Eckert is the manager of the Wolfberg branch Film Men in Khaki at Chillicothe.

Cleveland, O.—The last quota of draft army men to leave Cleveland, Oct. 5, included several moving picture operators.

They were Al Dolan of the Erie theater, James French of the Alhambra, Walter Olds of the Reel and Nathan Goldstein and John Krock.

They went to Chillicothe, Ohio.

MORE ILLINOIS NOTES.

By Frank H. Madison.

Kilbourne, Ill.—The Vaudette theater is the name of the photoplay house which will succeed the Gem. A company has been formed which purchased the equipment of the Gem and moved it to the Ketchum building. The opening was set for October 20.

Springfield, Ill.—Myrtle Stedman, Paramount star, has been appearing in person in Illinois houses with a number of songs. She was at the Rialto in Kewanee, the Apollo in Peoria and the Hippodrome in Peoria.

Freeport, Ill.—Manager Guiteau of the Majestic theater has a new policy. His house will be operated practically on a five and ten-cent basis, except that on Saturday and Sunday nights the admission will be fifteen cents.

Canton, Ill.—People always like to look at pictures of babies—especially their own. The Garden theater cashed in on this trait by showing slides of two hundred of Canton's most attractive youngsters.

Rutland, Ill.—Rev. Father Dickman, who has charge of the moving picture show at the opera house, turned over the theater on September 25 to the local Red Cross society when Mary Pickford in "Cinderella" was shown, to help the funds of the organization.

Cincinnati Considers the New Tax Problem

Shall Theaters Ask for an Extra Copper with a Ticket or Shall They Raise the Admission Another Nickel—No Move Made as Yet.

From Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, O.—Now that the precise terms of the section in the new war tax bill affecting amusements have been made known, there is naturally a good deal of interest among moving picture exhibitors as to how the matter can best be handled, in order to take care of the tax of one cent for each ten cents or fraction thereof charged, with the minimum of inconvenience to the public.

As something like ninety per cent. of houses here charge ten cents admission, the remaining few being the dwindling number of five cent houses, with the Walnut charging 25 and 15 cents, it is apparent that the bulk of exhibitors and of moving picture patrons will be affected. So far the concensus of opinion seems to be that the exact amount of the tax will have to be paid by the patron in addition to the price of his admission, making it necessary to bring along a few coppers when out for an evening with moving pictures. The possible alternative is a flat five cent increase in admission charges, out of which the tax could then be paid by exhibitors. However, this has so far not even been suggested in Cincinnati. The most outstanding advocate of high prices in the city is the Walnut theater which is, as stated, the only 25-cent house in the city. Its manager, it seems, is not yet contemplating applying a similar charge at his other two houses, the Strand and Family, which are among the most popular in the city.

It is undoubtedly true that Cincinnati people have so far been able to take in all save the most spectacular attractions, such as "The Birth of a Nation," "A Daughter of the Gods," and so forth, at prices much below those prevailing in other cities. In spite of the rapid increase in the cost of operating a theater, including the higher prices for film service, increased wages, rent and the like, the ten-cent admission charge has virtually become standard in Cincinnati. It remains to be seen whether the war tax will accomplish a change and bring prices closer to the real value of the entertainment offered, which serves to supplant the stage attraction for which people are accustomed to pay as high as two dollars a seat.

Buy-a-Bond Films Now at Work.

Cincinnati, O.—In the great drive on behalf of the second Liberty Loan, which is now going on, Cincinnati has the honor of playing an important part, as the city is the headquarters through which some of the "Buy-a-Bond" pictures are being handled. Specifically, Picture No. 5 in the series on this subject, released by the World Film, is being handled through the local office, the entire 100 prints being released through Manager Stanley Hand's office in Cincinnati. The World pays all express charges on the films, which are being used liberally by exhibitors everywhere.

Automobile Thieves Annoy Patrons

Avondale, O.—Patrons of the Forest theater in Avondale, one of the most popular suburban houses in Cincinnati, have been worried a good deal lately by the operations of a group of thieves such as formerly had little to do with moving picture audiences, indicating, incidentally, the progress of the business. Nightly, long rows of automobiles are parked on the streets near the Forest, more than equaling the strings of machines seen at the big downtown houses. Lately automobile thieves have been helping themselves to cars, driving them to remote points and stripping them of everything movable. Special police protection, requested by the management of the Forest, so far has not helped much, as the thieves appear to be able to get away with machines whenever they like.

May Call New Theater the Gifts.

Cincinnati, O.—The new McMahan & Jackson theater on Sixth street has been duly christened, at least the name has been selected, after a warm contest, in which nearly 8,000 names and slogans were submitted. A Miss Gladys Rising was the winner, her name, The Gifts, with the slogan, "The Gifts Gives Pleasure to All," being decided as entitled to the prize. An interesting incident of the contest was that a very young lady, of 12 years, submitted the same name, with a slogan which the judges declared to be the best of all—"Every Show a Ten-Blow." This, of course, refers to the fact that the theater stands on the site of the famous old Gifts engine house, which housed a company which worked at many a ten-blow fire. However, unfortunately, the father of this clever young woman was an employe of the paper which handled the contest, and hence was not eligible for the prize. The theater may be opened by the latter part of the month, as remarkable progress has been made on the work, largely through the personal efforts of Mr. McMahan. Arrangements have already been made to show Goldwyn attractions.

I. Frankel Now Owns the Lubin.

Cincinnati, O.—Hennegan Brothers are no longer interested in the Lubin theater, which for many years they have been prominently connected with. They have disposed of their interests in the West-Fifth street house to I. Frankel, who is now the sole owner of the theater. A pleasing incident connected with the transfer of interests was the presentation to Mr. Joseph Hennegan, who has been the active manager of the house, of a handsome loving cup, employees of the theater taking this means of showing their affection and esteem for him.

W. R. Johnson Opens Exchange.

Cincinnati, O.—Another place to secure film attractions has been added to the many already doing business in Cincinnati, as W. Rhea Johnson has opened an office in the Provident bank building, where he will not only handle the Harris P. Wolfberg attractions, but will book subjects on which he controls the Ohio rights. Mr. Johnson is well known as a large buyer of State rights, controlling in Ohio such pictures as "The Crisis," "The Deemster," "On Trial" and others, as well as some new Chaplin releases.

Newsy Notes from Michigan.

Detroit, Mich.—Harry S. Lorch, of the State Film Company, Detroit, is back from a three weeks' trip to the northern peninsula of Michigan, where he laid out a route for "A Mormon Maid" and his other features.

Detroit.—The Maxine theater, Detroit, is the first local house to sign for the new Paramount serial, "Who is Number One."

Detroit.—The Drury Lane theater, Detroit, was robbed of $350 (Sunday's receipts) early in the morning of Oct. 8.

Detroit.—Ray Branch, of the United Theater Equipment, reports excellent business. He is now looking for much larger quarters. No less than a half-dozen sales of Power's machines have been disposed of during the past few weeks.

Detroit.—Harry Charnas, president of the Standard Film Company, was a Detroit visitor last week.

Detroit,—M. H. Hoffman, of Foursquare Picture Fame, was in Detroit recently conferring with George W. Weeks, division manager.

Henry Zapp Appointed U. Manager.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Henry Zapp has been appointed manager of the Universal exchange in Grand Rapids. He was formerly with Goldwyn, Fox and Paramount and is well known to western Michigan exhibitors.

Irons Signs for Artcraft-Paramount.

Findlay, O.—Harry I. Irons, formerly at Detroit for Pathe, has leased the Mystic theater, in Findlay, O., and has contracted for Artcraft-Paramount service. He writes the World Detroit office: "We opened last Saturday, Oct. 6, to big business."

Are There Too Many Pictures Released?

Detroit Exhibitors Ask World Representative Where They Can Put All the Good Stuff that Is Being Offered—Quality Is Better Than Ever.

By Jacob Smith, 718 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—Is there an over-production of pictures? If we take the word of exhibitors there is an over-production. "Where am I going to put it all" is the way many of them put it to The World correspondent. There are only seven days in the week, and if they play some of the attractions two days it means that something must be put on the shelf or canceled. Exhibitors feel that never before has there been so much good stuff on the market as right now, and it is getting better. Yes, sir, that fact cannot be denied—that the producers of this country never made as good pictures as they are turning out to-day. The stars are better—the people are selected with respect to whether they suit the part—the stories are better, the photographer is better; in every way pictures are better. Exhibitors are really at sea in selecting their program, and are being forced to let pictures go by that they want and yet can't use for lack of open time. Exhibitors seem to feel that it would be a good thing for the industry if there was less stuff on the market.

Kunsky Merges Two Exchanges.

Detroit, Mich.—John H. Kunsky and George W. Trendle, of the Kunsky Enterprises, announce the merging of the Metro exchange and the Madison Film exchange at Detroit to handle Michigan bookings. This announcement comes upon the heels of the resignation of J. O. Brooks, of the Madison Film exchange, and the desire of the owners to bring about the greatest economy in the conduct of their business. By merging the Metro and Madison it means that the Madison features will hereafter be sold through the Metro, and that all business will be transacted hereafter out of one office instead of operating two separate exchanges. The pictures referred to are "On Trial," "The Crisis," "Enlighten Thy Daughter" and "Idle Wives." The Metro will also handle the coming Petrova pictures, released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, as well as the coming Charlie Chaplin pictures.

G. M. Montgomery Will Be in Charge.

George M. Montgomery, manager of Metro, is to have complete charge of the merged exchanges. "Monty," as he is best known, has certainly made good as Metro manager, increasing the business way beyond the mildest expectations of Messrs. Kunsky and Trendle. Not alone has he increased the business, but he has effected a number of efficiency changes which have proved of benefit to Michigan exhibitors in the handling of affairs.

The Madison Film features have already been transferred to the Metro, at 73 Broadway, but in a few weeks or so the Metro will move to the fourth floor of the Madison theater building, where it will have fully 3,500 square feet of floor space. C. Howard Crane, Detroit's theater architect, is now working on the plans and he promises some unique innovations in laying out the floor. Good luck to Monty. He is deserving of it.

As for J. O. Brooks, who has no end of friends in Michigan, it will be a great surprise to learn that he has resigned, and while they will be sorry to see him leave the Kunsky organization they will anxiously await news of his new connection, to be announced later.

George Fuller New Pathe Manager.

Detroit, Mich.—George Fuller, for the past year at Pittsburgh for Pathe, has been appointed Pathe manager in Detroit, succeeding C. A. Perry, who went to Boston for the company. Previous to his affiliation with Pathe Mr. Fuller was with the World in St. Louis.

He announces that the new Colonial theater, Detroit, has booked Pathe first runs, both as to features and the Hearst-Pathe News Weekly.

Bert Williams Will Manage New Adams.

Detroit, Mich.—Bert Williams, for the past few years connected with the Woodward Theaters Company, of Detroit, as general manager, is now manager of the New Adams theater for John H. Kunsky. During his connection with the Woodward Company Mr. Williams built up an enviable reputation for "putting over" theaters which previously had been declared failures. We refer particularly to the Grand Circus theater, 310 Woodward avenue, which has been a huge success under the general direction of Mr. Williams and his company. His connection at the Adams gives him a new field and bigger opportunities. He succeeds R. G. McGaw, for the past 18 months with the Kunsky organization, who resigned October 6.

More Film Men Called to Service.

Detroit, Mich.—F. D. Martin, formerly manager of the Knickerbocker theater, Detroit, and for the past six months manager of the Fairmount Park, in Kansas City, was in Detroit recently paying his respects to his numerous friends. He expects to be called to one of the training camps before the 1st of November.

D. Leo Dennison, formerly manager of Paramount and recently with Foursquare Pictures, writes that he is with the ammunition train, Camp Lee, Virginia.

Sam Barrett, formerly with the Universal, Detroit, is with Company 337, Ambulance Corps, Camp Custer, Battle Creek.

J. A. Davis, formerly with Paramount, at Detroit, who is in the next call, has been accepted. Until he is called he is doing special work for the Cleveland office of Paramount.

Kunsky Buys More Pictures.

Detroit, Mich.—Just as we write this information has been received that John H. Kunsky has purchased "The Warrior" for Michigan. Also that he has purchased the Lynch-Triangle reissues featuring W. S. Hart.

Herb Fauser Back With General.

Detroit, Mich.—Herb Fauser, for the past six months with Universal, is again with the Detroit branch of the General Film Company.

Howard Gale Opens Detroit Office.

Detroit, Mich.—Howard Gale, a prominent and leading advance man, road man and manager in the amusement business, has been placed in charge of "The Garden of Allah" for Michigan. Mr. Gale has opened Detroit offices at 73-75 Broadway. His picture played the week ending Oct. 13 at the Washington theater, Detroit.

"Redemption" Going Big.

Detroit, Mich.—In all due respect to "Redemption" we must say that this picture is proving one of the biggest hits in Michigan of the state right features. The Dawn Masterplay Company has it for this state and actually one print is already booked solidly until the 15th of December. A. S. Hyman is now considering purchasing a second print.

Memphis Theaters Open for Sunday Shows

City Judge Says That They Can Open Legally by Donating the Net Proceeds to Charity—Discussion Probably Ended.

By J. L. Ray, The Banner, Memphis, Tenn.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—After a fight extending over period of many months, the doors of the Memphis theaters are again open on Sunday—this time to stay. City Judge P. W. Lanier, in an opinion handed down Saturday, held that the moving picture theaters and vaudeville houses of the city may operate legally on Sunday if they continue to follow the course pursued by them prior to the latest outbreak of the agitators of Sunday closing, i. e., by donating their net profits to charity.

Judge Laniers decision straightened out the Sunday closing tangle, which has long been the source of much agitation and political strife in Memphis. The decision as rendered will oblige the police department to maintain a strict "hands off' policy when these shows open on Sunday. After hearing the test cases against James B. Amis, manager of the Majestic theater No. 2, a prominent uptown picture house, Judge Lanier handed down his opinion. Manager Amis was arrested September 30, three times in succession following the sale of tickets to his house. He was the only theater manager attempting to show on that day, as per agreement among the managers. Police orders transmitted from Mayor Litty caused the arrest of Manager Amis. The three cases against the defendant were released after the courts' decision.

The petition to the court was made by the theater men on the grounds that in operating the shows for charity on Sunday, no law was violated, it having been decided by the court that there was no doubt that the profits of the Sunday exhibitions were being turned over to the Associated Charities. Those of a skeptical turn of mind who wondered why the theaters should desire to operate on Sunday if they are obliged to donate their profits to charity are answered by the amusement men with the explanation that the seven days operation helps to cut down the overhead expenses, most of which continues, regardless of whether the theaters are dark or open. Salaries, rent, picture rights and other expenses must be paid, even though the houses be closed on Sunday. Especially is this true with combination moving picture and vaudeville houses, owing to the fact that the performers on the various circuits are paid the same for six days' work as for seven.

A special committee from the Associated Charities appointed to see that all profits came to their organization included Messrs. J. L. Rawlings, Milton Binswinger and M. H. Rosenthal. This committee will be asked by Mayor Litty as to the managers' fairness to them and their willingness to confirm their claims. And the end of the rumpus started by the morality agitators seems to be in sight.

Theaters Assist Women's Registration.

Nashville, Tenn.—Theater men of this city have come to the front in assisting to make Women's Registration Day, on October 13, a complete success by offering their houses to parties representing patriotic women's civic bodies and social clubs. The local committee representing the Council of National Defense has arranged for representatives to appear at all moving picture houses during the week preceeding registration day to give short talks in the interest of this patriotic move. Every manager in the uptown district readily gave his co-operation and the speakings have begun in an enthusiastic manner.

Princess in Fall Dress.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Princess is resplendent in its new fall decorations, and much credit is reflected upon the already belaureled brow of Manager Harry Sudekum in arranging the attractive interior decorations. The inner auditorium has been touched up to give a fall atmosphere of freshness, and the second lobby has been repainted throughout. The main entrance, on Church street, is finished on the order of a high class drawing room with heavy upholstered furniture, velvet rugs and ornamental receptacles for flowers distributed at chosen points. A concrete floor has been installed directly back of the seats on the main auditorium floor. The entire theater is now in splendid shape for the autumn season.

Big Picture at Knickerbocker.

Nashville, Tenn.—Manager W. H. Wassman of the Knickerbocker is running "The Masque of Life" for four days at his house, and the the first day's business gives promise of unusually large crowds. The picture is a seven-reeler, and is being exploited by H. E. Coffey, whose address is Patten Hotel, Chattanooga. The picture has been given large publicity both through the press and bill board advertising in Nashville.

Week-Run Policy at Elite.

Nashville, Tenn.—The policy of running all pictures for an entire week is meeting with pouplar favor at the Elite, one of the Crescent Amusement Company's best houses. This week Douglas Fairbanks holds the screen, and is showing to big houses at each performance. This plan was followed after the show was remodeled some weeks ago.

Atlanta News Letter.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill avenue, Atlanta, Ga.

Dick Tant Appointed Manager of the Forsyth.

ATLANTA, GA.—Dick Tant of Augusta has been placed in charge of the Forsyth theater, which Monday, Oct. 7, began its third week as the home of moving pictures. Mr. Tant was born and reared in Augusta and has spent a large part of his time in that city. Since becoming connected with the Jake Wells' interests he has been shifted from city to city, spending only a short time in each place. He is well known over the South for his skill in decorative work, and the Forsyth theater, to which he has devoted several months of attention, has been so changed as to present the appearance of a new house on the inside, and is now probably the most attractive in the Jake Wells chain of theaters.

Mr. Wells has spent a large part of his time here recently preparing the house for its opening, and in seeing to it that every detail of its operation was in perfect order.

Shows Must Be Clean to Get Soldier Patronage.

Camp Gordon, Ga.—One of the most effective censorships ever known in this section is that put into effect by the officer at Camp Gordon, who has charge of this. Shows in Chamblee, Ga., and other nearby towns are investigated as to their moral effect; if they are not up to the standard, a taboo is put onto the special show, and the soldiers do not patronize it. Consequently the show soon passes for the lack of patronage. Showmen and exhibitors are very busy cleaning up to meet the requirements.

Photographers Had Better Take Care.

Macon, Ga.—Edgar Brown, who announced himself as a moving picture operator, as also a photographer for an Atlanta paper, took a shot with his camera at a platoon of the 121st Infantry, while it was deployed and firing upon an imaginary enemy on the Camp Wheeler parade ground Saturday morning. As the shutter clicked Lieut. W. D. Pope nabbed the operator and placed him under arrest. While Brown showed permits allowing him picture privileges in other camps he could show none for Camp Wheeler. His films were removed from the camera and exposed to the sunlight, after which he was sent from the camp with a warning. It is rumored that no more pictures will be permitted to be taken at Camp Wheeler, including motion pictures.

D. B. Traxter Will Build Theater.

Camp Sevier, S. C.—David B. Traxter of Greenville, S. C., was in Atlanta this week arranging for the opening of the amusement concessions in Camp Sevier, S. C., all of which he controls. Mr. Traxter contemplates the erection of a steel theater, modern in equipment, in which he will present vaudeville, motion pictures and musical comedy of the very best character. Mr. Traxter left Atlanta Wednesday for Nashville, and will continue from there to Philadelphia and New York.

Lyric Theater Gets Into Line for Defense.

Atlanta, Ga.—The first Georgia theatrical man to respond to the call of the state council of defense, which hopes to place speakers on patriotic subjects in all theaters, is George Hickman, manager of the Lyric theater. C. A. West, secretary of the council, has received a letter from Mr. Hickman, offering the use of the Lyric as desired by the state and government. Mr. West is confident other managers will prove as patriotic as Mr. Hickman in aiding the council.

Want Old Relic Rejuvenated.

Atlanta, Ga.—A committee from the Pioneer Women's Society will appear before the City Council, at its meeting October 15, and ask that steps be taken to preserve the cyclorama "The Battle of Atlanta," one of the city attractions at Grant's park. This cyclorama was a money maker before the advent of the motion picture. It can be said to be Atlanta's first crude moving picture, being arranged in such a manner as to make appear troops of the Civil war marching.

For several years the cyclorama has been in bad condition, and repairs are needed to preserve the picture, which is most valuable as an asset to the city, and as an historical record. All soldiers who are visitors to the park are admitted free, it being the belief of Atlantians that the picture is an inspiration to the men in training.

Dayton News Letter.

By Paul J. Gray, Alhambra Theater Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.

Majestic Wins New Future.

DAYTON, O.—Although competition is very strong in Dayton's downtown district, it has been decided to keep the Majestic, which opened a few weeks ago, in operation. An agreement was made by Mr. Guy whereby, if business was bad he was to close the house, but such has not been the case, however, which speaks well for Mr. Guy, the manager.

Harry Borrowes Gets Appointment.

Dayton, O.—Harry Borrowes, son of G. Burrowes, manager of the New Auditorium, has been appointed superintendent of the house his father manages.

Bad Accident in Springfield.

Springfield, O.—An accident which occurred last week at Springfield, O., caused the death of four men with a total of twelve injured. The accident was due to the cave-in of the newly completed wall of the Columbia theater, one of Springfield's most popular playhouses. The Columbia was an exclusive picture house and was to have been reopened in the near future. Although the catastrophe occurred Thursday, the 27th of September the last dead man was not taken from the ruins of the theater until Sunday, the 30th. This is one of the biggest theater accidents in history in Springfield and its effect has left the town in a different mood than before. Springfield's main claim to fame in the theatrical line is that it is the main office of the Gus Sun Vaudeville Agency.

Columbia Makes Advertising Splurge.

Dayton, O.—The Columbia theater here is making extensive plans for a week's engagement of Selig's big feature, "The Garden of Allah." There will be a return engagement if business demands. Breaking away from its established policy, the Columbia is billing very strong on this picture and is planning for a big business. There are at present no picture houses in Dayton that use bills and banners except on special occasions. Window cards are being used in profusion, as well as banners and one-sheets, in every place that a bill can fit. This advertising should pull a big business on the Selig film, as the advance sale is already very strong.

"Retreat of Germans" at Keith's.

Dayton, O.—As an extra attraction for the next three weeks, B. F. Keith's theaters here are to run Pathe's great war picture, "The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras." This is the first and only time that Manager Weed has consented to run a picture in the Dayton house other than the Pathe weekly. The Pathe weekly is shown at all performances and proves a good opener for an eight-act vaudeville show.

Majestic Leased to Automobile Company

Dayton, O.—The Wyliss Overland Automobile Co. has leased the Majestic theater here for the next week to run their big educational picture, "A Trip Thru the Overland Plant." Mr. Guy could not refuse the offer of the Overland people, inasmuch as they offered a clear margin over the receipts for the week, and is all clear profit. This will not interfere with the next week's program at the Majestic and the usual attractions will be run after the stay of the educational picture.

C. C. Clark Buys the Favorite.

Piqua, O.—H. U. and Frank Young, proprietors of the Favorite moving picture theater, have disposed of that house to C. C. Clark of Dayton. H. U. Young, who recently lost his wife, is preparing to go to California, while his brother will devote all of his attention to his restaurant business. C. C. Clark, the new owner of the Favorite, is an experienced moving picture man, recently selling the Old Glory theater in Dayton, which left him open to new activities.

Strand at Piqua Reopens.

Piqua, O.—The Strand theater in its new decorations and fittings has been opened for the fall season with conspicousu success, the work which was done on the house during the summer having accomplished much improvement. The first attraction after the opening was worthy of celebration, being Ethel Barrymore in "The Greater Power."

Kentucky Theaters Help Food Conservation

Every Moving Picture Theater in State Responds to the Call of Chairman Lee Goldberg and Will Show Reels and Slides.

Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Moving picture theaters, together with other activities in Kentucky, are being mobilized into the state food conservation campaign. Fred M. Sacket, federal food administrator for Kentucky, has appointed representatives of each of these businesses as members of his staff and they have arranged their food-saving plans. Lee Goldberg, manager of the Strand and Mary Anderson, is the moving picture representative. Mr. Goldberg has been in communication with every moving picture theater in Kentucky and he reports that they have immediately responded to the appeal for co-operation. The theaters, at the request of Mr. Goldberg, will exhibit reels and slides, detailing the benefits of food saving and advertising the pledge card campaign which will be waged by the hotels and restaurants during the eight-day period from October 21 to 28. These pictures will be shown during the week beginning October 14, and Mr. Goldberg intends to furnish the matter which will be supplied him by the Government to every picture theater in Kentucky.

"The Food Administration, which is undertaking one of the most far-reaching campaigns ever planned, is dependent almost entirely on voluntary assistance," Mr. Sacket said. "It is very important that the moving pictures, hotels and restaurants and retail merchants should cooperate, and I consider myself extremely fortunate in having as co-workers and members of my staff Mr. Goldberg, Mr. Staus and Mr. Lindsay. These men are among the leaders of Kentucky in their special lines of activity and each is taking as much interest in the food conservation work as if it were his own private business, from which he expected to get a large financial return. Under their direction the moving picture theaters, hotels, restaurants and retail stores of Kentucky will undoubtedly render as valuable assistance to the United States Food Administration as those of any other State."

Straws Mill on Silver Creek Burns.

Louisville, Ky.—The destruction by fire of Straws Mill, on Silver Creek, has removed one of the historic landmarks of Clark county, Indiana. The mill, which was over a hundred years old, situated in a beautiful section of country, is associated with a number of romantic stories and adventurous deeds. Several years ago the M. & C. Film Company, a motion picture producing company organized in Louisville, had location headquarters at the mill, and during the summer months produced several pictures which were very popular locally and noted for the beauty of their scenic effects. The company's open air studio was an attraction for hundreds of visitors during the summer.

Louisville's Walnut Theater Made New.

Louisville, Ky.—A building permit has been issued to Joseph L. Stuerle covering the improvements on the Walnut Street theater. Mr. Stuerle has obtained a new lease on the building for a period of five years at a consideration of $12,000 per year and will again open with high class multi-reel photoplay attractions on October 21. Some weeks ago the theater was closed, and since that time a force of workmen and decorators have been busy making improvements. The lobby has been given special attention and will rank in beauty with the finest theaters in the country. More than $1,000 is to be expended on the poster frames alone, and new flooring, seats, carpet and scenery have also been added. Joseph L. Stuerle, who will return to active management of the house, has announced that only pictures of the highest merit will be booked Among the early attractions are "The Auction Block," "The Barrier," "The Public Be Damned," etc.

Kentucky Theater Jottings.

Louisville, Ky.—Carroll Fisher, captain of a team of the Dixie Highway organization, has announced a supplemental subscription of $100 from the Strand Theater Company. It is the largest individual subscription and a good example of enterprise and generosity.

Louisville, Ky.—The Casino Theater Company, with a capital stock of $3,000, divided into shares of $100 each, has filed articles of incorporation. The company will operate a moving picture show and the debt limit is placed at $10,000. The incorporators, with their holdings are: M. Switow, 15 shares; Sam Switow, 3 shares; Joseph L. Steurle, 12 shares.

Maysville, Ky.—Walter Baughman, of Circleville, O., lessee of the Gem theater, on a recent visit to Maysville made arrangements for the re-opening of this popular moving picture house on November 1. A new piano has been purchased and a number of first class pictures booked for the opening. Although Mr. Baughman will have charge of the Gem, it will be under different management than that last winter.

Sebree, Ky.—The Nelson theater, which was closed two weeks ago on account of the electric current not being sufficient to operate, will be reopened in a few weeks. Manager Turpin has purchased a new engine and generator and when it has been received and installed will furnish his own electric current.

Richmond, Ky.—Contrary to expectations the management of the Alhambra and Opera House theaters were unable to secure an orchestra recently. The piano, cornet and drum players were drafted for the army and Miss Anna Bell Ward, manager, is still looking for musicians. Miss Sheriff is now playing the piano and will continue until an orchestra can be obtained.

Somerset, Ky.—The Dixie theater has rented the Ferrell building on the corner of Main street and the Square, and will move as soon as the necessary repairs have been made. Another machine will be installed and continuous service will be given.

Columbia, Ky.—L. M. Young has sold his interest in the Columbia Amusement company to George H. Nell. The show will continue in the same location. The owners are now Edgar W. Reed and Nell & Son. Mr. Reed will continue as manager.

Louisa, Ky.—At the Eldorado theater, during the Lawrence and Wayne counties fair, the children were admitted to the show free on Saturday, the last day of the fair. The Eldorado was open every day during the fair and had a daily change of program.

Paducah, Ky.—With the improvements to the Star theater completed, the management has announced that in the future the Paramount and Artcraft productions will be shown. A larger program has been added and the theater will henceforth begin the daily program at 11 o'clock.

Louisville, Ky.—The exhibition of the photoplay "The Whip" at the Strand theater came at a very opportune time in view of the fact that there are several hundred race horse people in the city attending the fall races.

Both Theaters of Indiana Coal Town Burns

Fire Takes the Two Picture Theaters at Universal, Ind.—Town Is Left Without a Single Show—Partly Covered by Insurance.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

UNIVERSAL, IND.—Lovers of the screen drama in this little town, a coal mining center about fifteen miles northeast of Terre Haute, will have to find some other kind of amusement for the next few weeks, as a result of a fire here last week that destroyed six business houses, including two motion picture theaters—the only two in the immediate vicinity.

The buildings destroyed were the Devitto theater, operated by Steve Devitto; the Vellosio theater, operated by Dominick Vellosio; Louis Garino's saloon and dwelling; Anthony Lusciatto's meat market; Dominick Rolando's restaurant and poolroom, and Dr. G. Utterback's office. A conservative estimate places the loss at approximately $20,000.

The fire apparently started in the rear of the Devitto theater and was burning fiercely when discovered, and is thought by some to have resulted from defective electric wiring. Devitto said there was no fire in the building when he closed the theater for the night.

Universal is without adequate fire protection, and the flames spread so rapidly that the water obtained from some of the mines failed to have any effect.

The loss to the Devitto theater is estimated at $2,000 on the building and $1,000 on the equipment, one half of the former being covered by insurance. The loss to the Vellosio theater was said to be about $4,000 on the building and $1,500 on the contents. The building was insured for about $3,000, but Vellosio carried no insurance on his stock.

Practically every man, woman and child in the town was a devotee of the screen drama, in fact the motion picture theaters were about the only amusements they had, so it can easily be seen that their loss can not very well be estimated in dollars and cents.

Vaudeville House Turns to Films.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The Gayety theater, formerly a second class vaudeville theater, situated on East Washington street near New Jersey street, has been taken over by the Lenwood Ammusement Company, now operating the Rialto and Lenwood motion picture theaters here, and will be completely remodeled and redecorated. The new Gayety will be reopened about October 14 as a first class picture theater, catering especially to women and children.

The policy of the new house will be to show only first class photoplays and occasional vaudeville entertainments. The largest ventillating system in Indiana has been installed, assuring patrons that the house will be propery ventilated at all times. The house has a seating capacity of 1,700, with a reserved section of 300, incuding the boxes. The interior will be beautifully decorated, and the walls done in allegorical scenes.

Daisy Theater Gives Xmas Box Benefit.

Indianapolis, Ind.—F. G. Cassell, proprietor of the Daisy theater, a motion picture house in West Michigan street, cooperated with Mrs. B. F. Whelan, a member of the Cheer Society for Indiana's Rainbow artillerymen, and turned over the proceeds of Tuesday, October 2, to the society. The money will be placed in the fund to purchase Christmas packages for members of the artillery. On Thursday night, October 11, the proceeds from the Garrick theater will be given to the same cause.

May Get No Smoking Law Repealed.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The ordinance prohibiting the smoking of tobacco and the lighting of matches in all theaters, including motion picture houses, in the cty, which was passed a few weeks ago by the city council, will soon be repealed if the ordinance introduced Monday night by Councilman Todd Young is passed. Young, who is not taking an active part in the city campaign, is believed to have been courtng the support of persons patronizing the burlesque houses when he introduced the measure. The other ordinance was passed at the request of Jacob H. Hilkene, commissioner of public buildings, and was approved by the motion picture exhibitors as a measure necessary to the public health and safety.

James Bouras Takes Over the Royal-Grand.

Warsaw, Ind.—James Bouras, of Chicago, Ill., has purchased the Royal-Grand theater here from W. R. Deaton, and will assume active charge of the place at once. Mr. Bouras is an experienced man in the motion picture business, and has announced that he intends to give the people of Warsaw the very best there is to be obtained. By making improvements and redecorations, he says, he expects to make the Royal-Grand the most popular theater in Warsaw.

F. J. Watson Will Remodel the Victoria.

Lafayette, Ind.—F. J. Watson, of Jackson, Mich., who recently purchased the Victoria theater here, arrived in the city week of October 1 to look over his property. He said the contract for remodeling the house will be let some time next week, as bids have already been advertised for. The theater will be renamed and new policy adopted, both of which will be announced later. Mr. Watson says he intends to move his family to Lafayette in the near future.

Long Term Lease on Ft. Wayne Theater.

Fort Wayne, Ind.—Clyde Quimby, owner of the Jeffeson theater, has just closed a long term lease for the Strand theater and expects to open the same in the near future as a motion picture house. He intends to operate the Strand on the same plan as the Jefferson.

Kansas City News Letter.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

"Jim Foland's Way of Making All Towns.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—J. E. Foland, Pathe salesman out of the Kansas City office, has finally put into operation his notion of how the people of his district can best be served with moving pictures. He fixed up an automobile in which to cover the territory, so that not even the smallest town need be omitted, and so that all could be reached with a minimum loss of time due to "catching or missing trains." Foland has made a particularly good record with Pathe, because of his attention to the small towns—and he has done it under the difficulties of driving across country in any old sort of vehicle, spending night in atrocious hotels, a-making long jumps. With the machine, he can go where he pleases when he pleases. The very special feature of the machine is its coloring, which attracts attention—and the Pathe banner.

William Warner Goes to Fox Dallas Office.

Kansas City, Mo.—William Warner, traveller out of the Kansas City office of the Fox Film, has been transferred to the Dallas office. He was to take the position the 8th of October.

Standard Will Publish "Fax."

Kansas City, Mo.—The Standard Film Corporation will soon issue a house organ to be called "Fax." This publication will contain ideas for advertising, notes for operators and exhibitors, a "questions answered" department and a department called "Faxious Editorials." It will have a circulation of about 8,000. The issuances of this paper and the contents thereof are originated with R. C. Cropper, president of the company, and Phil Ryan, advertising and publicity manager. It will have about 16 pages for the first issue, with probable increases in later issues.

V. A. Klingberg with Feature Film.

Kansas City, Mo.—V. A. Klingberg has been made a member of the sales force of the Kansas City Feature Film Co. He replaces J. H. Blawitz, who is now managing a theater at Moberly, Missouri. Mr. Klingberg was formerly with the Kansas City Feature Film Company, but had been out of the moving picture industry for some time.

A. W. Friemel Assigned to Nebraska.

Kansas City, Mo.—A. W. Friemel, who for the last six weeks has been working in the Kansas City office of the Kansas City Feature Film Co., has been assigned a territory in the state of Nebraska. He was formerly a salesman for the General Film Company, and worked out of the Kansas City office.

Farrar's "Joan" Makes Hit.

Kansas City, Mo.—"Joan the Woman" drew a record attendance at the Columbia theater her the week of October 1st. The picture was the third in a series of first-class productions which formed a very auspicious beginning to an innovation in the moving picture business in Kansas City. The idea of the Columbia management is that the public will pay a bigger price to see a bigger picture, and so far Kansas City audiences have proved their theory to be correct.

Harry Taylor Leaves Standard.

Kansas City, Mo.—Harry Taylor has resigned his position with the Standard Film Corporation. He was a specialty salesman working out of the local office. His plans for the future are unknown.

Two New General Film Offerings.

Kansas City, Mo.—The General Film Company is planning private showings of two pictures recently received, "Camille," and "Marvelous Maciste." These two six-reel features are taking well so far, as many requests for information have been received.

Kansas City Feature Boosting New Serial.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Kansas City Feature Film Co. is now conducting an advertising drive on the new Paramount serial, "Who Is Number One?" This work is being done aside from the regular line of advertising out of the New York office, and consists mostly of mailings and novelty advertising. This advertising is handled by C. L. Matson, who makes the advertising end his exclusive work.

New Theaters—Notes from Southwest.

Yates Center, Kan.—E. F. Devore, of the Star theater, has purchased the picture show at Buffalo, Kansas.

Concordia, Kan.—F. F. Davis has bought Ben McCrary's interest in the White Way theater.

Omaha, Neb.—The Blank Realty Company are building a $125,000 fireproof theater here.

Texarkana, Ark.—The Saenger will be remodeled. Manager Vernon states that the decorations alone will cost about $1,500.

Pine Bluff, Ark.—Rudolph Lewine will open a moving picture theater to be called the Majestic.

Ambrose, N. D.—Harry Hammond is the new manager of the Electric theater here.

Whitewood, S. D.—Coen and Woelz have opened the Comet theater here.

Business Notes and Personals.

Kansas City, Mo.—D. O. Reese, manager of the Universal Film and Supply Co., spent the week of October 1 visiting the exhibitors in the northern Missouri territory.

Whitney Young, manager of the Fox Film Corporation, spent October 6 in Bartlesville, Oklahoma.

R. H. Fairchild, traveling salesman of the General Film in Oklahoma, was a visitor in the Kansas City office, October 6. He reported a good business in his territory, which is rather unusual.

Rockford, Ill., Theaters Doing Splendidly

Since Camp Grant Opened Exhibitors Have Been Unable to Accommodate the Crowds—Are Adding Seats as Fast as Possible.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

ROCKFORD, ILL.—Business for exhibitors has been greatly increased by the opening of the National Army cantonment at Camp Grant five miles from Rockford.

Johnson Brothers, proprietors of the Royal theater, have been unable to handle their crowds at that house so have opened the Olympic on Seventh street to take care of the overflow. The second house will be uniform in policy with the Royal.

The Palm theater has added 400 seats on the main floor bringing the capacity up to 1,200. While these changes were being made Manager Palm had a new screen installed which will give a larger picture, secured new projection apparatus and had the pipe organ completely rebuilt. In addition the house was redecorated in old ivory and plain wall tints, new lighting was placed and more ventilating apparatus was added. "Lost in Transit" was the re-opening feature.

Joe Desberger Traveling for World Film

Robinson, Ill.—Joe Desberger, the pioneer exhibitor of Paducah, Ky., and late representative of Paramount service, is greeting old friends in the interest of World Film. Since taking a road job Desberger has began to grow young, and if he continues in this way at his presant rate, his friends will shortly be taking him for William Brady's office boy making his maiden trip as a film salesman.

Many Irresponsible Traveling Shows.

Robinson, Ill.—Southern Illinois has been a mecca for carnivals and tent shows this summer. Most towns have had few weeks without these itinerant attractions. Many city authorities are now contemplating a ban on this class of entertainment and with some kind of concentrated effort on the part of exhibitors it seems that the time is now ripe for action in this regard.

Little Player to Appear at Theater.

La Salle, Ill.—Little Mary McAllister, the Essanay's star in "Do Children Count?" was a recent visitor to Manager Taylor of the Majestic theater although she did not appear before his patrons. This pleasure is to be reserved for a later date when she, with her dog, will appear in person at the time a five reel feature is shown. The Essanay company had been working at Starved Rock near here.

Showmanship Hits in South Illinois.

Robinson, Ill.—Joe Hewitt, who lately assumed the management of the Strand and Grand theaters of Robinson for Roscoe Cochran, recently presented "A Tale of Two Cities" to big business. Mr. Hewitt sought the co-operation of the Robinson Township High School and as a result received a most flattering letter from the faculty for his efforts in this connection.

Eldorado, Ill.—Steve Farrar, "Ye Olde live wire advertiser" of Eldorado, recently admitted all bald-headed men to his show free of charge. It is said he did a capacity business. Steve says that this stunt was such a huge success that he is figuring on trying it on the fair ex.

Interesting Theater Notes in Illinois.

Quincy, Ill.—Breinig & Smith who leased the Bijou theater will operate it under the name of the American. It will run three or four acts of vaudeville and feature pictures. The house has been remodeled and redecorated.

Basco, Ill.—Fisher & Ancelet will operate a moving picture show in Clark hall this winter. A series of free moving picture shows given on the streets during the warm weather has been discontinued.

Shawneetown, Ill.—The Grand theater which was closed during the summer months has been re-opened by Joseph May, proprietor.

Belvidere, Ill.—Fire destroyed the Derthick Opera House block, causing a loss estimated at between $40,000 and $50,000. Joseph W. Fox owner of the Derthick lost his equipment and John O'Herren lessee of the Family theater lost considerable equipment.

Colfax, Ill.—Construction of the new opera house is rapid and it is expected to be completed sometime in November.

Lincoln, Ill.—"Redemption" was shown for two days at the Star theater for the benefit of Logan county's patriotic fund.

Plans for New Biblical Picture Company

MADISON, WIS.—Production by the Trinity Film company, which is to be located here for the making of Biblical, historical and educational pictures, will start about the first of the year, according to A. Dorian Allison.

The plans call for the purchase of a tract on one of the lakes near here and the erection of a production plant. An outlay of $70,000 for this purpose is estimated, the company to be incorporated. Allison announces that the directors of the corporation will be prominent church men and that the productions of the company will be censored by ministers of each denomination.

Ebony Film Making Southern Picture.

Fond du Lac, Wis.—The Ebony Film company, a Chicago producing organization composed of colored persons, has been making pictures in the vicinity of Fond du Lac. One of the principal scenes was made at the county fair grounds, where the race track and grand stand were used for settings in a southern racing story. The company of forty members has been busy at Oshkosh for about seven weeks.

From the Dakotas.

Yankton, S. D.—The Yankton theater and the Lyric theater have been sold to A. L. and J. H. Hess, of Watertown, who will take possession January 1. The Yankton theater will be rebuilt in the spring and will be used then for theatrical attractions as well as for moving pictures. The Lyric will continue to be used for photoplays. Manager Mathewson will remain in charge of both houses for the rest of this year.

Aberdeen, S. D.—Louis Pouliot has purchased the Bijou theater from C. W. Gates.

Noonan, N. D.—The Grand theater is now under the management of V. B. Gits, Louis Gits and Eugene Tripp.

Cando, N. D.—A. T. Straub has sold the Rex theater to A. A. Colden and J. P. Legler.

Mandan, N. D.—Manager Hartman of the Palace theater is giving away a 42-piece set of Bluebird dishes every Friday night.

Wisconsin Theater Notes.

Bloomer, Wis.—The Opera house was destroyed by fire.

Monroe, Wis.—H. T. Holcomb and Joseph Collins have been making plans to open a moving picture show here.

Dallas Business a Bit Slower Last Week

Several Special Features Did Remarkably Well, but in the Regular Show Attendance There Was a Slight Sag Noticed—Business Generally Good.

By Douglas Hawley, The Times-Herald, Dallas, Tex.

DALLAS, TEX.—Except for two or three of the big first-run releases shown here at about the same time that people in the east saw them, local houses had a rather slim patronage during the week ending Oct. 6, despite reports by retail merchants in various lines that their business has been really great. There is no particular explanation offered—the condition just came about naturally, it seems. This does not mean that there has been any change from the state of affairs heretofore reported in these advices—business is still good—it was just probably a quiet week, as such things come once in a while.

The Washington Theater did very well indeed with "Rasputin, the Black Monk," which met popular local favor following its well advertised appearance. "Oh, Doctor," at the Old Mill, was another good business getter, with Arbuckle as popular as he has heretofore been in Texas. Julian Eltinge played to good business in "The Princess Charming," the clever scenario being particularly adopted to the talented star. It was his first appearance in the films here. Jack Pickford and Louise Huff—herself a Texan—drew well in "The Ghost House," remindful somewhat of "Seven Keys to Bald Pate," but at the same time altogether different. Madge Kennedy in the Goldwyn "Baby Mine" opened at the Old Mill on Oct. 7, to be followed by Hayakawa in "The Call of the East." "North of Fifty Three," with Farnum, had a good run in connection with the Pantages vaudeville bill at the Jefferson, the first of the week offering of the Washington was Desmond in "Flying Colors."

Hippodrome at Dallas Quits.

Dallas, Tex.—A. C. Langan has closed the Hippodrome, giving up his idea of producing "Civilization" for a two weeks' run during the State Fair, opening on Oct. 13. This theater has continued to give a strong demonstration of the psychology of crowds and the characteristic of people to "mill" like sheep. As handsome a structure as there is in Texas and built originally for a theater, it nevertheless doesn't get the crowds any longer. As the center of activity has moved from around Twenty-third street to above Forty-second, so has the center of things locally moved the matter of some four blocks east, leaving the handsome theater out of the run of crowds. It's the only explanation that can be offered. It is said that Langan dropped a good many more thousands than one cares to mention in the effort to make a "come back" of the place.

"Purity" Banned By Censor.

Dallas, Tex.—"Purity," with Audrey Munson, was banned during the last week by the local censor, and her action sustained, on appeal by the local appeals board. The refusal of a permit for the picture cost the Washington theater management the matter of half a thousand, but the embargo stuck. The picture was shown here more than a year ago, and while there was comment it escaped banishment under the former city administration.

Prices That Fit the Clientele.

Dallas, Tex.—There has not been nor is there much talk about changes in prices locally. They run from a nickel up to twenty-five cents, and everybody seems pretty well satisfied with his own charge, together with each manager's particular clientele. First runs in the big houses get twenty and twenty-five cents for best seats, and the general opinion seems to be that a lowering of admission charges wouldn't bring any bigger business. On the other, the belief seems strong that prevailing prices are about the maximum of what could be charged and still retain present patronage.

World Series as Added Attraction.

Dallas, Tex.—World series baseball games, given play by play on an electric board, have proved capacity house getters for the Old Mill during the progress of the big league contests. Prices for the games, including the pictures running on regular programs, were doubled, but it didn't keep people away. The theater has been packed at each offering.

Local Organization Talk.

Dallas, Tex.—Dallas is somewhere about second or third as an agricultural implement distributing center. It is classed seventh as a film distributing center. Implement men have an excellent local organization, at meetings of which men in the trade meet socially. Surprise has been expressed that local film men have no such and at the same time the thought has gone about that organization may follow. It is felt that men in the motion picture field don't know each other personally as well as they might and that mutual benefit would result from a closer rubbing of elbows and contact of minds.

It ought to go beyond the mere talk period. It is always up to some one in particular to start something. Some one usually has the opportunity to lead and the others are glad to help him.

Texas Knew He Was Genuine.

Dallas, Tex.—Even though Dallas has developed in the way of cities far above the cow-town days of two decades ago, you can't put anything pseudo over on Texas film patrons in the way of western stuff. For that very good reason Texas hailed Fairbanks in "The Man from Painted Post" with delight, and showed the keenest appreciation of ten-year-old Frank Clark, who puts Doug himself on his mettle for quick getaways and "bulldogging" of steers—in Frank's case, of course, a calf. Critical Texas folk who know their western life because it has been bred into them picked the youngster as 100 per cent. genuine the very minute he first waddled off into the perspective. His wee legs were properly bowed; he picked up his rope in the manner born.

Seattle Trade News and Personal Notes

"Tanks" Makes Money for Canadian Club of Seattle and for Exhibitor—Changes at Local Exchanges and Theaters—Patriotic Activities.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, Wash.—"The Tanks" are being shown this week at the Rex theater under the auspices of the Canadian Club of Seattle. The picture was advertised for a couple of weeks in advance, and the members of the club have been selling tickets at 25 cents apiece for several weeks. A Scotch piper imported from one of the Highland regiments of Canada plays a bagpipe in front of the theater at intervals during the afternoon and evening. All this advertising has been very effective, and John Hamrick, manager, says that his share of the box office receipts are very satisfactory, in spite of the fact that he is giving a large percentage to the Canadian Club to be used for the dependents of Seattle soldiers and sailors.

J. W. Huber Will Manage the Colonial.

Seattle, Wash.—The management of two downtown theaters, as well as other business interest, got to be too much for John Danz, of the Colonial and High Class theaters, and he has employed a new manager for the Colonial. J. W. Huber, formerly in the picture and hotel business in Denver, is the new man who has just taken charge of the theater. Among other new features added to the Colonial Mr. Danz has installed a coin receiving and recording machine very similar to that used on the pay-as-you-enter street cars. This has been placed at the door, and the cashier sits just behind this, instead of in the box office. All she has to do is to make change. No tickets are given. This eliminates the necessity of a door man, and is much quicker than the old way.

Business Demoralized by Strikes.

Seattle, Wash.—C. A. Swanson, manager of the Princess theater, Everett, Washington, was a visitor at the Seattle exchange this week. He told the World correspondent that the strikes were ruining the motion picture business in Everett. The lumber mills, which Everett depends upon for its pay roll, have been closed for several weeks and the workmen are leaving the town in scores. It is demoralizing all business of the vicinity.

"Rasputin" Draws Crowds.

Seattle, Wash.—The World production, "Rasputin, the Black Monk," has been playing to crowded houses all week at the Clemmer. Only exceptional drawing cards are ever held a full week at Seattle's leading Second Avenue house.

Exchanges Donate Films to Artillery.

Seattle, Wash.—Several Seattle exchange managers have donated films for the entertainment of the men of the Coast Artillery Corps at Forts Worden, Flagler, and Casey. Among those who responded to the request made by Chaplain Estabrook of the Corps were A. W. Eden, Fox Manager; Mike Rosenberg, manager of the De Luxe Feature Company, and E. R. Redlich, Metro manager.

Greater Features Company Moves.

Seattle, Wash.—Jack Lannon, president of Greater Features moved his headquarters this week from his old location in the Orpheum building to 2020 Third avenue, one of the divisions of the new film exchange block. Al. Bloom is now manager of Greater Features. "The Mormon Maid" and Christie comedies have been added to their list of features.

J. W. Houck, New Goldwyn Road Man.

Seattle, Wash.—J. W. Houck, formerly manager of the Twilight theater, Cheney, Washington, has been employed by C. F. Hill as salesman for Goldwyn. Mr. Houck will have headquarters in Spokane, and will cover that territory.

Mr. Hill announces that the campaign on "The Manx Man" has been launched.

New Management at Supply Office.

Seattle, Wash.—G. A. Metcalfe, Motion Picture Equipment and Supplies, 1210 Fourth avenue, wishes to announce that in the future the Seattle branch will be under the management of his brother, P. Metcalfe. The large stock of Powers' parts and accessories coupled with the Metcalfe insistence upon efficient service assures the exhibitors that their needs will be promptly filled without confusion or delay.

New Booker at Seattle Vitagraph Office.

Seattle, Wash.—Ashley McRae, formerly salesman out of the Vitagraph office, has taken the post of booker, recently vacated by the resignation of E. H. Watson.

San Francisco Briefs.

J. H. Hobbs, vice-president of the Vanoscope Co., and H. M. Warner, president of the Despatch Film, were recent visitors here.

Charles Chaplin, Edna Purviance and other members of the Chaplin company were here a short time ago and sailed for Honolulu on the Matsonia.

Mary Miles Minter, who was recently here to make a picture on San Francisco Bay, appeared in person on the stage of the American theater at Oakland one evening and was tendered a reception by Rex Midgley, manager of this house.

E. H. Emmick has renewed his contract for Christie Comedies and is steadily adding new feature productions, planning to handle more of the latter than in the past.

Thomas Herbert, shipping Clerk for the Mutual, has left for the training camp at American Lake.

William Kellner, formerly with the Alcazar theater, is now manager of the Majestic theater recently purchased by Robert A. Hazel and H. M. Parleir. Mrs. Overman, the former owner, was married recently, and has left for the East.

Pathe Exchange News.

San Francisco, Cal.—Mel. Hulling, for three years booker at the Pathe exchange, has been promoted to salesman, and will cover northern California. Clinton Taffe, formerly of the poster department, has been made booker, and Frank Olsen has been promoted from the position of shipping clerk to the head of the poster department. The local French Consul recently reviewed "In the Wake of the Huns" at a private showing, and endorsed it. This production has been booked by the management of the Rialto theater.

T. & D. Circuit Changes.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Turner & Dahnken circuit has moved to its new building on Golden Gate avenue, and will shortly have all its departments in good running order.

Nick Turner, formerly a well known exhibitor, but for some time with the Pathe exchange, has been placed in charge of the T. & D. theater at San Jose, and E. V. Clover has been given the management of the Oakland house, succeeding Ralph Clark, who has left for New York to take charge of the film exchange being opened by the Turner & Dahnken circuit. Sam Y. Edwards, formerly assistant at the Oakland T. & D., has been given the management of the Berkeley T. & D., succeeding E. J. Merlin, who plans to return to Chicago.

J. H. Goldberg to Visit Exhibitors.

San Francisco, Cal.—J. H. Goldberg, manager of the local Bluebird office, plans to leave at an early date on a trip through the entire territory served through this branch. He has been in charge here for about three months, but has been too busy to get far from this city. He states that the new star series policy is working out splendidly, and he will work principally on this while away. Morris L. Markowitz, head of the California Film exchange, will go to Los Angeles shortly to start the new Bluebird system and introduce Jewel productions and Alice Howel comedies.

Recent Incorporations.

San Francisco, Cal.—The New Clement Theater & Realty Co. has been incorporated with a capital stock of $200,000 by J. R. Saul, A. J. Dannenbaum, G. B. Jackson, A. Walter and J. Richards. The construction of a large moving picture theater is planned.

The Light Absorber Camera Company has been incorporated by S. M. Field, F. G. Flaherty and M. C. Wagner, with a capital stock of $100,000.

Articles of incorporation of the Bio Carbon Company have been filed by W. H. Clay, O. L. Berry, F. H. McNally and J. F. Tevlin. The capital stock is placed at $25,000.

New Fillmore Theater at Frisco Brightens

Kahn & Greenfield House, Just Completed, Has Gala First Night—Notables Present —Patriotism Shown.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The New Fillmore theater, at Fillmore and Eddy streets, erected for the Kahn & Greenfield Circuit, Inc., at a cost of about $200,000, was thrown open to the public on the evening of October 4. This theater takes the place of the beautiful house opened at this location two and a half years ago. The dedication was made a gala event in which city officials, members of the army staff, the Fillmore Street Improvement Association, the Mission Merchants' Association and prominent exchange men took part.

The doors opened promptly at six o'clock, and when the first picture was thrown on the screen a half an hour later every seat, with the exception of the loges, which were reserved, was filled. Crowds thronged the lobby and the street in front of the theater and patiently waited until after the first show and the dedicatory exercises to secure admission, packing the house a second time.

At the close of the first show manager Joseph E. Levin stepped upon the stage and made a brief address, calling attention to the wonderful increase in the popularity of moving pictures during the past two and a half years, and how it had been found necessary to supplant the former New Fillmore theater with a much larger and finer structure with a capacity of 2,300. General Arthur Murray, head of the Western Division of the United States Army, was then presented, and two squads of soldiers from Company G, 13th Artillery, tendered a patriotic tableau and drill. L. A. Larson, attired as Uncle Sam, sang "My Own United States" and "The Star Spangled Banner," placing a finishing touch on the patriotic side of the program.

Edward Rainey, secretary to Mayor Rolph, then spoke for the mayor, who was unable to be present due to the press of urgent public business, and declared that the new theater was quite in keeping with the tremendous development of San Francisco. He was followed by members of the Fillmore Street Improvement Association and the Mission Street Merchants' Association, under whose auspices the opening was held. J. W. Allen, manager of the local Paramount exchange, also spoke briefly, telling of some of the accomplishments of the Paramount program in the past and of plans for the future.

The lobby and foyer were filled with floral offerings from exhibitors, exchange men and producers, and telegrams of congratulations were received from all parts of the United States attesting to the popularity of the members of the firm of Kahn & Greenfield.

The opening program consisted of Fannie Ward in "On the Level"; an Essanay George Ade Comedy, "The Fable of the Wandering Boy and the Wayward Parents," and a Hearst-Pathe News. Selections were rendered on the great orchestral pipe organ, installed by the American Photoplayer Co., by Richard Comfort and Rudolf Paulus. The prices of admission to the new house will be 5 and 10 cents at matinees, and 10 and 15 cents at evening performances, no seats being reserved.

The many interesting and unusual features in conjunction with this theater, including a dance pavilion which can accommodate an overflow of four or five hundred and a projection room without equal anywhere, will be described and illustrated in an early issue of the Moving Picture World.

Paramount Officials Visit San Francisco.

San Francisco, Cal.—Henry Abrams, president of the Paramount Picture Corporation, and B. M. Schulberg, general manager of this concern, were recent visitors here, and spent several days conferring with leading exhibitors in the San Francisco Bay territory. The purpose of the trip to the coast is to become acquainted with exhibitors and their needs, and a detailed chart is being prepared from the impressions and opinions revealed at conferences with theater owners, this to be used in making changes and improvements in the distributing system. The visitors left for the Pacific Northwest accompanied by District Manager Herman Wobber, and stops will be made at all of the large towns.

California Theater Opens Nov. 1st.

San Francisco, Cal.—An event of more than ordinary importance will take place on the evening of November 1, when the magnificent California theater at Fourth and Market streets will be opened. This house, representing an investment of $1,750,000, will be opened at the date set months ago by manager Eugene Roth, and will mark such an advance in the art of moving picture presentation that it is expected to be regarded as a national, rather than as a local institution. The exterior of the beautiful building is in a completed form, and barring serious delays the theater will be in perfect shape for the opening. The initial offering will be "The Woman God Forgot," featuring Geraldine Farrar, and this will be shown for ten days. Other productions to be shown during November include "The Man from Painted Post," with Douglas Fairbanks; "Arms and the Girl," with Billie Burke, and a W. S. Hart production, "The Narrow Trail."

"Four Minute Men" Busy.

San Francisco, Cal.—The second series of educational war speeches in local moving picture houses by "Four Minute Men" comenced on October 3, and on that date speakers addressed audiences in the following houses: Class A, Regal, Irving, Haight, Sunset, Progress, Garrick, Lyric, Nixon, Polk Street, Queen, Royal, Rex, Rialto, Elite, Empire, Strand, Imperial, Portola, Tivoli, Silver Palace, Unique, V-Odeon, Hippodrome, Edison, Savoy, Liberty, Hayes, Poppy, Opal, Majestic, Mission, Electric, People's Grand, Sherman, Lyceum, Panama, Fairyland, Clement, Fisher's, Lincoln, Palm, and La Bonita. Practically all of the local theaters have arranged to show the Liberty Loan pictures being distributed through the Pathe and World exchange, the Columbia theater having rented a moving picture machine and secured an operator to show these in the intermission between the acts of its show.

Perfection Franchises in Demand.

San Francisco, Cal.—The local branch of the George Kleine system has been meeting with great success in placing Perfection pictures in this territory, and among those who have acquired franchises have been the St. Francis theater, San Francico; the Franklin theater, Oakland; the Fresno photoplay; the T. & D. theaters, of Berkeley and San Jose; the Monache theater, Porterville; the New Piedmont, Oakland; the Park, Alameda; the Pride, Monterery, and the Majestic, Reno, Nev.

Imperial Doing a Record Business.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Imperial theater broke all former records for both receipts and attendance during September, surpassing that of August, also a record breaker, by a comfortable margin. October has started off well, the initial attraction being "Joan the Woman," with Geraldine Farrar. The management of this house is considering eliminatng the matinee price of 10 cents entirely and making the minimum 15 cents. But few ten cent seats are now being sold.

The War Tax and Portland, Ore., Prices

Indications Are That Prices Will Not Be Advanced in Portland, Ore.—Talk of Twenty Cents for Evening Admission, However.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—All indications are that the new war tax will not cause a price rise in moving picture theater admissions as was talked of during the summer, when the war tax question was first broached.

Downtown exhibitors would like to raise from 15 to 20 cents, but they are afraid of the verdict of the public on this question. They feel that the public is not going to stand for another nickel added to the admission price in face of the five cent raise some time ago. However, there is considerable talk among the exhibitors operating the medium sized theaters of raising the evening admission to 20 cents, leaving the matinee price at 15 cents.

The suburban exhbitors have been hoping that the downtown men would go to 20 cents so that they could raise to 15. A concerted attempt by the suburbanites to inaugurate the 15 cent price a few weeks ago failed, although some of the theaters did go to the higher price.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon is considerably disappointed over the passage of the war tax bill in the quiet manner it was put through. The league was in hopes it would be appraised by the press, at least, of Congress' intention. At the Senate hearing last summer, where the president of the league, C. W. Meighan, attended, it seemed that the entire matter had been adjusted to the satisfaction of all concerned, and the fact that moving picture shows were the amusement places of the masses where patriotic propoganda could be presented by means of slides and speakers and that exhibitors could thereby do their "bit" was considered in making recommendations concerning the tax. However, Oregon exhibitors say they are prepared to make the best of the situation, and have already offered their services in co-operating with the Government in the new Liberty Bond drive and the Four Minute Men's campaign.

Film Men on Liberty Loan Committee.

Portland, Ore.—The second Liberty Loan drive opened in Portland a short time ago, with motion picture men on important publicity committees. J. J. Parker, of the Majestic theater, has been selected by Publicity Director C. C. Chapman as chairman of a committee to handle the Liberty Loan publicity in moving picture theaters, and Abraham Nelson of the World, has been named as a committeeman.

Paramount's President Visits.

Portland, Ore.—The Oregon exhibitors who had the opportunity to meet Hiram Abrams, president of the Paramount pictures, during his recent visit to Portland are unanimous in stating that he is a regular fellow and knows the game from an exhibitor's standpoint. These impressions were gathered from exhibitors upon whom Mr. Abrams called while in the Rose City. He shook hands with the boys in the operating rooms, and wasn't a bit "over the heads of the exhibitors," as has been said of some Eastern film men who are not yet film company presidents by any means.

Mr. Abrams was accompanied by Benjamin P. Schulberg, general manager for the Paramount Corporation, and called upon Portland in the interests of Paramount's new advertising campaign.

Industrial Company Begins.

Portland, Ore.—The Industrial Film Service, a new company, of which I. Leeser Cohen, former manager of the Globe theater, is manager, showed its first installment of the Oregon Industrial News at the People's theater during the week of October 1. The film features industries of the state that are of particular interest to Oregon people.

The Film Supply Company, handling the Universal product, is distributing the Oregon Industrial News, and Mr. Cohen reports ten bookings in Portland already. The photography is by the American Lifeograph Company, under the direction of Louis H. Moomaw.

Another Fish Story.

Portland, Ore.—This time the fish story is on George Mann, the genial western manager for Triangle, who has been sojourning in Portland territory for several days. Accompanied by Jack Jennings, of the Sunset theater; W. W. Kofeldt, Pathe manager; C. M. Hill, Paramount manager, and F. A. Tipton, traveling for Triangle, Mr. Mann took an auto trip to the Sandy River, where the fish were making their way through the rapids. Not having any hip boots with him, Mr. Mann waded into the stream in his business suit and captured a twenty-five pounder with his hands. The fish was served at the Hotel Benson to a party of Mr. Mann's friends that evening.

A New Serial Publicity Plan.

Independence, Ore.—C. W. Henkle, of Nelson and Henkle, owners of the Isis theater, has a new wrinkle for the exhibition of serials. Several months ago he began showing "Liberty" in regular weekly instalments. Recently, after finishing the picture, he hit upon the plan of bringing it back for a second run. He secured all the reels of the series and placd them in a show window where everybody could see the amount of celluloid it takes for a serial film. He will soon begin showing the picture over again, three episodes at a time, the entire serial to be shown in five consecutive days.

Feldman Show "The Manx Man."

Portland, Ore.—C. H. Feldman, known in the territory through his long connection with General, has returned as special representative for Goldwyn, and is exploiting "The Manx Man," "The Auction Block," and other Rex Beach productions.

Mr. Feldman recently held a trade showing of "The Manx Man" at the Majestic theater, where a big representation of local and up-state exhibitors attended. The picture has been booked at the Majestic for Portland first run. Mr. Feldman left Portland for Spokane immediately after the showing, but will return soon with "The Auction Block."

Portland Theater Briefs.

Portland, Ore.—The Derby theater, Kenton, which has been closed for about eight months, will reopen soon under the management of B. P. Boland and C. D. Mercer.

Nick Pierong, manager of the Strand theater, has resigned his position, and W. B. Armstrong has been appointed manager. Mr. Armstrong has been affiliated with S. Morton Cohen in many of his theatrical enterprises, and was at one time manager of the Star theater here.

Sunset Turns to First Runs.

Portland, Ore.—After a long season of second run pictures, John A. Jennings, of the Sunset theater, has again put the house back on a first run basis. Vitagraph, Perfection, and other features have been contracted for.

Mr. Jennings' second run policy consisted of picking the very best of films already shown in Portland. Recently "Wildflower" was shown, S. R. O. audiences were obtained at 2 o'clock on a Monday afternoon.

Frank Lacey has resigned his position as manager of the Sunset and is getting ready to take out a road show. His show is composed of a feature film and a Chinese novelty act.

Majestic Has a Parade.

Portland, Ore.—Manager J. J. Parker, of the Majestic theater, co-operating with W. W. Kofeldt, manager of the Portland Pathe exchange, staged a parade in Portland preceding the showing of the "Battle of the Somme" that attracted one of the biggest crowds ever assembled outside of a moving picture theater in Portland.

The parade started at seven o'clock, and was headed by motorcycle officers, and the Kilties Band furnished a lot of stirring bagpipe music. In line were floats by the United States Navy Department, the British marines and others, and by reason of the fact that some of the proceeds of the picture went to the British Red Cross several British societies, including the Cambrians, Caledonians, St. Andrews, and British Benevolent Society members also marched. It was a real turnout, and the picture did S. R. O business at 25 cents admission.

Regent Theater Sales.

Portland, Ore.—L. Vergere, People's theater, Joseph, Oregon, was a recent visitor on Film Row, where it was reported he has sold his interest in his theater to C. C. Ghormley, of the People's Theater Enterprise.

Monmouth, Ore.—The Norm theater, the only show house here, has been sold by C. D. Mackin to L. I. Bursell.

Harrisburg, Ore.—W. S. Trites has purchased the Rose theater from Glenn Holt, also the Crescent theater at Junction City.

Liberty Theater Takes on Autumn Tints

Ralph Ruffner Puts Into Effect New Ideas for Seasonal Tints at His Spokane Theater—Plans for More Bright Colors.

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1811 11th Ave., Spokane, Wash.

SPOKANE, WASH.—This is the time of the year when one's thoughts turn to fall suits and bonnets, and if one can see far enough ahead there appear on the horizon warm furs, snug topcoats, fleece-lined gloves and even earmuffs. This applies in our degree to ordinary folks. Ralph Ruffner of the Liberty has a different idea. He decreed a new fall outfit for his theater and the costumers and designers are busy carrying out his plans.

If you had noticed the walls downstairs and used your olfactory nerves you would have known that something was being done. A fresh, clean smell of paint, kalsomine and plaster permeated the atmosphere. The walls of the lobby and downstairs are now a glory of autumnal colors—soft greens, browns and reds, gloriously blended. The woodwork is to be retouched, and as a surprise, there will appear one of these days new velour hangings and drapes and even new carpets. The color scheme is yet a secret, but Mr. Ruffner confessed that these luxuries would cost almost $8,000.

Ascending to the balcony huge trusses and scaffolds were seen mounting to the ceiling in order that the artists might leave their impressions on the vaulted heavens. At 7.30 one night last week there was not a stick of wood in the theater, according to Mr. Ruffner, and at 9.30 the next morning everything was up and ready for work and all unnecessary props were down so that the show was not stopped or hindered for one minute. Even the bas-reliefs on the side walls upstairs assumed a new form. One side represents tragedy and the other comedy.

When Mr. Ruffner travels he travels with his eyes open. While on a recent trip to California he bumped into something new in the line of permanent floral and foliage decorations and has contracted for consignments for the various seasons. He is even anxious until it is time to wire for his share of holly and mistletoe. However, Christmas is too far off, and before that he is going to use early fall decorations. For his lobby downstairs he has secured an abundance of autumn leaves, which will make a bower of the entrance way. In his office he has elegant baskets of artificial roses in deep red and bright daisies and tall vases of gorgeous sunset chrysanthemums. These everlasting blooms are not the crackly kind that break, but have a soft, velvety touch and possess delightful perfumes.

Also while in the south Mr. Ruffner discovered that there were quantities of masterpieces made by William S. Hart and Douglas Fairbanks long before the public discovered them — productions which the majority of people have never seen. In order that Spokane folks may enjoy them Mr. Ruffner has arranged that these early screen plays shall be reprinted and appear at his theater. The first of these re-issues will be "The Disciple," starring William S. Hart and Dorothy Dalton, which will follow Douglas Fairbanks in "Down to Earth."

The Liberty managements says that the people of Spokane are good singers after they once get started. Those attending the first performance, Mr. Ruffner says, seldom collect courage enough to do anything more than hum, while patrons at the 9 o'clock performance burst forth in a splendid fashion. Mr. Ruffner has often been asked why he does not have a good singer to start these national airs, but this is a Ruffner experiment, and professionals are barred. Last week the song which appeared on the screen was that rousing old patriotic balled, "When Johnnie Comes Marching Home."

"Honor System" Turned 'Em Away.

Spokane, Wash.—People were turned away from the Casino theater, owing to the great demand to see "The Honor System," the spectacular William Fox photo-drama dealing with prison abuses. The picture was shown all week, so that every one wishing to witness the production could do so.

MORE SEATTLE NOTES.

A Glimpse Into the Exchange Business.

Seattle, Wash.—Exhibitors appreciate the special efforts made by employes of the distributing companies to serve them to the fullest extent, when they know about it; but they don't always hear of the services rendered by stenographers, bookers and shipping clerks. We think that a vote of thanks is due from some exhibitor to Miss Edna A. Craig, booker at the Seattle World office, so we are going to tell you what she did.

A film due from an out-of-town exhibitor in the middle of the afternoon did not arrive. There was a chance that it would get in on a 7 o'clock train. Making the excuse that she had work to finish, Miss Craig waited for that last express delivery; but the film was not there. There was no other train from that town until midnight. Miss Craig went home to dinner, slept an hour or two, and went down to the station to meet the midnight train. Still no film. At 6.30 in the morning another train was due from the delinquent exhibitor's town. Again Miss Craig went home for a few hours' sleep, then met the incoming train at the express depot, rushed it to the outgoing train at another station in twenty minutes; and the exhibitor who had booked it for that day got his show in plenty of time.

May Fight New Tax in British Columbia

War Tax Measure Is on Grill—Is Not Really a War Tax—Is Excessive in Amount —Is Unpopular and Unconstitutional.

By Charles S. Thomson, 645 Burrard Street, Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—Altogether unexpected developments have arisen in regard to the War Tax Measure of British Columbia, which may have an effect on the whole Dominion of Canada. At first it seemed as if the amusement caterers were going to work in perfect harmony with the Government in the handling and collection of the tax, but recent events have caused a great deal of dissatisfaction to the former, and this dissatisfaction has now culminated in a crisis in which the theatrical interests have decided to fight the tax tooth and nail in an endeavor to have it very considerably modified, or else abolished altogether.

The reasons for the taking of this stand are several. Firstly, the fact is that the term "War Tax" is a bad misnomer, as the revenue which will be raised is apparently to be devoted to purely provincial purposes, and will not be used for military or other direct war purposes. Secondly, the excessive amount of the tax is a cause of loud complaint. In drawing up the measure, the government proposed to raise by it a sum of approximately eighty thousand dollars per annum from the entire province, but careful statistics show that in its present form, the tax will realize a revenue of two hundred thousand dollars from the city of Vancouver alone. Thirdly, on account of the trouble, confusion and delay arising out of the handling and giving change for one, two, three and four-cent tax tickets, all the principal theaters decided to raise their prices five cents per head and pay the tax themselves. This has aroused an outcry of complaint from the public, already overburdened with the high cost of living.

One of the chief reasons the theaters were compelled to take this step was on account of the fact that they are not to be allowed to sell tax tickets except with the corresponding value of admission tickets. Had they been allowed to sell the tickets in bulk to the public, a lot of confusion would be done away with.

Present Tax Is Unconstitutional.

Fourthly, and lastly, the climax of the whole matter was reached when it was suddenly and almost accidentally discovered that the Provincial Government has no real authority to enforce the act at all. According to the British North America Act, taxation of this kind can only be imposed by the Dominion Government itself, and therefore the war tax is in direct contravention to this Act.

Directly this fact became known to the theatrical managers, legal assistance was called in and a definite course of action decided upon. The outcome is that the services of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, K.C., has been engaged to fight the matter out in the courts, and it will not be dropped until the Act is very considerably amended or else wiped out altogether. At a meeting held recently, a deputation consisting of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, Hector Quagliotti Romano, W. P. DeWees and R. J. Muir, were appointed to meet the prime minister and discuss the whole question before actual legal steps are taken. The meeting was arranged to take place on Sunday, Oct. 7. Full details of what transpires will appear next week.

N. W. Davidson Now Head of Pathe Office.

Vancouver, B. C.—Vancouver has lost a popular figure in the person of Charles Barnard, late manager of the Pathe exchange. Under the call of patriotism, Mr. Barnard, or "Charlie," as he was known to everybody, has left the film business and enlisted for active service in the Royal Flying Corps. Charlie should make an ideal aviator. Energetic, athletic and full of animal spirits, he is just the boy to give the Huns a lively time. The good wishes of all his comrades and associates will go with him in his new and perilous calling. His place at the exchange has been filled by N. W. Davidson, who, although he has only been with us a very short time, has already created a very favorable impression in picture circles.

Hector Quagliotti Daddy of a Girl.

Vancouver, B. C.—If the genial presence of Hector Quagliotti has not been seen so frequently of late in the foyer of the Colonial theater, there is ample excuse for this popular manager's absence. He is in all probability amusing the fine baby girl with which Mrs. Quagliotti presented him a few days ago. The happy parents have been receiving congratulations on all hands on the arrival of this, their second daughter.

"Garden of Allah" Makes Hit.

Calgary, Alberta.—John A. Schuberg, of the Province and Bijou theaters, Winnipeg, wrote H. J. Allen of the Famous Players as follows:

"I have seen the 'Garden of Allah,' and I consider it a wonderful picture."

This subject is booked to play the Province theater, Winnipeg, in the near future.

The official War Pictures, which the Famous Players control for Western Canada, including Alaska, were recently run at the Dream theater, Juneau, Alaska. W. H. Thompson, the manager, advised that these pictures were very well received. They did a big business on the opening day, and the intention was to run the film four days.

Brilliant Dinner to Ruth Roland.

Vancouver, B. C.—Vancouver has just been favored by a flying visit from Ruth Roland, who fulfilled a four days' engagement at Pantage's theater just by way of a preliminary to her appearance here on the screen in "The Neglected Wife," the new Pathe serial which will be shown shortly. Miss Roland quickly won her way into the hearts of the Vancouver public. On the third day of her engagement at Pantages, the leading exhibitors and exchangemen of the city made up a box party at the theater. The entire party then adjourned to the Vancouver Hotel, where a sumptuous banquet was arranged for by Mr. N. W. Davidson on behalf of the Pathe exchange. This memorable gathering broke up in the small hours of the morning, and the revellers departed with the feeling that they had made a personal friend only to lose her again. Those present were as follows: Miss Ruth Roland, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. DeWees, Mr. and Mrs. H. Quagliotti Romano, Mr. and Mrs. W. Hansher, Mr. and Mrs. F. Kerr, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Fauser, Mr. and Mrs. D. G. Walkley Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Corrivean, Mr. and Mrs. P. G. Doyle, Mrs. L. M. Paterson, Mr. and Mrs. J. Smith, Mrs. M. Watkis, Harry Chrimes, F. B. Pantages, N. W. Davidson, Grant Sconllar, Miss Nellie Featherstone and C. S. Thomson.

Park Theater Reopened.

Lynn, Mass.—The M. H. Hoffman Four-Square productions will be carried at the Park theater which was reopened on Monday evening, October 6, after having been remodeled. Several city officials took part in the reopening of the house. The house has a seating capacity of 1,600 and was crowded on the opening night. The policy of the house is to carry a daily feature film of more than unusual prominence as well as a strong program.

Maritime Provinces News

From Alice Fairweather Standard, St. John, N. B.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—The Goldwyn Pictures have had a splendid start in this territory.

I. Sourkes has recently returned from a trip and reports several contracts signed. One with K. Keltie for his theater at Truro, The Strand. This was for both Goldwyn and Brady pictures.

Mr. Keltie has also contracted for the Brady pictures at the People's theater, Yarmouth. He is still in the hospital and has to undergo another operation, but he is keenly interested in his business and his friends all wish him a speedy recovery.

At Digby, Mr. Sourkes visited Jas. C. Cripps, and found that things are starting up there and business good. Mr. Cripps signed for Brady Films.

Chas. Berman, of the Regal Film Co., has lately sent in contracts for Goldwyn with E. F. Lynn, of the Casino, at Sydney, and with N. W. Mason, of the Roseland, New Glasgow, and other theaters.

Fine big posters advertising the Goldwyn Films are placed all over St. John and the campaign has been carried out through the country.

W. H. Golding has just returned from a trip to Boston, where he had several business matters to attend to.

N. W. Nathanson, managing director of the Regal Film Co. and of the St. Denis theater, Montreal, is expected shortly in St. John.

Steve Hurley has been on a trip overseeing several of the theaters controlled by F. G. Spencer of St. John. Mr. Hurley visited Wolfville, Hants Port, Woodstock and Fredericton. At Wolfville he found things going well under the management of Arch. Mason. The ushers of "The Give Service" Club give every satisfaction and look very attractive in their white uniforms with red satin bands and are service-like.

Hants Port has a pretty little theater of 400.

At Kentville, Mr. Hurley visited at a new theater being built by Clarke and Hiltz. It has an up-to-date stage and a very fine lobby. This will be ready in December or January.

At Digby, the Bijou Dream (Jas. Cripps' theater) is doing well.

J. MacDowell, of "Intolerance," has been in the city. This film has been a great success at Charlottetown in the Prince Edward theater, and in Truro, at the Princess.

Halifax, N. S.—At the Casino, Halifax (R. J. McAdam), a patriotic benefit was given Oct. 6th, by the John Stewart Chapter, I. O. D. E. (Daughters of the Empire), showing the first episodes of the new Vitagraph serial, "The Fighting Trail."

St. John, N. B.—Robert Romney, of the Vitagraph exchange, has just returned from Halifax.

Amherst, N. B.—The opening of the Empress, F. S. Spencer's theater at Amherst, will take place Oct. 19th and 20th. An amateur performance for patriotic causes will be held the following week.

Trade News of the Week in Baltimore

Changes at Theaters and Exchanges—Private Showing of "Lust of the Ages"—Among Local and Out-of-Town Exhibitors.

J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

Private View of "Lust of the Ages."

BALTIMORE, MD.—Through the courtesy of G. Horton Gaffney, proprietor of the New Pickwick theater, 115 North Howard street, a premiere screening of "The Lust of the Ages," with Lillian Walker, was given at this playhouse on Sunday night, October 7, for the exhibitors and their friends in Baltimore. Arrangements were made for the affair by H. L. Hommand, of Palmore & Hommend, who will act as Southern representative for the feature. C. Schwartz, Philadelphia representative of the American Photo-Play Company, attended. After the meeting of the Exhibitors' League of Maryland the members gathered at the New Pickwick to view the picture. Just before the last reel was shown Thomas D. Goldberg arose and announced that a collection would be taken up for the benefit of the Tobacco Fund and $20 was raised. About 400 people were present.

New Manager at Belvedere Theater.

Baltimore, Md.—On Monday, October 8, the Belvedere theater, on Belvedere avenue, opposite old Electric Park, was again reopened to the public by C. T. Wilkinson.

Nat Keene Buys Furniture.

Baltimore, Md.—No, Nat Keene, proprietor of the Dixie theater, 312 West Baltimore street, is not going to get married. He just naturally went up to the Lexington theater, 314 West Lexington street, and bought from Mrs. I. W. Putts, the owner, who has now closed down, all the chairs, bric-a-brac and machines and other things that were there. Brother Keene states that he will shortly open up a new house.

Safety First Rally at Lyceum.

Sparrows Point, Md.—Manager Jachins of the Lyceum theater courteously arranged to have this house used for a safety first rally by the Bethlehem Steel Company's men on Tuesday night, October 9. Moving pictures showing first aid meets, ball games and an interesting play entitled "Rule of Reason," secured from the N. Y. Central R. R., were exhibited. An address was made by C. W. Price, field secretary of the National Safety Council.

Nat Glasser Again in Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md.—After having been away from this city for several weeks, Nat Glasser, the popular representative of Sidney B. Lust in Baltimore, has again come among us. He is handling "The Italian Battle Front," "The Whip," and "On Trial."

That Censorship Job.

Baltimore, Md.—There may not be any censorship jobs to hunt, after the next legislature gets through, so the boys now trying to obtain the position of minority member better get all the fun out of it that they can. Indications now seem to point that Governor Harrington will not make the appointment recently made vacant by the death of W. F. Stone until after the election in November.

With the Out-of-Town Exhibitors.

Brunswick, Md.—F. L. Spitzer has now closed the Majestic theater and has opened the Imperial.

Crisfield, Md.—M. Douglas & Co. has now opened the Opera House after giving it a general renovating. They seem to think there is nothing like the Universal service.

Grafton, W. Va.—The Hippodrome theater has now been opened under the management of Mr. Linkman. This theater has a very pretty exterior and seats 700 people. The house has been subjected to great improvements, for steam heat has been installed, a new lighting effect arranged and the whole exterior and interior redecorated and repainted.

Cumberland, Md.—Charles Fisher, who is the proprietor of the Star, Belvedere and Liberty theaters, is now making arrangements to enlarge the Star. Forty feet of ground has been bought directly in the rear of the theater and an addition will soon be built. The house now seats about 400 and it is estimated that the improvement will raise the seating capacity to about 700. It is understood that Mr. Fisher believes in a five-cent program and states that the Universal service gets more money than the big features.

Lawsonia, Md.—This city is three miles from Crisfield, and George W. Lawson, who runs the Asberry theater here, visited Baltimore last week and took a walk on film row. He is very pleased with the Mutual service, it was stated.

Business Notes.

Baltimore, Md.—It is now rumored around that M. Basin will shortly sell the Blue Mouse theater, 28 West Lexington street.

Effective October 15, Manager A. B. Price of the Rialto theater, North avenue, at Linden, Baltimore, announces that the schedule of prices will be raised owing to the increased cost of productions. The schedule reads: Matinees, children under 16, 5 cents; matinees, adults, 10 cents: Saturday matinees, children under 12, 5 cents; adults, 10 cents; after 6 p. m., admission 15 cents.

Through the courtesy of Harry Woods, manager of the Garden theater, Lexington street, at Park avenue, Baltimore, this pretty playhouse was used on Sunday afternoon, October 7, for an Open Forum meeting, at which Lincoln Steffens spoke on conditions in Russia and in the evening the first of the community services was held.

Baltimore, Md.—The Strand theater, 404-6 North Howard street, which is under the management of the Parkway Theater Company, has now changed its policy of weekly runs for pictures to a three-day change.

It is reported that the Maryland Censor Board has passed the Mutual production, "Damaged Goods," for men only. It is also reported that C. Eiseman, manager of the Mutual exchange, smiled serenely when he heard the edict.

That jolly and affable man, Frank B. Spurrier, manager of the Pathe exchange in Baltimore, has now taken on an assistant who is a new recruit to film circles. He is Charles Danneher, and was formerly associated with the National Bank of Baltimore.

Two distinguished parties witnessed the "Italian Battlefront" pictures on Monday night, October 1, when they were shown in Baltimore at Albaugh's theater, on North Charles street. One included the Italian Mission to the United States with G. Schiaffiano, the Baltimore Italian Consul, as host, while the other included General Joseph E. Kuhn and his entire staff of officers of the Seventy-ninth Division of the National Army.

VICTOR.

WHAT'LL WE DO WITH UNCLE? (One Reel—Rel. week of Oct. 22).—The Cast: Henry (Henry Murdock); Flossie (Mildred Davis); Dealer (Milt Uhl). Story by King Vidor. Produced by Wm. Beaudine.

Henry, an artist, finds Flossie in the arms of another and rushes out to look for some violent form of sudden decease. He tries hanging himself to his chandelier, but the flimsy contraptions pulls out, and he lands upon the floor. He goes to the lake and is preparing to drown himself when a peddler offers to buy his body. Henry signs up with him for $20, and delivery at 5.15 p. m., and goes to Flossie's apartment to tell her of the misery she had caused, followed by the peddler.

"But Henry, dear, I was just rehearsing my new play," she explains. Henry makes a break for the window, and Flossie holds up the peddler. A telegram arrives, and Flossie open it.

"Uncle dead. Leaves you a million."

The peddler snatches the wire and volunteers to break the news to Henry and collect his twenty. Henry thinks the man is after him and doubles back to Flossie, and from her he learns the truth. As soon as the dealer arrives, Henry concludes a little arrangement with him.

JOKER.

A WISE DUMMY (One Reel—Rel. Week of Oct. 22).—The cast: Max (Max Asher); Proprietor (Walter Belasco); His Wife (Florence Roberts); The Girl (Gladys Tennyson). Written by George Parker. Produced by Craig Hutchinson.

Max, who is in need of a new suit of clothes, steals a suit from a dummy outside of a clothing store. Then he enters the shop and secures a job as salesman. The customers don't appreciate his new methods, and leave the shop in disgust. This leads to a fight between Max and the boss in which the old man gets the worst of it.

The boss decides to curb Max with a gun. He goes out to get one. Max makes love to the wife of the boss when the latter is away. The boss returns, and the sight of the gun starts Max running, and he never stops till he reaches the park. A young girl is waiting in a boat for her sweetheart, and as she beckons, Max takes the signal for himself and jumps into the boat. She screams, and the passersby come to her rescue and chase Max. He takes to the roofs and falls into the clothing store again.

He looks around and determines to take the place of one of the dummies. Then a young man enters with a sweetheart to buy himself a suit. He selects the one in which Max is hiding. The coat and vest are taken off, and Max is worrying, when the young lady sees another she likes better, and his suspense is at an end. He snatches up the coat, then the girl changes her mind, and says that she likes the first one best. They look for the coat which has disappeared. All might have gone well, if a big spider had not descended right in front of Max's face. He strikes at it, and is discovered and chased out. The young man catches him, and the clothes he has stolen are taken from him by force. He is thrown out of the window into a waste can. Then he sees his old ragged suit on the dummy, and puts it on again.

THE TIGHTWAD (One Reel—Rel. week of Oct. 22) The cast: Hubby, the Tightwad (Wm. Franey); Wifie (Gale Henry); Electrician (Milburn Moranti). Written by Tom Gibson. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Wifie and hubby are arguing about a party wifie wants to give in celebration of their wedding anniversary. Hubby does not want many at the festivity. Wifie wants a big crowd. She also wants a new dress, hat, coat, etc. This arouses the ire of hubby more, and he tells her to wear the clothes he bought her years ago. As hubby leaves for the office he tells his wife to press her dress, and that will make it look better. She looks at the morning paper and sees an ad reading: "You can't give a party without our banquet lights. All the nobility of Europe, Asia, Africa and America are using them. Telephone 1856730 Grand today."

Wifie orders them, and when hubby comes home he finds an electrician engaged in the act of stringing lights all over the house. When hubby is told by the electrician that the decoration is going to entail an expense of $200 upon him, he throws the workman and his tools out of the window. Wifie starts to cry, but hubby tells her that he will fix the lights himself. He climbed the ladder and began, while she went back to her pressing in the kitchen. She found the switch turned off and turned it on again. Hubby receives a good shock, and lets an awful howl. His wifie comes running into the room and takes her husband by the arm. The next instant she began to yell, too, finding herself almost electrocuted by the contact. She just managed to knock the telephone off the hook and yell into it for the electrician. The electrician held up hubby for the two hundred before he would turn off the current, and when wifie returned to the kitchen she found that the iron had burned through dress, table and all. But hubby was a changed soul, and over the phone he then and there ordered an outfit which enabled her to appear that night in the guise of a queen.

BISON.

THE GETAWAY (Two Parts—Rel. Week of Oct. 22).—The cast: Rand Cleburne (Neal Hart); Lucy Harper (Vivian Rich); Jim Harper (Bud Osborne); Bull Carter (Joe Rickson). Produced by Geo. Cochrane.

Bull Carter, the range boss, snatches the book of poetry away from Rand Cleburne and throws it contemptuously on the floor. Rand jumps up angrily and demands that Carter pick up the book. Carter refuses. Rand reaches for his gun, but Carter knocks him down. Rand falls against the Chinese, who is peeling potatoes. He grabs the knife and slashes Carter. Then he dashes out of the house, and mounts Carter's horse.

Carter leads a posse in pursuit of Rand, and the next morning decides to call upon Jim Harper, the sheriff. Rand reaches the foothills. His horse slips and falls into the canyon below. Rand saves himself, but loses his gun and hat, but struggles on until he becomes delirious in the maddening heat. Finally a rainstorm saves him from a horrible death. He goes to Harper's cabin. Having seen Harper leave he enters in search of food, when a young woman appears. Rand crawls into the kitchen through the window and begins stuffing whatever food he can find into his shirt.

He starts to leave when there is a crash. Looking back, he discovers a baby has upset the lamp and set the room on fire. He dashes to the rescue. Lucy, the sheriff's sister, now rushes in, and is almost hysterical in her gratitude. He accepts her offer of supper. Lucy discovers that he is not the outlaw, but decides to aid him.

The posse ride back to the ranch, but Carter goes with Harper to his cabin. Rand is trapped. Lucy hides him in her bedroom, where the baby is asleep. Then she helps Rand to escape by prying some boards from the side of the house. The noise of this operation is drowned by the storm. Rand promises he will visit Lucy as soon as it is safe for him to do so.

L-KO.

FAT AND FURIOUS (Two Parts—Rel. Week of Oct. 22).—The cast: Merta (Merta Sterling); Terrible Ted (Ted Howland); The Foreman (Al Forbes); Babe (Babe Emerson); Merta's Father (Russ Powell); Merta's Mother (Blanche Rose). Directed by Vin Moore.

Mert, the station agent, loved Al the foreman, and Mert's father, the engineer, loved Al's mother, and Al loved Merta, and Al's mother loved Mert's father. However, Mert's father did not love Al, and Al's mother did not love Mert, so that kept things from being monotonous. Al invited Mert to the soda fountain, but when Mert found that he had no money she suspected that the attraction was Babe the dispenser of liquid refreshment. Herein she she wronged Al's honest soul. Al found Mert's father making love to his mother and threw flour at them.

Just then the train arrived, and with it Terrible Ted, the He-Vampire. Ma and Pa were sitting on a truck, and Al sneaked up and tied it to the train as it pulled out. However, the end of the rope caught his foot and he was hauled along the track till Pa cut the rope and they all came home.

Mert was making eyes at Ted. His idea was to get into the safe while she flagged the train. He and his confederates had almost succeeded, when Mert managed to grab the bag in which they had placed the money and pull it up through a trap in the ceiling. They discovered her and pursued her to the roof. She jumped off, but they got her, and put her in a trunk. They then loaded the trunk onto a passing train. Al and Babe went to the rescue on a handcar.

All of them arrived in the Great City, and the trunk with Mert inside was taken to a room. Al and Babe arrived, and Mert, looking out of the window, saw them. She wrote a note which she placed in the water pitcher and threw out of the window. Al snatched a bow and arrow from a child and shot a reply to her. He sent up a rope and Mert lowered the money to him. She then slid down the rope after tying it to the bed, and they all went off on the handcar, pursued by the villains in an auto. But the handcar reached the station first.

Ted was not to be foiled, and he subdued them all with chloroform. She grabbed him, threw him off the train, and then returned with the money.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE RED ACE (Episode 2, The Lure of the Unattainable—Two Reels—Released Week of October 22).—The cast: Virginia Dixon (Marie Walcamp); Patrick Kelly (Bobby Mack); Dr. Hirtzman (Harry Archer); Sergeant Winthrop (Larry Peyton); Steel Heffern (Charles Brindley); Pierre Fouchard (L. M. Wells); "Dutch" Kate (Miriam Selbie); Red Fawn (Yvette Mitchell); Little Bear (Noble Johnson). Written and produced by Jacques Jaccard.

"All right, Kelly. Hold her like that!" exclaims Virginia, and with one leap she springs from the bumper of her car to the rear end of the train. Then Kelly throws her bag to her and climbs up the now stationary train himself. Dr. Hirtzman sees that his plans for detaining her have miscarried, and she notices him without realizing why he attracts her attention. At one of the stations, Hirtzman leaves the train and telegraphs to his lieutenant at Lost Hope, Steel Heffern, that he will arrive that night at eight o'clock. Steel then consults with Pierre Fouchard, the inn-keeper, and "Dutch" Kate and leaves for the Dixon cabin.

Steel and his party arrive at Richard's cabin and bury the body. Then Steel conducts a search for the cache in which Richard hid the platinum. Later he meets Hirtzman at the station, and they disappear in the bushes and trees.

Kelly and Virginia start out in Kelly's canoe and soon land near the mine. As they start along a trail they meet "The Terror," who drops from a tree onto Kelly. Virginia begins running back while Kelly and "The Terror" struggle. The latter soon leaves Kelly, apparently dead, and starts after Virginia, who slips and rolls out of sight, landing in the campfire at Winthrop and Little Bear. Winthrop soothes Virginia, who is hysterical, while Little Bear shoots at the top of the cliff and frightens "The Terror" away.

Virginia tells her story to Winthrop and they hasten to Kelly, who has somewhat revived. When they come to Richard's grave, Virginia kneels by it and prays for strength to perform her mission. "The Terror" watches the scene without being seen. Meanwhile at the Inn, by orders from Fouchard, Kate has donned the garb of a chambermaid and shows Winthrop to a room when he arrives, having left Virginia and Kelly at Richard's cabin. She fusses around the room until Winthrop has to almost put her out.

Virginia and Kelly start to the mine on their horses. Kelly tells her that the mine itself is on an underground river, but where it starts and where it goes, no one has ever known. They have found the cache described in Kelly's letter, but it is empty. As they go along a narrow trail, Kelly riding a horse length ahead of Virginia, they pass underneath a large overhanging branch of a tree. Virginia is lifted into the tree, and her riderless horse goes on.

GOLD SEAL.

THE END OF THE RUN (Three Parts—Rel. Week of Oct. 22).—The cast: Giles Stafford (O. C. Jackson); Jim Durman (George Williams); Portland Pete (George Routh); William Craig (Val Paul); Nona Durman (Helen Gibson); Sheriff (George Berrell). Scenario by George Hively. Produced by J. D. Davis.

Giles Stafford, a brakeman, sees Portland Pete, a hobo, climb into the baggage car, and begin counting a big roll of bills. When Giles asks him if he is trying to beat his fare, Pete retorts that the money he is counting is counterfeit and that he is circulating it for a gang in the East. Giles says that he will try to get rid of some of it for him, as he believes he has a better chance. Pete cashes a bill at a cigar-stand, and later Giles does the same thing. The clerks pays no attention to the bills, but later the counterfeit bills are found, and the clerk remembers that he changed two twenties. The sheriff is notified and a Secret Service man, William Craig, comes to carry on a quiet investigation.

Jim Durman distrusts banking institutions. He hides his money in a fruit jar, in spite of his daughter Nona's protests. He has nearly enough to buy the house in which they live. One day, while they are talking about the money, Giles listens at the window. Giles is in love with Nona, but she repulses him. He breaks into the Durman home, takes the money and substitutes the counterfeit bills, but the band of his hat falls on the floor.

Craig finds that the only definite clues lead to Durman or Giles, and that Giles will bear watching more than Durman, but he hasn't sufficient evidence to arrest him. One evening, Giles stops Nona and begins arguing with her, finally grasping her wrist. Craig goes to the girl's rescue and walks home with Nona, who introduces him to her father.

Counterfeit bills are paid to different merchants by Jim, and Craig decides to talk with Durman, though he has confidence in his honesty. Jim shows him the roll of counterfeit bills from the fruit jar, but, though the evidence is enough to warrant his arrest, Craig lets him go out on his run. Craig arrests Pete and finally exacts a confession from him, and the knowledge that Giles is going to leave his train this trip and meet him in Denver.

Nona has discovered the hat-band on the floor. She jumps on her pony and rides away, meeting Craig and telling him of her discovery. Meanwhile Jim's train is ready to start. Giles swings onto it and climbs to the top. Nona, on her pony, races with the train, while Craig gets a hand-car and starts after the train. Nona lassoes Giles, but he cuts the rope. She at last catches up with the train and, climbing to the top of it, holds Giles up with her revolver. Craig arrives and Giles is arrested.

STAR FEATURETTE.

LITTLE MARIANA'S TRIUMPH (Two Parts—Rel. Week of Oct. 22).—The cast: Mariana (Lena Baskette); Pietro (Frankie Lee); Peter Wren (Fred Montague); Mrs. Murphy (Lydia Yeamans Titus); Signor Kippel (Walter Belasco). Scenario written by Nan Blair. Produced by Marshall Steadman.

Mariana and her little brother, Pietro, were thrown out by the heartless landlord because they could not pay their rent. That night they slept in a barrel with only a friendless dog as a companion. In the morning, their new friend went prospecting for breakfast, and was just getting away from Mrs. Murphy's with some meat when she caught sight of him. She was just about to hit the criminal with a broom when little Mariana threw herself in front of the dog. When Mrs. Murphy heard Mariana's story, she took pity on the destitute children and invited them in to have a bit. She discussed the situation with Father O'Brien, who advised that they be sent to the orphanage. Mariana and Pietro were not used to much in the way of luxury and they made themselves happy in the home.

Some months later the usual semi-annual entertainment was in progress, and Mariana appeared in a dance number. Among the guests was old Peter Wren, for many years ballet master at the Casino. He was delighted with the natural grace of the child, and declared her to be a born dancer. He told the sisters that he would like to take the training of Mariana in hand, and it was arranged that the little girl should take advantage of his offer. She consented on account of the prospect of earning money for Pietro's education. For six months she worked as she had never worked before, and the little family enjoyed happiness.

One day Peter came home and told Mariana that he had lost his position because he was getting too old, and that Signor Kippel, a foreigner, is his successor. Mariana rushed to the theater to confirm the news. There she overheard the manager and Kippel talking of the necessity of finding a good child-dancer for a leading role. Mariana pleaded so hard with the two men that they allowed her to dance for them. They were struck by her skill and grace, and engaged her on the spot for the role. The child told the men that she could not accept the offer unless they engaged her old teacher, and they agreed to hire him. The teacher was Peter, and there never had been such a happy family as the one in the little home that night, when Peter Wren took his violin and he and the two children danced for joy.

NESTOR.

A FIRE-ESCAPE FINISH (One Reel—Rel. Week of Oct. 22).—The cast: Vincent Vichy (Eddie Lyons); Nervy Gus (Lee Moran); Margy (Caroline Vaughn); Her Father (Fred Gamble). Written by F. Palmer. Directed by H. Edwards.

Margy spent the evening packing her trunk, while Vincent arranged for the elopement and father visited with his choice, Nervy Gus, who stayed so late that he actually got a glimpse of the ladder. Then he carries out a fell design. He hires two dagos.

"He'll be on the ladder, and I want you guys to beat him," he tells them. Later Gus climbed up the ladder. The dagos threw a blanket over his head, when he broke loose and confronted them. In the meantime, Vincent and Margy had eloped, and Vincent went hunting for a minister.

Gus enlisted the assistance of father. Vincent had registered at the hotel, but as there was another honeymoon couple in the hotel, and Gus asked for "the honeymooners," they were shown to the wrong room. Then Gus caught sight of Margy's trunk.

"Get inside," suggested the father. So Gus was dragged into their room.

Vincent returned with the Reverend O. N. Quick, and the ceremony was about to be performed when Gus raised the lid.

Vincent seized Margy's hand, and they beat it. Gus chased them assisted by father. The elopers jumped on the fire-escape, pulling the minister after him. Gus seized the end of it and hung on, but the Reverend Quick was equal to the occasion, and he read the two into matrimony as calmly as if he were in his own church, while Gus dangled precariously from the end of the ladder.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE.

ISSUE NO. 42 (October 26).

The first scene in this issue shows the so-called "mining for ice." During the winter snow collects in deep and narrow mountain chasms near Lake Mohonk, N. Y., and forms into ice, which remains the year around. Tons are found there at the end of the hottest summer.

A demonstration of a simple home process for the drying of fruits and vegetables, in order to help in the national food conservation, is given next. These pictures were made by the courtesy of the United States Department of Agriculture. At the end of the scenes we see the wives of the cabinet ministers partaking of a vegetable dinner.

The making of a cavalryman is the number devoted to preparedness. Uncle Sam is training thousands of men for this important branch of the service. In addition to being an expert horseman, the recruit must learn to handle a gun, and we see them at target practice.

Industry is represented by a goldfish "ranch," the latest "infant industry," which flourishes in Southern California. Mrs. Joseph G. Gray has established the most unusual ranch in the counrty, where she raises thousands of gorgeously colored fish every year. Some of the specimens, brought originally from Japan, now sell for eight to ten dollars each.

A miracle in mud by Willie Hopkins, the sculptor, called "Mud Pies," completes the reel.

demands to know what is meant. "That's the Sultan's spy, sent to kill us both if I should fall in love, but, of course, I won't."

Going over to the table Ilma discovers that the pearl is gone and in its place is a piece of marble. Harry and Ilma trace the pearl to Miss Sunderlee's home, and, sneaking in, Harry recognizes Stayne's footprints from the fact that he is wearing Harry's shoes. Coming from behind Harry knocks Stayne down, takes the pearl, and, with Ilma, runs away. Stayne and his pals pursue and trap Harry and Ilma on a little point of land on the edge of the Hudson. Harry sees some boys flying a kite. He and Ilma grab the kite string from the boys and plunge into the Hudson. Stayne and one of his men jump into a little boat near the boathouse. They raise the sail and pursue, guns in hand.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES CORP.

THE TROUBLE BUSTER (Pallas—5 Parts—October 8).—The cast: Michelna Libelt (Vivian Martin); Franz Libelt (James Neill); "Blackie" Moyle (Paul Willis); Tip Morgan (Charles West); Mrs. Camden (Louise Harris); Ruth Camden (Mary Mersch); Mrs. Westfall (Vera Lewis). Directed by Frank Reicher.

Michelna Libelt and her father, Franz, arrive in America from distant Roumania. Franz is taken ill and dies, leaving Michelna alone in the world. "Blackie" Moyle, a young waif of a newsboy, offers the child the protection of his own piano box home. "Blackie" has made this home with his dog, Spunk, in any empty piano box in the rear of a deserted factory. Michelna decides that her curls are a nuisance and with Blackie's assistance cuts them off, secures an old suit of boy's clothing and changes her name to "Mike."

In their spare moments, when not selling papers, the two sit in the piano box and make statuettes out of clay given Blackie by an artist. Tip Morgan, a young crook, discovers that Mike is a girl, and lures her into a room where Blackie finds them. In the fight that follows Blackie is struck on the head with a bottle and loses the sight of both eyes. While he is in the hospital Mike sees an advertisement of an art exhibit, and believing that the twenty-five cents admission entitles her to exhibit her wares, takes two little statuettes that she and Blackie have made and places them on display. One peculiar little character she has named "The Trouble Buster." An art dealer sees in it the same commercial possibilities of popular success as the "Billiken" or "Kewpie," and when Mike is asked as to the ownership, she gives the credit for the successful one to Blackie. The latter is at once made a social pet and his fortune assured, for the little "Trouble Busters" prove extremely popular. He is taken to a famous hospital in France where his sight is restored.

Mike is recognized by one of the patrons of the orphan asylum from which she escaped and flees in terror from the art exhibit. She resumes her girl's clothing and secures a position in a distant part of the country in a large country estate. There she is found again by the crook, Tip Morgan, who threatens to tell that she is the real designer of "The Trouble Buster" unless she gives him money.

Mike has rescued the old piano box and now has it for a playhouse in the garden of her new home. Blackie has recovered and starts out to find Mike. He tells everyone that it was Mike who designed "The Trouble Buster." He finally locates her just as she is being again blackmailed by Tip. Blackie drives the crook away and when Michelna asks him what he came back for, he draws her close to him answering, "For the love of Mike."

METRO PICTURES CORP.

"PARADISE GARDEN" (6 Parts—October 1.—The cast: Jerry Benham (Harold Lockwood); Una Habberton (Vera Sisson); Marcia Van Dyck (Virginia Rappae); Roger Canby (William Clifford); Jack Ballard (Lester Cuneo); Henry Ballard (G. Sprotti); Miss Gore (Catherine Henry). Directed by Fred J. Balshofer. Adapted by Fred J. Balshofer and Richard V. Spencer from the novel, "Paradise Garden," by George Gibbs.

Jerry Benham, ten-year-old heir to the Benham fortune, lives under the care of a guardian in the seclusion of a large estate. Here, according to the provisions of the elder Benham's will, he is to be reared entirely out of sight and knowledge of the feminine sex. After ten years under the tutelage of Roger Canby Jerry develops into a fine specimen of manhood. One day he meets Una Habberton, who has entered the Benham grounds through a broken gate.

Jack Ballard comes to equip Canby for his entrance into city life. Jerry later meets Marcia and becomes deeply infatuated with her.

When on a vacation Una visits "Paradise Garden" and is discovered. Marcia insinuates that there was "unconventional morality" in the girl's former visit to the manor.

At Marcia's coming-out ball Jerry is disillusioned. He kisses Marcia tenderly, but she openly admits her disappointment in his failure to respond to her own passionate demonstrations. Jerry later surprises Jack and Marcia in a passionate love scene, and his rage culminates in a fight with Jack. He then goes back to the estate.

Time heals the wounds of Jerry's grief, and a new man is wrought. Thoughts of Una come more and more into his mind, and he takes up his old life on the estate. Canby tells all to Una. He also tells the girl of Jerry's love for her, asking her forgiveness. Una comes one day to Paradise Garden, and where they first met. Jerry and Una, forgetting all unhappy events of the past, are united in a perfect love.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

THE FIGHTING TRAIL (Episode No. 4—"The Other Half"—Two Parts—Oct. 1).—The cast: John Gwyn (William Duncan); Nan Lawton (Carol Holloway); Hendrik Von Bleck (Walter Rodgers); Cut Deep Rawls (George Holt); Shoestring (Joe Ryan).

Gwyn and Nan come upon the outlaws burning Yaqui Joe's feet and cutting him with their knives. Gwyn rushes at the men and a fight follows. It is going against Gwyn when Nan comes up and frees Yaqui Joe. He tries to shoot Shoestring, one of the outlaws, but misses his aim. The outlaw fires at Nan, but Yaqui Joe leaps between them and is killed by the bullet. Gwyn meantime hurls his adversary over a cliff and Shoestring flees, pursued by Gwyn and Nan.

In their absence, Von Bleck and Cut Deep enter the home of Don Carlos seeking the missing half of the chart to the mine. They find the body of Don Carlos, but not the chart, and set fire to the house. Nan and Gwyn enter the house and are trapped there by the outlaws who demand the half of the chart as the price of their lives. Gwyn refuses and the flames surround them in the house, apparently dooming them to death.

THE FIGHTING TRAIL (Episode No. 5—"Torrent Rush"— Two Parts—Oct. 8).—The cast: John Gwyn (William Duncan); Nan Lawton (Carol Holloway); Cut Deep Rawls (George Holt); Shoestring (Joe Ryan); Hendrik Von Bleck (Walter Rodgers).

The outlaws offer the imprisoned pair their lives in return for the mine chart, but are refused and the house burns to the ground. The outlaws ride away believing that Gwyn and Nan have perished. They managed to escape, however, through a subterranean passage, and reach the Lost Mine Hotel.

The next day they set out in search of the villains, who at the same time start to locate the mine. Gwyn meets Von Bleck and accuses him of murder and arson and forces him to admit that Cut Deep has the other half of the chart. He starts after Cut Deep leaving Nan to guard Von Bleck. He gets the paper from Cut Deep and returns in time to save Nan from Von Bleck.

Nan and Gwyn then set out for the mine over a wild trail and Nan falls into a mountain tor-

DEAD-SHOT BAKER (Five Parts—Oct. 15).—The cast: Dead-Shot Baker (William Duncan); Evelyn Baldwin (Carol Holloway); Lightnin' Bug (J. W. Ryan); Cherokee Hall (S. E. Jennings); Bartender (R. L. Rogers); Old Baldwin (Otto Lederer); Postmaster (Charles Wheelock). Author, Alfred Henry Lewis. Director, William Duncan.

Dead-Shot Baker is sheriff of Wolfville and the terror of outlaws. He drives three of them from town and, to get revenge, they hold up the stage, kill the messenger and carry two girls away to the hills. Baker and his posse overtake the bandits in a mountain battle and rescue the girls, one of whom is the beautiful and willful daughter of a Wolfville character, once a wealthy miner, but now a penniless drunkard. He is killed in the battle and the girl, Evelyn, is a helpless charge in the rough camp. She refuses the efforts of her friends to get her employment and finally the sheriff marries her.

The girl is anything but a loving wife, and is disliked by nearly everybody. The only person she shows any interest in is a dapper Easterner, and they are much together, much to the distress of Baker and the disgust of his friends. Baker blames himself for marrying such a girl and his love for her is so deep he invites death that she may be free to marry the postmaster. He leads his posse against a noted band of rustlers and in a fight with their leader falls to apparent death over a cliff.

Returning to camp for reinforcements, the news of Baker's death rouses Evelyn, who never held more than a passing fancy for the postmaster. Filled with remorse, she leads the posse back into the hills, the outlaws are routed and Baker is found and nursed back to life and happiness by Evelyn.

ARTCRAFT PICTURES CORP.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE (Five Parts).—The cast: George Washington Magee (George M. Cohan); Mary Norton (Anna Q. Nilsson); Myra Thornhill (Elda Furry); Mrs. Rhodes (Corene Uzzell); Mayor Cargan (Joseph Smiley); Lou Max (Armand Cortes); Thomas Haydan (C. Warren Cook); John Bland (Purnell Pratt); Hall Bentley (Frank Losee); Peter, the Hermit (Eric Hudson); Chief of Police Kennedy (Carlton Macy); Langdon, U. S. S. S. (Paul Everton); Quimby (Russell Bassett).

George Washington Magee, a writer, arrives at Baldpate Inn to win a bet from its owner by beginning a novel at midnight one day and [illegible] by midnight the next. Magee has hardly gone to his room when there enters John Bland, "right hand man" of a street railway builder, with two hundred thousand dollars. Jim Cargan, mayor of Reuton, is to call for the money and to give a franchise to the railway builder. Thomas Haydan. Surprised by the novelist, Bland presses his revolver against the digestive organs of Magee, who declines to be frightened because, as he remarks, "I've written this situation over and over again." He entraps the bribe giver, and locks him in a room, only to be confronted by an intruder with a third key—Mary Norton, a newspaper reporter on the trail of the bribe story. Mary is accompanied by Mrs. Rhodes, the fiancee of the mayor. George falls in love with the reporter.

Myra Thornhill, working in conjunction with Lou Max, accomplice of the mayor, lets herself in with a fourth key, and is toying with the safe combination, when the author bids her stand and deliver. Myra persuades him of the honesty of her motives, and he promises to get the money for her. The same promise he makes later to Mary. Then the inn is invaded by Cargan, and Max, and the escaped Bland. Magee secures the incriminating roll, turns it over to Mary, and, outwitting the villains, compels them to sit in a semi-circle staring at the audience until the telephone shall notify him that Mary is at the office of her newspaper.

Facing defeat and imprisonment, the scoundrels turn on one another, Haydan calls Bland a blockhead. Cargan accuses Max of having "double-crossed" him and Myra admits she meant to "triple-cross" Max.

A telephone call from Mary announces that Mrs. Rhodes has stolen the money. Max shoots Myra for "squealing" and the shot brings the chief of police. The money is located, the officer of the law takes possession and telephones his wife to meet him in Canada. With a cry of rage Peter, the half-crazed hermit, snatches the money and throws it into the fire. Then the dead Myra promenades around the balcony when Magee is about to collapse, the owner of Baldpate arrives and informs him that the affair has been a melodrama staged by himself in order to win the bet, the participants being members of a theatrical company. In the next scene we see Magee finishing his book at the stroke of twelve and learns the entire proceedings have been his imaginations which are embodied in the book.

THE SPREADING DAWN (Six Parts—Oct. 21).—The cast: Patricia Mercer Vanderpyl (Jane Cowl); Anthony Vanderpyl (Orme Caldara); Bentley Vanderpyl (Harry Springer); Mrs. Cornelia LeRoy (Florence Billings); LeRoy (Henry Stephenson); Mrs. Mercer (Alice Chapin); Young Lizzie (Helen Blair); Col. Lee (Cecil Owen); Georgina Vanderpyl (Mabel Ballin); Captain Lewis Nugent (Mrs. Edith McAlpin). Adapted from the story by Basil King. Directed by Larry Trimble.

Georgina Vanderpyl wishes to marry her soldier lover before he leaves for France, and is prevented from doing so by her aged aunt, who dominates the family and is a disbeliever in love. Challenged as to her right to disavow the existence of love the aunt reveals to her niece the story of her own romance in years before.

Through her diary, she relates how Patricia Mercer Vanderpyl, belle of New York society, married her soldier lover at the outbreak of the Civil War. In the midst of her happiness, her husband, back on a furlough, meets with death under circumstances that apparently revealed him as faithless, and the proud girl, never relenting, lives on into old age with the firm conviction that love is a mockery. There is a letter which she had never opened and Georgina insists that it should be read. It is the last word from Patricia's dead husband and reveals the truth about his death. Convinced that she had misjudged him, the aged Patricia sanctions the marriage of her niece and then goes to meet Anthony in the spreading dawn.

bury herself in such a wilderness is criminal." In the meantime Carl Randolph drifts into the town. The Fourth of July celebration is taking place. One of the Mexicans takes an American flag from the wall and stamps upon it. Randolph shoots the man and makes his escape. He reaches Christine's home and seeks refuge there. When the Mexicans come Randolph pleads with Christine to give him up, saying he is a failure. After misdirecting the Mexicans, Christine hands Randolph the money she has saved for a piano and tells him to go back East and make good. Randolph takes the money, saying that she has given him a new inspiration. The Mexicans shoot Brent in mistake for Randolph, and the physician declares the wound has paralyzed Brent and he will never be able to walk again.

Christine earns a living by singing in the saloon. Maxwell comes with a minister. He urges her to marry him, saying he can furnish the money with which to cure her father. Christine consents, though she says that she does not love him. A shot is heard. Brent has committed suicide.

Randolph, back East, is becoming a successful attorney. He writes to Christine but the letter is returned to him, as she has moved, leaving no address. Maxwell, hearing of Randolph's success, offers him a position as general counsel for the Maxwell Ammunition Company. Randolph accepts, and comes to Maxwell's house during a dinner party. He finds Christine.

Brinkerhoff, an inventor, brings plans of a valuable invention. Maxwell tries to steal the plans. Brinkerhoff discovers him. Maxwell kills Brinkerhoff and throws his body in the river. Mrs. Brinkerhoff is convinced that Maxwell has made away with her husband. When Randolph questions Maxwell he says: "She has no proof, besides she has no money to push her claim. So why worry" Randolph takes up Mrs. Brinkerhoff's case. He places her in the Maxwell home. She finds the copies of the plans. Maxwell decides desperate measures are necessary to get Randolph off the track. He tells his wife to buy off Randolph. Christine, possessed of a desire to test Randolph's love, consents.

Christine asks Randolph to call on her at once. She urges him to drop the Brinkerhoff case, if he loves her. "God knows I love you," replies Randolph, "but I cannot do what you ask." He goes and Christine rejoices. Maxwell, who has been watching the proceedings, cries: "You love him." He strikes Christine. "You coward" cries Christine. "I could almost believe you killed Brinkerhoff." "And what if I did?" replies Maxwell. Mrs. Brinkerhoff, who has been eavesdropping, hears this partial confession and kills Maxwell. The jury in Mrs. Brinkerhoff's trial is swayed by sympathy for the defendant and brings a verdict of not guilty. Christine promises her that her husband's invention shall go to her, and Christine and Randolph are happily reunited.

THE BURGLAR (5 Parts—October 29). The cast: William Lewis (Carlyle Blackwell); Editha (Madge Evans); Alice Hamilton (Evelyn Greeley); Ned Hamilton (Victor Kennard); John Hamilton (Jack Drumier); Fan Hamilton (Rosina Henley) Mr. Lewis (Richard Clarke); Mrs. Lewis (Justine Cutting); Burns (Harry La Motte); Rural Policeman (Henry Drehle); Paul Benton (Frank Mayo). Scenario written by Virginia Tyler Hudson. Directed by Harley Knoles.

Will Lewis is a college student, living with his parents in the town where the college is located. He is a fun-loving young man, and one night when his father has locked him in his room with a strict admonition to study, Will escapes and joins a party of reckless young people. They go by automobile to the country home of some people who are gone for the summer. They break into the house and make free with the wines stored in the cellar. At the height of their revelry the village policeman comes to the home. All but Will and Steve turns make their escape.

Will is told by the officer, who recognizes him, that he is under arrest. He and Steve respond by throwing a sheet over the officer's head and trying to tie him up. In the struggle a shot is fired. The officer falls. "You've killed him, Will!" cries Steve as the two of them hurry away. Will gets out of the town before the authorities apprehend him. In another city Will falls in love with Alice Hamilton. Paul Benton, editor of the town paper, is a rival for her love, but she favors Will. She promises to marry Will. Benton objects to the marriage, saying that Will is afraid to reveal his past. The marriage is performed and John Hamilton, Alice's father, secures a position for Will as paying teller in the bank.

A daughter is born to the couple, and Will feels that his past has been lived down. But Steve Burns, now a thoroughly tough character, comes into the town intent upon robbing the bank where Will is employed. Burns surprises Will at his home one day and declares that he will tell everything about Will's past unless the latter aid him in the robbery of the bank. Fearful of losing his happiness Will consents. Will opens the safe. The town policeman enters the bank. Burns is caught and says that Will put him up to the robbery. He also tells everything he knows about Will.

Will is tried and convicted and sentenced to twenty years in the penitentiary. He tells his wife that he has been called on a long business trip. Benton seeks to keep the story out of the newspapers and is successful in every case but one, which falls into the hands of Alice, Will's wife. She is horrified. Some time later Will escapes from the penitentiary. The prison guards see him, and as he swims across the river they shoot at him. Will dives and the guards are under the impression that they have killed him. Will's wife is informed of her husband's death.

Time passes and Alice marries Paul Benton, and with her baby moves with him to another city. Unable to earn a living Will takes to robbery. One night he enters the home where Alice, Benton and Will's daughter, Editha, live. He stuffs his pockets with the silverware and is about to make off when he is surprised by Editha. She is unafraid. When Will informs her that he is a burglar she promises to give him her things provided he will not awaken her father and mother. Upon her return Will finds in the trinkets she hands him a locket containing a photograph of her mother. Realizing that she is his daughter Will clasps her to him.

Benton and Alice, aroused by the noise, come downstairs and find Editha in Will's arms. Overcome by the knowledge that she has married another man while her first husband is still living, Alice is prostrated. Will leaves the house. Outside a policeman sees him, and as Will instinctively runs to make his escape the officer follows and finally shoots. The shot hits Will and he falls to the ground. Benton runs out and helps Will into the house. The officer follows. The officer is informed as to Will's identity. "He never killed that village cop at all," says the policeman. "Steve Burns, who was with Will at the time the copper was shot, has confessed that it was he and not Will who shot him."

Will, rejoicing in his vindication, caught his daughter to him for the last time before he succumbed to the wound and died.

BUTTERFLY.

SOCIETY'S DRIFTWOOD (Five Parts—Oct. 22).—The cast: Lena Rogers (Grace Cunard); Tison Grant (Charles West); Judge Grant (Joseph Girard); Paul Rogers (William Musgrave). Written by Harvey Gates. Directed by Louis Chaudet.

Lena Rogers and her brother Paul, orphans, have suffered from poverty. She earns their living as a fortune-teller, Paul being the bally-hoo. A woman's pocketbook is stolen, and Paul and Lena accused. Paul takes the blame, and is sentenced to four years in the penintentiary. Lena knows this means death to her brother, who is in ill health, and goes to plead with the judge, but he threatens to have her arrested for annoying him, and she vows revenge. In her tent she had once seen Tison Grant, brother to the judge, who is a reporter. Tison urges his brother to show leniency toward Paul.

Time passes. Judge Grant has become a corporation lawyer and is now engineering a crooked deal. Tison is a city journalist, and is exposing the deal, but can't lay his finger on the man higher up.

Lena, through slaving and scheming, finally becomes forewoman of a modiste shop. She meets Judge Grant and he falls in love with her. She discovers Grant is the brains of the graft deal.

Lena meets Tison. Both fall in love. Paul writes a letter depicting his misery. Lena accepts the judge's proposal and promises to meet him the next day, but she marries Tison. They return to the Grant home. There is a terrible scene in which Lena discloses the judge as the franchise grafter. Tison hesitates in exposing his brother and Lena upbraids him furiously. Enraged, she leaves the house. Tison gives the judge the preference of prosecution or leaving the state.

When Lena arrives at her own apartment she finds Paul, who has just been released. He sees a note from the judge with his address.

The judge is leaving the house when Paul enters and fires at him. He falls just as Lena bursts into the room. She snatches the pistol and tells Paul to make his escape. Tison rushes down the stairs and thinks Lena has shot his brother. A policeman who has seen Paul enters and Lena is willing to sacrifice herself, when Paul is seized with a fit of coughing. Before they reach him Paul dies from a hemorrhage. The policeman finds Grant is not dead, and Lena's sorrow brings her closer in the affections of Tison and affords a means of reconciliation.

ANYTHING ONCE (Five Parts—Oct. 8).—The cast: Theodore Crosby (Franklyn Farnum); Senorita Dolores (Claire Du Brey); Dorothy Stuart (Marjory Lawrence); Mrs. Stuart (Mary St. John); Sir Mortimer Beggs (Sam De Grasse); Waughnt Moore (Lon Chaney); Getting Mohr (H. M. Thurston); "Horned Toad" Smith (Raymond Wells); Jethro Quail (William Dyer). Scenario written by William Parker. Directed by Joseph De Grasse.

Theodore Crosby's eccentric uncle willed his vast herds of cattle and the ranges to his sportively inclined nephew upon two conditions: he must live upon the ranch six months, taking possession at once, and at the end of that time must marry his distant cousin, Dorothy Stuart. Teddy arranged with Dorothy to fulfill the part Dan Cupid was to play in the settlement—for Teddy and Dolly had been matrimonially inclined for some time.

Sir Mortimer Beggs, a fortune-seeking Englishman, had made a hit with "Ma" Stuart; but Teddy and Dolly believed that they could make Sir Mortimer sick of ranch life within a few weeks and thus clear the way to realizing the fullness of the legacy. But in the persons of "Horned Toad" Smith and Senorita Dolores there was opposition they had never figured on.

Into the quiet of Teddy's bachelor apartments the Senorita broke like a Kansas cyclone. She announced to Teddy that she had come to abide in his abode. Teddy declared that he would change his address forthwith to Bar X Ranch, Arizona. So saying he departed.

"Horned Toad" Smith was looking for Teddy, having been told that the Easterner was dressed in "spike tailed" coat and trimmings to match. But when Smith came up with the dress suit another man had it on—Teddy had outshot the Westerner at target practice and won a swap of clothes. The plot to drive Teddy out of town failed because of the fact that it was Teddy who saved "Horned Toad" Smith from annihilation at the hands of a host of booze-inspired sportsmen.

Senorita Dolores had preceded Teddy to the ranch and was established there when he drove out from town. A little later "Ma" Stuart and her daughter arrived, accompanied by Sir Mortimer Beggs, and the scandal that arose from Dolores being established as the first lady of Bar X Ranch nearly cost Teddy his earthly happiness. But Dorothy believed his story and the twain plotted to unravel the conspiracy that had been started for the purpose of driving Teddy from the ranch.

By numerous exhibitions of skill and daring, plus a genial manner that won the Westerners to his side of the argument, Teddy managed to out-general the fiery Senorita Dolores and completely frustrate the plans "Horned Toad" Smith had devised to frighten Teddy back to the East from whence he came. The triumphant denouement comes when "Horned Toad" Smith and his gang steal Dorothy, and are overcome by Teddy's counter attacks and horseback strategy.

THOU SHALT NOT STEAL (5 Parts—October 14). The cast: Mary Bruce (Virginia Pearson); Madeline (Claire Whitney); Henry Bruce (Eric Mayne); Mrs. Bruce (Mathilde Brundage); Lord Haverford (John Goldsworthy); Roger Benton (Robert Elliott); Paul Lechmere (Martin Faust); Detective Farrel (Lem F. Kennedy); The Reporter (Danny Sullivan); Mrs. Jones (Mrs. Patrick Foy); The Valet (Victor De Linsky); Servant (William Burton). Staged by William Nigh.

Mary Bruce is a thoroughly American girl, who has been wooed for some time by Lord Haverford, but who loves Roger Benton, her father's secretary. Haverford turns up at the Bruce home one day with a fortune. He wants to unite his money with the Bruce family. Bruce himself is sorely in need of funds. To gain Mary's consent to wed him the nobleman places $100,000 at her father's disposal. The money is put into a safe, the combination of which is known only to Bruce, Benton and Mary.

Mary is horrified at the bargain her father has struck. To save herself from Lord Haverford she steals the $100,000 that night. As she leaves the office she encounters several persons in the hall. A hand seizes the bills she is carrying. She fights to retain her grasp, but is unsuccessful. She does succeed in biting the wrist of the person hidden by the darkness.

Mary, Benton and her father are suspected when the theft is discovered. The solution comes from a most unexpected quarter. Dr. Steele, a detective, who has been working on another case, proves Haverford guilty of murder and tells Mary that the nobleman's fortune came from the slain man. Steele then produces the $100,000 which Mary has been seeking. In watching Haverford he had seen her rifle the safe. It was he who had taken the money from her. The marks on his wrist are convincing of the truth of his revelation.

MAGDA (Eight Parts—October).—Magda is a beautiful girl with a gift for music. The pastor of her father's church falls in love with her. He gets her father's consent to ask her to marry him, but Magda doesn't love him. The father tells her that she must either marry the pastor or leave his house. Magda leaves his house and goes to a neighboring city as companion to an old lady. The father closes his door to the girl.

Ten years later at a great musical festival in the town, Magda, now a great singer, known as Maddalene dall'Orto, appears. She is wealthy and famous, and made much of by the governor and other high officials. Her father announces he will forgive her and insists that she leave the hotel and stay under his roof. Once under his roof, he begins again to treat Magda the great singer as he treated Magda the girl of sixteen. The pastor, whom she refused and who still loves her, has been instrumental in getting her to return to her father's home. Magda does so on the condition that her father will ask no questions about her outside life. The father resents this condition. Magda shocks their staid friends. She amazes them by her wealth, offers to dower his sister Marie so that she can marry well.

Magda meets at her father's house the man who, years ago when she was alone and friendless, studying music, betrayed her. He is now a rising man and anxious to appear immaculate in the eyes of his fellow-townsmen. In his interview with Magda, he learns for the first time that he has a child by her, that to support this child from starving Magda, in her early days, sang in cafes and anywhere to earn money. The father enters, learns there is something between them, gets the truth from Magda, determines to challenge Von Keller, and avenge his honor and that of his daughter. Von Keller tells him he is willing to marry Magda. Magda doesn't want this. She can't make these provincial people understand that she has a tremendous career in the world of art. Her father insists in treating her as an erring daughter who must be guided by him for the best.

Magda finally, out of love for her father and at the persuasion of the pastor, consents. Von Keller tells her that she must give up her career, and informs Magda that he doesn't intend to recognize their child. Magda's indignation flares up at this. She orders Von Keller from the house—utterly refusing to disown the child. His father gives his word of honor to Von Keller that his daughter will do as he wishes. He tries to force Magda to do this, locks the door and threatens to kill her and himself unless she consents. As he aims the pistol at Magda, he has a stroke of paralysis and dies. Magda is left free to live her own life.

The Man who has done more than any other individual for the Motion Picture Industry.

Of him, Mr. Robert Grau, in his book, "The Theater of Science," wrote: "Edwin S. Porter will go down in the history of Motion Pictures as the father of the present form of photoplay."

Twenty-two years ago in the season of 1895-1896, Edwin S. Porter began his career in the motion-picture business by operating the Edison Vitascope at Koster & Bial's Theater, New York, this being the first exhibition of motion pictures in any theater in the United States.

In 1897 he began manufacturing Motion-Picture Projectors—machines that were remarkable, in that they contained features now accepted as standard by all manufacturers to-day, such as the Single-Pin Movement, Movement Immersed in Oil-Bath, Outside Shutter, Rollers instead of velvet to keep film on sprockets, while his Framing Device is used on some American and on all European machines. His machines were in use in the houses of the Proctor and the Percy Williams Circuits and also in the Eden Musee, where he met Francis B. Cannock, of whose career we gave a few glimpses last week.

In 1898 Porter and Cannock designed and built the machine that was used in the Eden Musee for over twelve years.

In 1899 Porter was engaged by the Edison Manufacturing Company to design Projectors, Cameras and Perforating and Printing Machines.

He was also manager of motion-picture production for this company until 1909. Scenics and comics from 50 to 300 feet long had been the only subjects up to that time; but he produced the first photoplay as we know it to-day, with a definite plot, elements of suspense, heart interest, etc.

In 1902 he produced "The Great Train Robbery," a film play that will never be forgotten and which opened up a new era in motion pictures.

In technique his first pictures have hardly been surpassed to this day. There were switchbacks, close-ups, double exposures, dissolving one scene into another, and fade-outs.

He was the first to take pictures at night, to use back lighting, silhouettes, fireplace scenes, and the first to take stop-motion pictures, from which the animated cartoons and other trick pictures developed.

In 1909, with Francis B. Cannock, he invented the Simplex Projector and organized the Precision Machine Company.

In 1910 he organized the Rex Motion Picture Company, whose productions Mr. Robert Grau, in the book mentioned above, pronounced the most artistic of that time.

In 1912 he was one of the prime movers in the mergers of independent companies into the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

In 1913, realizing that the single-reel film had reached its limit, he determined to produce five- and six-reel pictures, with well-known stage stars in them, and for that purpose he, with Joseph Engel and Adolph Zukor, organized the Famous Players Film Company, of which Porter was the General Manager and Treasurer until, in 1915, he disposed of his interests and retired from the production end.

Now Edwin S. Porter is putting into the Simplex the result of practical experience extending over a period of Twenty-two years

What we have told you goes to show, that the Simplex is made by men who know.

It's not the way they go in it's the way they come out of your theatre that denotes the value received for their money—the quality of your performance.

Wagner WHITE LIGHT Converters

When a customer leaves your house, you expect him to return. The programme attracted him, but it's the quality of the projection that makes a pleased or a disgruntled patron.

And you can have the best projection as cheaply as the poorest kind if you use a White Light Converter. Buying a Wagner Converter is an investment that pays dividends at the ticket window.

Let us send you Bulletin 109.

The New Service Bureau of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry Abolishes Agency and Commission Abuses for Artists, Directors, Assistants, Cameramen and All Other Workers in Motion Pictures.

No longer is it necessary for those seeking employment of producers or distributors of motion pictures to pay exorbitant or double commissions or put up with any of the evils which have caused them loss and annoyance in the past.

All of the important producing and distributing organizations are now members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and they have organized a Service Bureau to protect the thousands of men and women who wish to work for them.

Through this Service Bureau you may register without cost and one registration will be known to the entire industry, and each member of the Association will utilize the Service Bureau in quest of future employees, players, artists and technical aids.

The Service Bureau Ends All of the Abuses and Humiliations to Which Players and Other Employment Seekers Have Been Subjected.

The Service Bureau will do away with the granting of special favors to agents; of the payment of extra commissions, the insults suffered by feminine artists, and the unscrupulous casting and employment agencies operated outside the control of producing companies.

Mr. Wales Winter, a man of proven reputation and integrity, has been placed in charge of the Service Bureau and this important work under strict instructions to conduct his negotiations in arranging for the employment of those registered in the Bureau upon a fair and equitable basis.

It is important that all artists and those seeking employment remember that all of the important producing and distributing companies will seek their employees through the Service Bureau which is located in

Suite 320-321 Longacre Bldg., 1476 Broadway, New York

The following companies are members of the National Association and active participants in the operation of the Service Bureau.

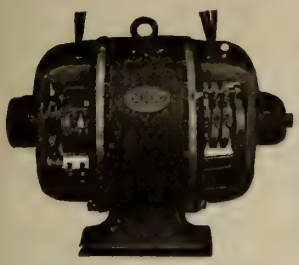
"MARTIN" ROTARY CONVERTER



FOR REAL SUN-LIT PICTURES

PERFECT REEL DISSOLVING

The voltage of the "MARTIN" polyphase converter is maintained constant, so that the starting of the second arc does not disturb the light given by the first, making the dissolving of the reels as simple as if the arcs were operated in a Direct Current district. Our emergency panel does away with expensive compensarcs and cuts the wiring and installation cost in half.

SPEER ALTERNO CARBONS

Pictures projected with Speer "Alterno" Carbons give positive assurance of Intense Illumination—Noiseless Projection—Wanderless Arc—A Bright, Flickerless, Eye-Resting Light and the Elimination of all A. C. Difficulties.

No necessity of buying new housing, new holders or in fact—any additional equipment. Speer "Alterno" Carbons produce a pure white light and steady burning with the use of the apparatus you now have in your booth.

The results are almost unbelievable. For that reason all A. C. operators and exhibitors should investigate the wonderful possibilities of Speer "Alterno" Carbons. A. C. houses can now assure their patrons that "ghosts," "dark-spots" and "aggravating shadows" are all eliminated. It means a complete transformation of former alternating current conditions.

The Public
The Theatre Owner
The Operator

are all affected by the character of the projection lens.

The Public wants clear and sharply defined pictures, for which a good lens is essential.

The Theatre Owner wants to make money, and to do so he must please the Public by showing clear and sharply defined pictures through a good lens.

The Operator wants to get the best possible results to please the Public, the Theatre Owner and himself, and requires a good lens to do it.

The projector that is equipped with a lens, which embodies the latest developments in the science of projection, will please the Public, the Theatre Owner and the Operator.

Marlux

The Marlux costs no more than any good lens, and gives better results.

A SOLDIER BOY SINGS

"I want tobacco just as much as bandages and socks,
So drop your contribution in my old tobacco box!"

SEND 25 CENTS, and we will forward a "comfort package" of tobacco to some soldier or sailor at the front—enough to keep him in tobacco for a week. Or SEND $1—it keeps a fighting man happy for a month. Tobacco is the only thing that cheers the soldier boy through the dreary hours in the trenches. He'll probably send you a post card in acknowledgment—a war souvenir you will treasure. Send your "Smokes" at once—he needs them badly. Every cent contributed goes for tobacco for our soldiers and sailors abroad.

These new United States Government Bonds are issued in denominations of $50 and multiples thereof. The United States Treasury will pay you interest at 4% per annum, payable semi-annually.

EASY PAYMENTS—You can pay 2% on your bonds when you make your application, 18% November 15, 40% December 15, and 40% January 15, 1918. For example, when you buy a $50.00 bond you can pay $1 now, $9 November 15, $20 December 15, and $20 January 15. YOU CAN GET YOUR BOND AS SOON AS YOU HAVE FULLY PAID FOR IT. Liberty bonds are the best security in the world. They are readily saleable and are practically exempt from taxation for people of moderate incomes. The law permits their conversion into bonds bearing higher interest should such bonds be issued by the Government in the future.

THOS. H. INCE presents
Charles RAY

From the Novel by Ridgwell Cullum

Another One Over!

Charles Ray's first Paramount Picture, presented at the Rialto (N. Y.) during the week of October 14th, proves beyond a doubt our claim that he is the most popular young star of his type.

From the "New York Tribune"

"Of all the young leading men none is so easy on the optic nerve as Ray. His fine, easy, sane acting is a balm to the wounded feelings of one who is compelled to sit through a score of reels of pompous, over-dressed heroes and giggling, cute ingenues.

"Whoever directed this picture avoided all of those things which spoil so many pictures for those who demand realism. Thomas Ince presented Ray in his present vehicle, but he could probably present him in "East Lynne" if he wished to do so, and still have him a success. In other words, you may hitch any sort of wagon to a star, if the star be of sufficient magnitude."

Do you get that last sentence—"you may hitch any sort of wagon to a star if the star be of sufficient magnitude."

ELAINE HAMMERSTEIN
IN
"THE CO-RESPONDENT"

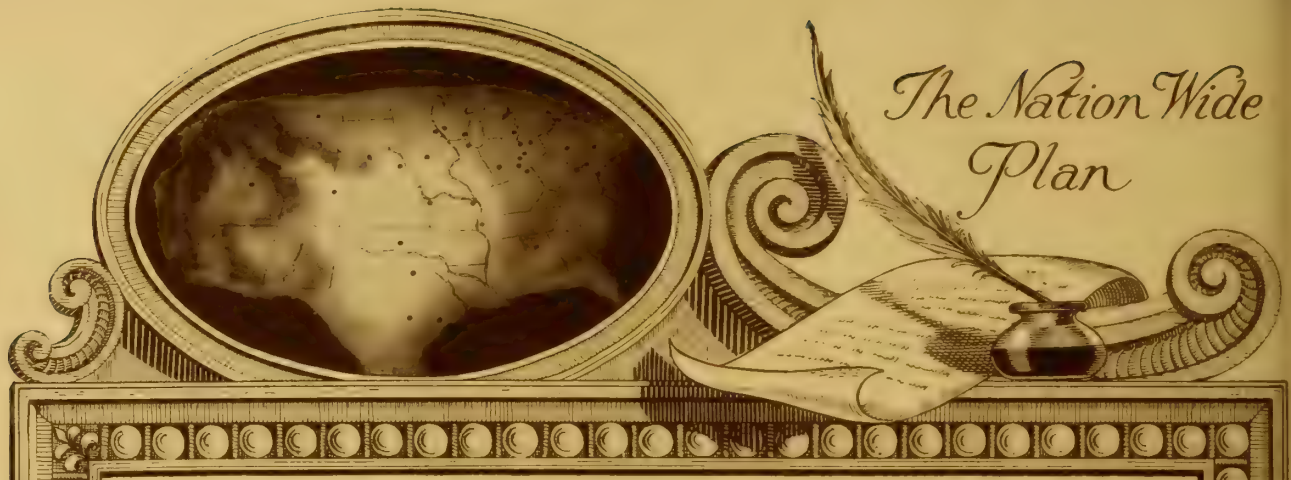
LOCK-STEPPED with the purchase of "The Co-Respondent" from Messrs. Lee Shubert, Arthur Hammerstein and its able producer, Ralph Ince, Jewel Productions, Inc., herewith announces the appropriation of a publicity dollar for every purchase dollar in behalf of what it knows to be one of the noteworthy photo-plays of the year.

NOW running with brilliant success at The Broadway Theatre —known to everyone in the business as the testing ground of American photo-plays, "The Co-Respondent" gives Miss Elaine Hammerstein, ably supported by Wilfred Lucas, the widest opportunity of her striking career. Aptly, "The Co-Respondent" is a modern metropolitan drama which fits this favorite of the country's most particular metropolis like a silk glove.

DOES the appropriation seem unusual? It is exactly that— for "The Co-Respondent" is inherently worth every penny of it and Jewel Productions, Inc., is well able to spend the money —for we purchase or book only those few, rare plays which we know will succeed. We have no failures to write off — no error-born necessity to retrench.

AS the natural result, we can afford to offer you—as we now offer you with "The Co-Respondent"—the maximum amount of free publicity on the best staged plays which genius has conceived.

"The Co-Respondent" is from the Stage play by Alice Leal Pollock and Rita Weiman



Intensive Publicity - - from City to Hamlet

IN behalf of "The Co-Respondent," Jewel Productions, Inc., offers the Exhibitors of the United States a newspaper campaign of intensive publicity which blankets the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Space That Dominates

Half-pages and Quarter-pages of the most dominating character will work for You and "The Co-Respondent"— the best written, most strikingly laid out publicity that money can buy from expert advertising men.

Plus Able Reviews

In addition, full reviews of "The Co-Respondent" will run in the reading columns of the foremost papers of every leading city. These papers are

The Giants of the Mediums

The newspapers, with which arrangements have already been closed, are, without exception the most important dailies of the biggest moving picture centers of the country — the giants of the newspaper world—reaching from Massachusetts to Oregon and forming the opinions of 30,000,000 readers.

THE powerful mediums of this comprehensive list do far more than merely cover the cities – they cover the country—in all, some 30,000,000 people. And in the country they reach not only the paperless towns but they completely outweigh the local papers of the smaller cities. For they bring with them the tremendous prestige of the metropolis, the eagerly read opinions of the famous dramatic critics and the still more influential facts of a brilliant city run.

The Power of Prestige

If yours is a Theatre in a Suburban town, rest assured that the use of the great dailies close around you is going to give your patrons a new and keener understanding of the high character of your Theatre and your Plays. Attracted by the dominating space and compelling copy, thoroughly awakened by the shrewdly worded reviews, they will see that "The Co-Respondent" is a New York girl in a New York play which has run to tremendous receipts at New York's most popular photoplay-house — and they will show quick appreciation of your enterprise in securing so worthwhile an attraction.

For a Company devoted solely to marketing to spend this unparalleled sum on a single play can mean only that "The Co-Respondent" is more than worth it.

Your Success is Our Success

WHILE you might succeed without Jewel Productions, we're frank to say that without You—your favor, your friendship, your assistance—Jewel Productions, Inc.. could never reach the high goal it seeks.

FOR this reason we chose for this unusual expenditure of $50,000 a Play and a Star which will bring you equally unusual receipts. And we have put the same unusual effort into the execution of the advertising matter.

BUT you already know the extra care with which Jewel Productions, Inc., surrounds its every smallest step. Perhaps the best proof is the fact that after several months of active business we have chosen for you, or released, only Eight Pictures.

AND this, added to the already achieved success of "The Co-Respondent," plus the tremendous pull of this nationwide campaign, will lead you to book this play and make money.

Every Exhibitor in North America Knows This to Be True:

BIG, popular stars in clean, sweet pictures that may be seen by the women and children of all communities are the best and most consistent profit-making attractions that can be booked in any theatres.

Mae Marsh's tremendous records for all exhibitors who booked Margaret Mayo's great play, "Polly of the Circus," will make "Sunshine Alley" an even greater attraction in all theatres, and such are the beauties and appeals in "Sunshine Alley" that they will make her third Goldwyn Picture more powerful still.

In other words Goldwyn selects for Mae Marsh, the favorite of millions of people, only those plays that continue, with each new release, to add to her drawing power and her personal popularity.

Madge Kennedy Made Good the Goldwyn Predictions

EXHIBITORS will remember that Goldwyn foretold the nation-wide popularity of Madge Kennedy from the moment of her first screen appearance. Her first production is hailed everywhere as "the greatest comedy of the year."

In Edgar Selwyn's successful play, "Nearly Married," she is an even more remarkable comedienne and this means that two delightful and unusual laugh-winning productions will double the size of her audiences and the number of her admirers.

Powerful and discerning exhibitors in all sections who watched the box-office returns on this fascinating star predict to Goldwyn that she soon will be without a rival. Confident of this from the beginning Goldwyn persuaded her to renounce the stage for a period of years and give her talents to the screen audiences of the world.

What You Buy When You Book a Mabel Normand Picture

THE REPUTATION of the greatest comedienne who has ever been identified with the screen. A star made popular by her own unrivalled gifts and abilities. Not a star created by exploitation, but a winsome captor of public liking.

A comedienne of such wonderful capacity and range of talent that now for the first time—as a Goldwyn star—she emerges upon the screens of the world with a new and adorable photographic personality—a Mabel Normand of beauty and distinction; funnier now than in any of her past successes, but an abler and bigger artist deserving of the better stories Goldwyn has chosen for her.

Exhibitors should remember also that Mabel Normand is not a star of the "silent drama" for audiences are kept in an uproar by her droll fun-making and the funniest of all her pictures is "Joan of Plattsburg" by Porter Emerson Browne.

THIS powerful American exhibitor with theatres dotting the country is immensely cautious about giving any picture a "blanket booking."

To win this honor a picture must have proved its drawing power. It must possess unquestioned appeal. It must be counted on in advance to increase the Marcus Loew theatres' box office patronage.

Marcus Loew's huge success is based upon his ability to please the world's largest amusement clientele not merely for a day or year—but year after year.

A. H. Woods Makes The Biggest First Territorial

Herbert Brenon's

NICHOLAS II.
EXILES
PRINCE FELIX TO ENGLAND

A. H. WOODS, the theatrical producer and half owner of "The Fall of the Romanoffs" with Herbert Brenon, has sold the New York State rights of the production for the record breaking sum of $100,000. The purchasers, a group of capitalists, were won by the sensational three weeks' run at the Broadway Theatre, where, at a two dollar scale of prices, the picture-drama drew absolutely capacity business—proving the tremendous office value of Mr. Brenon's masterpiece.

With the eyes of the world centered upon Russia's struggle for democracy, "The Fall of the Romanoffs" stands as possessing the widest appeal of any screen-drama ever made.

KITTY KELLY, WHO CAME TO NEW YORK TO SEE THIS PICTURE, SAYS, IN THE CHICOGO EXAMINER

"The much-talked-about "Iliodor, or the Fall of the Romanoffs," of Herbert Brenon extraction is now a public fact, showing twice daily at the Broadway Theatre, where quaint little Russian peasant girls, as costume goes, find you your dollar-and-a-half or less seats.

"Comparisons are odious, perhaps, but sometimes things lay themselves open to them. So seeing "Iliodor" after "Rasputin" is like seeing the substance after the shadow. This Brenon offering has dignity, depth and force, the seasoned quality of caretaking production that stamps it as a masterpiece. . . .

"That sincerity is the strength of its appeal. It seems so honest that one hangs on it as the truth. There is good production to it, interesting and magnificent settings, splendid playing, . . .

. . ."It holds the house tense, and when Rasputin falls the tenseness bursts forth in an avalanche of applause. And as pictorial humanized history "The Fall of the Romanoffs" shines forth."

FALL of the ROMANOFFS

The syndicate of purchasers for New York State have selected Sol. J. Berman, the ablest exchange manager in his field, to handle the New York State territory. Berman, who first came into prominence with his phenominal booking of Herbert Brenon's "War Brides" in the New York territory, states that the sales will exceed any individual photo-drama ever produced. It has been determined to book "The Fall of the Romanoffs" at once in the Motion Pictures Theatres of New York State, thereby giving exhibitors an immediate opportunity to take advantage of the remarkable New York run and metropolitan advertising campaign.

Sure Bets for the Box Office

The Fairbanks, Hart, Talmadge and Keenan reissues are making a big hit with exhibitors all over the country.

Read this telegram from our Buffalo exchange:

"Strand Theatre here playing to capacity on first Fairbanks reissue. Called on them at seven-thirty and they had them packed to the street. Called again eight-thirty second evening show and still packed to street. Believe Triangle Fairbanks pictures draw better than when first released."

Here is your opportunity to run big stars in their best pictures, made by the most able directors,—pictures that have been widely advertised and that are sold at comparatively low prices.

This is a real business proposition that must appeal to every exhibitor.

General Comment:—

As a story it is full of human interest and makes a tense dramatic appeal. "The Public Defender" is a fine example of a Photoplay with a Purpose.

The National Board of Review

THE BILLBOARD

The story is gripping, nerve-racking, breath-taking, and is handled in a masterly manner.

It held the Hotel Astor audience tense and spellbound.

MOTOGRAPHY

The action is swift, the direction painstaking and the acting most intelligent and realistic. . . . Has a strong story with real depth, developed with interest and even with "grip," enacted by a competent cast.

WORLD

The underlying motive of the story is novel and will have a wide appeal.

DR. WILLIAM J. O'SULLIVAN, FAMOUS LEGAL-MEDICO EXPERT

The dramatis personae of this interpretation of gross injustice and its remedy are worthy of high praise. "The Public Defender" is a forceful presentation of a concrete case and is both informative and convincing.

TRIBUNE

"The Public Defender" is a splendid entertainment. Frank Keenan gave a remarkable portrayal of the District Attorney. The picture is produced with that fine attention to detail which has made Harry Raver famous.

JUSTICE EDGAR J. LAUER OF NEW YORK

I found the motion picture, "The Public Defender," most enjoyable and one which carried my interest throughout. It is certainly novel and singularly effective.

REV. SAMUEL GREENFIELD, RABBI ISAIAH TEMPLE, NEW YORK CITY

The idea of a Public Defender was strongly brought out in the presentation. The theme is carried out with startling truthfulness and vivid forcefulness.

Dear Sirs -

I want to take this opportunity to express to you our company the great satisfaction we have had in handling your wonderful pictures "The Retreat of the Germans at the battle of Arras" throughout the Orpheum Circuit of 7 weeks and other circuits affiliated with us.

We are almost ashamed to make extra expenditure of gratification on the pictures, for I see no reason why I shouldn't, for you that without exception, wherever these pictures have appeared, they have proven a big success.

As you know our intention in booking these pictures was first to [illegible] and secondly to help the Red Cross and Liberty Loan and to put before our vast public the work being done by our United Arms at the front. As a box office attraction it needs no comment, but to those as well as satisfying our patrons it has been most successful and we will be very glad to cooperate with you on any future pictures of this kind that you may exhibit in this country. Now we are sure you know that America is for the first time over there and we are doing our best to show them through your official British pictures.

Yours truly,

M. Beck

THOUSANDS TURNED AWAY

"The picture was produced with gorgeous effects, settings and costumes, and is photographed with pictorial beauty."—N. Y. MORNING WORLD.

"The picture is so big that one is completely overwhelmed. The spectacle simply beggars description. The greatest of all film spectacle plays. There is no stint in anything. The production is flawless in its settings, magnificent beyond compare, and the performance of Miss Bara is at all times vastly interesting. Never has she looked so regally beautiful, and if the original Cleopatra was just half so lovely we do not blame Antony for renouncing Rome."—N. Y. TRIBUNE.

" 'Cleopatra' is an uncommonly fine picture. Miss Bara contributes a thoroughly successful portrayal of the Serpent of the Nile, and Siren of the Ages, and the eternal feminine. It is the finest sort of film fare, and fans are certain to flock to it. It is a triumph for the director, too. The naval battle at Actium is made most impressive, and the handling of the chariots also furnishes many a thrilling moment."—N. Y. TIMES.

" 'Cleopatra' is truly one of the most sumptuous and sensational motion picture spectacles that have ever been produced. In largeness of scope, the appearance of solid reality, its ensemble scenes have had no superior, and few equals. It was Miss Bara's triumph, too. The massive scenes of ancient Rome and Alexandria were superb. Genuine historical interest is attained."—HERALD.

"Seldom has a photodrama premiere attracted a more eager audience. The scenes were so gorgeous that they brought continued applause. The battle scenes of the climax were wonderfully impressive. The palace of the queen, the raiment of the queen, and the queen herself were the last word in regal magnificence. Cleopatra was an enviable role for Miss Theda Bara, and an ideal scenario for Director J. Gordon Edwards. For William Fox it proved rich material to display his versatility as a producer. It is the most spectacular photodrama Fox has ever had a hand in. Miss Bara gives a striking performance. The picture touches the top peak of films sirenic. It is a luxurious production. Miss Bara is an immensely interesting Cleopatra, being probably the first actress to play the role whose eyes do the part. Needless to say, the photography and other technical points are above criticism. The entire production is most elaborate."—N. Y. TELEGRAPH.

" 'Cleopatra' is a huge thing, the production on so gorgeous a scale, with no detail that lots of money and a lot of more effort could master, left out. . . . Miss Bara was regally imposing."—THE GLOBE.

" 'Cleopatra' is Miss Theda Bara at her best. She is a real Cleopatra. As a spectacle the picture ranks second to none. As a spectacle this new film surpasses even 'The Birth of a Nation.' "—N. Y. TELEGRAPH.

"The success which 'Cleopatra' is destined to win will be founded on the fact that the role of the Siren of the Nile is the ideal Theda Bara role. The photoplay shows also fine workmanship, excellent direction, and fine versimilitude of life in Rome and Egypt."—N. Y. EVE. SUN.

"Pageantry is inspiring. The crowd scenes were handled with skill and there is a thrilling reproduction of the world's first naval battle. Miss Theda Bara's impersonation of the title part is quite up to the expectations aroused by her work in previous pictures."—N. Y. EVENING MAIL.

Facts and Comments

LIBERTY Bonds really mean liberty or bonds. Have you shown the Liberty Films in your theater yet? They are really good entertainment and just what your audience wants right now. They are also free of even transportation charges. If you have not shown them yet try your nearest Universal or Vitagraph Exchanges for number one, or the nearest Paramount or Metro Exchanges for number two, or the nearest Fox or Goldwyn Exchanges for number three, or the nearest Pathe or Triangle Exchanges for number four, or the nearest World or Select Pictures Exchanges for number five. Act at once as there are only a few more days for the Liberty Loan drive.

AS the number of prints of each of the six Liberty Films are limited to five hundred you may not be able to secure a booking previous to October 27, the closing day for subscriptions. In this event, why not get your local bank president or some leading business man to present the cause to your audience, working up previous interest and securing a large attendance. Opportunity might be given to those in the audience to subscribe by having a clerk from the bank present to take subscriptions and the initial 2 per cent. payment. As there are only a few more days immediate action is necessary.

A LARGE proportion of the advertisements in this field are now prepared by experts with years of experience, men who study their product and strive to condense its salient points in the most direct and accurate phraseology at their command. They merit careful and comprehensive reading. The day of the superfluous and misleading adjective is passing, let's hope never to return. Study the advertising pages, you will soon learn to distinguish the dependable copy and it often says little but tells a whole lot.

OFFICIAL recognition of the moving picture industry by the British Government has been much more slow than in this country. A few weeks ago, however, two prominent film men were invited to visit the battle front in France as the guests of the General Staff. A. E. Newbould, chairman of the Cinema Exhibitors' Association, and Mr. Foster, secretary of the Trades Council, were chosen to represent the British film trade on this mission. From the reports of each after their return we learn that moving pictures are depended on by the Government and staff to furnish recreation and entertainment to the men at the front in an ever increasing extent.

AND so we seem to be settling down to the idea of at least two yearly expositions, or whatever you choose to call them, in future. We must confess that we fail to see any direct benefit that will accrue to the industry in general from one, much less from two every year. In the past only a few have profited. That these few may be a few more in future will not bring any real help or benefit to the industry as a whole. It is more likely to result in higher costs, as the manufacturers are put to considerable additional expense for each. The exposition idea may provide the wherewithal for one or two trade organizations and on their management will depend whether the industry in general will benefit either directly or indirectly.

THE successful picture theater manager today is bound to be progressive. We do not mean to say that every progressive owner or manager will be equally successful, but the successful manager of today who is not wide awake, progressive and a leader in his community is as scarce as the proverbial hen's tooth. The latest innovation of Manager Rothapfel of the Rialto in his famous picture house is in giving an opportunity to school children to hear his wonderful orchestra of fifty pieces every Saturday from 10.30 to 12 noon at the nominal admission of ten cents. The regular Saturday prices are twenty-five and fifty cents. Under the direction of Mr. Rothapfel and its leader, Mr. Riesenfeld, this musical aggregation has become famous throughout the country. These Saturday morning programs will afford an unequaled opportunity to the younger generation of this city to become acquainted with the great masters of the world.

Screaming Absurdities

By Louis Reeves Harrison

A PROTEST by the Hawaii Promotion Committee on page 377 of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, Oct. 20 of this year, draws attention to those contradictions of common sense to which theatrical men have long been addicted, which moth-eaten directors insist on transplanting to the screen. It is inconceivable, after all that has been said and written on the subject, that there remain men in the studios, to whom is entrusted the supervision of play treatment, who still entertain the idea that the public is made up of its lowest and most ignorant elements.

"Education has been compulsory in every part of the Hawaiian group of islands for sixty years." Why not send some of our studio directors there, especially those who think they are addressing the scum of humanity in moving pictures? They would at least learn that "as to dress, the Hawaiians of today and the last forty years have dressed exactly as do the civilized people of any colonial country." There is "no primitive life in Hawaii. No people in the Hawaiian Islands wear grass skirts."

Even if certain studio directors honestly believe they are addressing an unreasoning horde at the picture show, that only the residuum of society is to be found there, they are contaminating the whole art and insulting the intelligence of exhibitors as well to put the wild creatures of tropical countries in a Hawaiian story, for there are no wild beasts in that country, and their idea of the Hawaiian himself is about as representative as is the two-gun border ruffian of American life. They are consulting only the taste of a very sparse and ignorant clientage and driving away from the picture shows a most desirable audience element. The real public stays away in disgust.

The real public does not demand an entertainment devised by ignorance and second-hand traditions of the stage, such as is being thrust upon it by many decrepit producers, nor is any such demand known. Though the good common sense of any American community is the court of last resort, nothing compels the dissatisfied to stop at the box office of an inexpensive entertainment and complain. Nor does individual judgment so carefully differentiate as the trained critic. No man who pays ten cents, or a quarter, for a brief picture show feels called upon to declare his convictions at the box office, and he seldom does.

Then a few disgruntled and noisy members of the mass do not constitute "the public." The real public is of ourselves. Like us, it demands the best that can be shown, with improvement in every department where improvement is possible. It is the business of the critic to grasp this, to discover the truth, and to do all in his power to bring about a realization and appreciation of what is meant by meritorious performance. Criticism ceases to be such, loses its highest value, when it permits these absurdities of the screen to pass muster.

A producer complained to me bitterly when I pointed out the utter lack of sense in his portrayal of George Washington. In the case of such a strongly-marked and much-revered historical character, I felt instinctively that he must be presented at his highest potency in order to be effective, not in some minor role, incongruous, glaringly opposed to reason, out of all sympathy with our ideals. It is destructive to audience interest for a story to denature a great personage, especially to belittle any such master spirit in the building of our nation. The same is true of any historical scene imposed by the story.

We have a number of Latin Republics to the south of us, some highly developed, others in evolution, and one, on our border a hundred years behind the times, but we should be just to them in screen representation, not only for their sakes, but to develop the screen drama so as to seize and hold the interest of an audience. The average audience delights in unexplored and unrecorded scenes of other lands when truthfully portrayed, just as it does those unscrutinized phases of character which, while out of our common knowledge, are wholly within our sympathies.

We should picture those countries as they really are, not as the stage has shown them, and their people with some intelligent exploration of character, rather than from superficial impressions of careless observers. The trouble here is not always due to directorial ignorance, but to playwrights who are working on ground unfamiliar, who do not take pains to inform themselves on their subject matter. We have had a surfeit of stories of the great "Northwest" because authors feel that they can put over the improbable in those regions.

It is characteristic of weak minds, and provokes only contempt, when author and director treat Hawaii as one would the cannibal islands of the South Seas, just as they let our actor gent wear a high hat at the seaside and summer resorts, and even aboard ship. Costume cannot replace characterization. It is for cowboy mannikins, whereas the audience is interested in live human beings, whatever their place, whatever their nationality, whatever their native predilections. But there are small details to be observed in all phases of life, which contribute heavily to an atmosphere of truth, forms and customs which should not fail of exact reflection on the screen.

Directors who deck Hawaiians in tapa cloth, made from the fibre of trees, are bound to commit a lot of silly errors in portraying military life, get things wrong side before in stories of love and adventure drawn from the great world drama abroad. They are already at it. They place artillery in the open instead of masking batteries from sky observation; they dress soldiers in property-room helmets of ancient vintage; they even permit the characters to salute with the palm inward, causing them to have an "oh, what a headache!" expression, instead of the palms out and thumbs down, as any schoolboy could tell them.

There is no desire on my part to do directors injustice, but the treatment of a screen story is in their hands, and it is rarely under the supervision of the author. This is as it should be in a composite art, provided the director understands that it is not action but development of character which interests an audience, and provided he realizes that the story must not seem to be told. The director must provide surface reality in his treatment of details so that people derive pleasure from watching what seems to be a true picture. Instead of being told by pictures it must seem to actually happen.

Far beyond these silly weaknesses are the outrageous absurdities of studio interpolation, incongruous stuff thrust in to please a star, preposterous additions from would-be authors in the office. A screen story should have no shabby concessions in it. To be concrete, tangible, clear and convincing, to portray a think world, it should adhere closely to one mind's vision of the phase of life it depicts. Therein lies its preatest power. Therein will ultimately be found its greatest value. It renders the mood of the world and of the soul.

Passing Reflections

By Sam Spedon

The Tax Cure.

LEWIS J. SELZNICK said something and started something when referring to the war tax on films and theaters he made in print this statement:

"The case is similar to that of a man suffering from cancer. He dreads the surgeon's knife and yet his only hope lies in operation. Through the operation he has a chance to recover. It is a case of kill or cure. We may record this Government tax as the operation performed on motion pictures which will cut away the dead rotten tissue and leave behind only the healthy, vigorous body.

"That is why I say that I am a firm believer in the motion picture tax, and only wish that it was heavier. If it drives to the wall those whose methods of operation are so unsound and unbusinesslike that they cannot bear up under its burden, then so much the better for the industry. The keen, live producer will know how to readjust his output so as to actually benefit by the operation of the tax, and the keen, live producer is the only one that the industry has any need of.

"So put me on record as saying that the tax on motion pictures is a great blessing in disguise."

Others agree with him but do not want to say it openly. He admits it. There are some exhibitors, too, who think just as he does and they are not small exhibitors, either. Some of them own two or more good-sized theaters. We don't know which is worse, the cure or the disease. Under the conditions of paying the tax it strikes us that it is up to the "dear public" to administer the remedy; if it will stand for it we can't see what difference it will make. We hope the cancers will be removed and trust that those patients who are fit will survive.

Make It a Cheerful Sunday.

The question of Sunday opening is again being discussed in many cities and towns in the country and will no doubt be brought before the local legislatures and boards. We believe it should be strongly urged, not only by the exhibitors but by the public, as a desirable and proper means of recreation for the day of rest Never before in the history of motion pictures have the producers been so well equipped to provide the right kind of entertainment and instruction in conformity with law and order than at the present time. We further believe if the exhibitors can convince the people of their communities that they are sincere in their willingness to conform strictly to pictures that are fit and proper they will readily secure the concessions they ask.

There should be a stronger appeal for Sunday opening made this year than ever before. It is sadly needed during this great war crisis as a diversion and a great boon to the exhibitor to meet the war tax and enable him to keep his theater running up to the standard during the other six days of the week.

If the MOVING PICTURE WORLD can be of any assistance we are yours to command.

Inform Public on War Tax Now.

Unquestionably the majority of exhibitors throughout the United States will increase their prices of admissions five cents; ten cent admissions will be raised to fifteen, fifteen to twenty and so on. By so doing they will be able to meet the admission and other war taxes which they will have to meet beginning November 1. In advancing prices it will be necessary in the meantime to educate the public to understand why the advance or additional charge is made. Showing slides to that effect, giving some idea of the several taxes imposed, including film, income, personal and admission taxes as well as the increased cost of better productions. It will not be necessary to enumerate all these, simply intimate in a general way. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD will be glad to furnish any information on the war taxes. The tax on admissions goes into effect on Nov. 1. Your accounting of your returns for the month of November will not be required until December 1.

A Lively Corpse.

That was a clever little "joker" embodied in the by-laws of the old Motion Picture Board of Trade, of which J. W. Binder was Executive Secretary, whereby every one becoming a member of the Board of Trade made himself liable for two years' dues instead of one and did not cease to be a member unless he resigned before the beginning of the third year. Read this:

"Section 5. Each person, firm or corporation so elected, upon receiving notice of such election from the Corporation, including charter members, upon payment of the annual dues in advance, shall be entitled to all of the privileges of membership. Every member, upon election, shall become and be obligated to pay the annual dues of the class to which said member belongs so long as he remains a member of said Corporation and for at least one year from the first day of January next following the date of admission to membership."

It was under this section of the by-laws that a prominent producing company was recently obliged to pay $1,490.83 for back dues and cost of trial. Since receiving news of this decision we have been reading over the by-laws of all the organizations to which we belong just to find out where we are at. Some one said, in speaking of the above-mentioned case, that it was some joke, to say the least, but no one wants a similar joke played on him more than once. They are rather costly. Everybody thought the old Board of Trade was dead until they learned that the officials of the Board forgot to kill and bury it. They also discovered that it and Mr. Binder were very much alive and he was going to make the Board and its members pay their indebtedness.

"James, Answer the Bell!"

A courteous "no" never gives offense. An evasive "yes" will always make enemies. Never avoid an employee or anyone with whom you are doing business or with whom you may have to do business some day. Like begets like. We should practice the golden rule in business as well as in other affairs of life. We remember a little experience we had with one of our first employers. The concern was threatened with a law suit on a question of infringement. We received the letter late in the day. It stated: if the complainants did not hear from the company by ten o'clock next morning they would begin action and serve papers at once. We went to our employer with the letter and he said he was too busy to talk to us, would see us in the morning. We left the letter on his desk, which he closed up for the night without reading the letter. He did not come to business the next morning until quite late. We went in to see him, as appointed and told him the contents of the letter. You can imagine the rest. We told him he reminded us of the man who told his little son never to interrupt him while he was reading. The next evening, while his father was reading, the boy rushed in and said: "Pa, may I tell you something?" His father replied: "No! Didn't I tell you never to interrupt me when I was reading?" Father continued until he finished reading, then turned to the boy and said: "Now, what is it you want to tell me?" The youngster shouted: "The house is on fire! That's all." If a man is so busy he can't pay attention to his business and take time to see everybody, then he should pay well somebody with initiative authority and human instinct—they are scarce articles, who can do it for him. We do not mean some "lick-spittle" or "touch the button and I'll do the rest" sort of representative who simply adds insult to injury every time you have to meet him. Nor do we mean the fellow who is so puffed up with a sense of his own importance he treats everybody but his boss and himself as inferiors. Better employ a dummy than this kind.

Some Style.

Here is something for enterprising and inventive press agents to catch up with. It is quoted from a publicity man's contribution on the opening of a new theater.

"Surprised and delighted was the public of ——— when it was ushered through the sturdy doors of the exquisite new theater and entertained by the effervescent symposium of enchanting delights which awaited it."

That's putting it over in grandiloquent style, worthy of imitation and no flattery.

The High Flier.

Have you ever met the man who always seats himself at the head of the table and invites himself to be seen and heard upon every public occasion? He not only blows his own horn, but insists upon blowing it in front of the procession. He never keeps in tune with the rest of the band and is always out of step. He reminds us of a man carrying a pot of paint; we always step aside for him, not because we respect the man, but because we don't want to get paint on our clothes. Before he gets out of the kindergarten he wants to tell the post graduates all about the industry. He flaunts his youth or ignorance as a challenge to knowledge and experience and says: "Before thou wert I am." He never falters. He enters where angels fear to tread. In his own estimation Napoleon's overcoat wouldn't make him a vest. His timerity is startling and often mistaken for brilliancy. He hitches his wagon to a star, flies and travels fast, but the higher he flies the harder he falls. Old "Abe Martin" says: "Folks who live decently are accused o' gitting nothing out o' life."

A Few Differences of Opinion

By Edward Weitzel.

IT IS both instructive and amusing to plance through the current publications that are devoted, wholly or in part, to matters connected with the screen, and observe with what unanimity the writers on these subjects fail to agree. Thus, one maker of the motion picture which, he insists, is not an art: "Don't worry about the art of the photoplay. Art is all right, but life is greater—and the movie must serve life." Elsewhere in the article he sets it down that, "The great future of the screen drama is along educational lines." Another instance of failure to grasp the fact that the activities of the screen will eventually include as many divisions as the art of printing; also, that the photoplay must strive to become a more highly specialized art or cease to exist. Screen drama, the screen novel, screen comedy, screen spectacles and screen farce are only different grades of the amusement side of the screen and, however great the future of the moving picture (not screen drama) along educational lines, its mission in the amusement field is quite as important to the welfare of mankind. Anything that contributes to the mental and physical advancement of humanity is of inestimable value.

Here is a different angle of the subject. Dr. Victor O. Freeburg, of the photoplay department of Columbia University, holds that in the near future the motion picture (screen drama) will be produced so cheaply that the projecting machine will be as common in the American home as the phonograph. When this happens photoplays "will have the supreme necessity of being artistic—or more artistic than they are now." In the same article, after pointing out a number of the artistic shortcomings in connection with screen dramas, among which is the custom of turning out a preponderance of five reelers, Prof. Freeburg makes this prediction: "When the motion picture (photoplay) becomes a mature art all this will stop." Not so long as the commercial instinct is left in man! Music and the spoken drama have been mature arts for several centuries and artistic crimes are daily committed in the names of both for which the only punishment is a substantial addition to the bank accounts of certain enterprising souls who know little and care less for anything outside the commercial aspect of either art.

From an article by Kenneth MacGowan in The New Republic: "We have gone by experiment, by trial and error, by instinct, straight to the intricate, sub-mental nature of the photoplay which Munsterberg recognized in his valuable analytical volume. We throw on the screen in half a minute a dozen aspects, great and small, immediate and remote, obvious and inferential, actual and reminiscent, of the thing that is to be told."

And more's the pity—if the object of all this superabundance of material is the making of a moving picture worthy to be classed as a play! If it is to be a novel, that is a different affair. With all his vast store of knowledge, no one has done more to mislead the novice in the art of the photoplay than Prof. Munsterberg when he carefully pointed out the many side tracks, with switches always open, that stand ready to shunt the unwary from the main theme of a drama. The professor didn't mean exactly this, but that is what it amounts to when some generous but inept worker at photoplay making "throws on the screen" a dozen aspects of the thing that is to be told. Throw on just enough to get the "thing to be told" to the spectator; one aspect is sufficient, if it makes the matter clear. Then move the action on to the next vital incident, and keep it moving, no matter how many side lights on character or charming views of nature may tempt the wasting of more footage. Then shall the director achieve drama, and not mere story telling. And when my dentist goes to the movies he shall not inform me the next day, as he cheerfully performs the anvil chorus on an acutely sensitive molar, that he didn't care for the picture he saw the night before; it was too long before anything happened.

Trading With Latin America

UNDER the above title a very handy book of data has been compiled by the Irving National Bank of New York City, analyzing Latin American trade possibilities. The book contains a large amount of carefully tabulated matter on every possible angle, together with many forms of shipping and financial documents, etc. It also contains much information on commercial conditions in all the Central and South American Republics, all of which is very fully cross-indexed. We cull the following from a couple of pages on "Don'ts" about Latin American trade:

Don't think that all Latin American countries are alike—they differ as night from day.

Don't classify Latin Americans as savages—great numbers of the people are highly civilized and cultured.

Don't enter Latin American markets blindly—you'll pay dearly for carelessness.

Don't think that "anything is good enough" for the Latin Americans—you'll find such idea very costly.

Don't think your export business will run itself—it needs a head and fixed responsibility.

Don't neglect to quote C. I. F., if possible—the Latin American appreciates such quotations.

Don't expect a man to know your language when you don't know his—use Spanish or Portuguese.

Don't send a catalog in English to a Spanish speaking country—consider how much you would like one in Russian.

Don't neglect details—you'll be judged by the way you attend to them.

Don't expect miracles—it takes time to develop an export trade.

Our own Spanish monthly moving picture paper, Cine Mundial, has had no small share in popularizing American films in our sister Republics to the South and this book will be a welcome help to film concerns struggling with export problems.

Why Fifteen Cents More a Reel?

Calculation Proves That Charge Is Not Excessive on Basis of Present Methods.

By Sam Spedon.

HEARING that many of the distributing companies had increased the cost of their releases fifteen cents on each reel, or each thousand feet, on account of the war tax on film, we gave the matter considerable thought and asked why. We went deeper into the subject when we received this communication relative to the policy of the Triangle Distributing corporation regarding the question of increase of the cost of film, owing to the war tax:

"The Triangle Distributing Corporation felt that the exhibitor was sufficiently burdened at the present time with taxes of different nature and that they should not be called upon to stand a still further tax, therefore, this matter was taken up with the officers of the Triangle Distributing Corporation the early part of last week, and the Local Manager was instructed not to make a charge of 15c. per reel, and it was the intention of the Triangle Company to meet this tax entirely themselves.

"This is merely the way the Triangle Distributing Corp. is doing their bit, in addition to distributing throughout the country entirely free of charge the picture entitled 'Who Leads the National Army.'"

We have read and heard exhibitors say this increase of fifteen cents because of the war tax is excessive, as it only costs the producer seven and a half cents additional on each thousand feet or reel. Then in contradition we heard others say that the exhibitors did not take into consideration waste or discard necessary in producing a five or more reel picture. From our experience and knowledge of producing we offer the following figures of the additional war tax cost of making a five reel picture, allowing a waste of 4,000 feet to every thousand feet of approved negative and discards from the approved first print, which allows 20,000 feet of waste on each five-reel production at ½ cent a foot amounting to $100.

¼c. on 5,000 ft. raw stock	$12.50
½c. on 5,000 ft. printed stock	25.00
	$37.50
Allowing 40 prints to the exchanges would be 40 times $37.50	$1,500.00
Adding tax on 20,000 ft. of waste and discard in the original negative and print	100.00
We have a total of	$1,600.00

Calculating that each of these forty prints of five reels each will have 50 showings during its life time, the total number of showings would be 2,000, which divided into $1,600, would make an extra tax cost to the producer on each 5,000 feet of 80 cents or 16 cents on each reel of 1,000 feet. Our inquiries concerning the number of showings of each print during its life brought a general response from its producers that fifty showing is the average number.

This calculation is confirmed by the investigation of the subject by a reputable firm of accountants.

We think we have allowed a liberal margin for waste and discard and are very conservative in the number of showings for each release. If our allowance for waste is not sufficient, then there must be something radically wrong in the efficiency of the producers, and if such be the case it should not be put up to the exhibitor to collect it from the public. The government has said according to verbal statements, the exhibitor must collect the war tax on admissions and films from the public. About the additional taxes and cost of film to the exhibitor we have heard no official statements. Taking everything into consideration we believe the only feasible way to meet the whole situation, is to raise prices of admission five cents.

Burr Elected to National Asssociation Board

At Meeting of General Division John Flinn Also is Chosen Chairman and Paul Gulick Secretary.

THE annual meeting of the General Division, Class No. 5, of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was held October 17, and was largely attended. William A. Johnston presided. John C. Flinn was unanimously chosen as chairman of the branch for the ensuing year, and Paul Gulick was elected secretary.

The following new members were elected: B. P. Fineman, Eugene Zukor, Allan Rock, E. B. Cotton and Al Lichtman of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and C. G. Merrills of C. G. Merrills, Inc.

The following were elected members of the Executive Committee for the coming year: Thomas G. Wiley, Julian M. Solomon, Jr., B. P. Fineman, Fred N. Rothenberg, Julius A. Lewis, William A. Johnston and A. MacArthur, Jr. C. C. Burr was elected to represent the division in the Board of Directors in place of Arthur James, resigned.

A meeting of the Executive Committee will be held during the coming week, at which time plans are to be made for an active membership campaign, with a view to increasing the membership of this division to one thousand within the next few months.

Exposition Company Incorporated

New Organization Will Have Management of Trade Expositions to Be Held Next Year.

PAPERS have been filed at Albany incorporating the Motion Picture Exposition Company, which will have the management of the film expositions to be held next year. The first is scheduled for New York in the month of February, to be followed by one in Boston in July during the convention there of the Exhibitors' League.

The incorporators of the new company are Arthur S. Friend, Famous Players-Lasky; Gabriel L. Hess, treasurer of Goldwyn, and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association. The directors of the Exposition Company are William A. Brady, Arthur S. Friend, J. E. Brulatour, William L. Sherrill, J. A. Berst, Gabriel L. Hess, W. W. Irwin, P. A. Powers and J. H. Hallberg, and representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Lee A. Ochs, Ernest H. Horstmann, Alfred S. Black, J. H. O'Donnell and Louis L. Blumenthal.

A meeting of the corporation will shortly be held for the purpose of electing officers and receiving reports of the sub-committee with recommendations regarding the arrangements for both expositions.

MABEL CONDON VISITS MANHATTAN.

After an absence of more than two years from Broadway, Mabel Condon returned to New York City Sunday, October 21, to spend a couple of weeks before returning to her Los Angeles interests. These indeed have become quite extensive since Broadway was last graced with Mabel's smile. Mabel Condon, Inc., is, however, too, well known in the trade to need further discussion. Suffice it to say that her "transcontinental" to these eastern regions has been made for reasons, partly for pleasure, but mostly for business.

TITLE OF JEWEL SUBJECT CHANGED.

The name of the Jewel feature, "The Boss of Powderville" has been changed to "The Grand Passion" and soon will prove another attractive annexation to the growing Jewel gallery. Dorothy Phillips has the leading role and the story was written by Thomas Addison. It is said to be of unusual dramatic timber and appeal.

Public Will Pay Tax on Admissions

So Declare Exhibitors in Mass Meeting in Manhattan—Brooklyn League Takes Similar Action

THE public must pay the war tax on admission to motion-picture theaters in and around New York City. That was the decision of a gathering of exhibitors at the Hotel Astor on the afternoon of Friday, October 19, one of the largest meetings of motion-picture men ever held in the city, by the way. They had come in response to an invitation sent out by William Fox on a couple of days' notice, and they came from a distance, some of Philadelphia's prominent managers being in attendance. Mr. Fox said he had asked his exchange manager to confer with exhibitiors and learn, if possible, the consensus of opinion as to what steps should be taken in handling the question of the tax of 10 per cent on admissions, effective November 1. The chairman of the meeting said Mr. Levy had talked with fifty exhibitors and seemed to have found fifty opinions.

There were at least 150 managers in attendance when the meeting was called to order at 4:45 o'clock. Owing to the action of Chairman Fox, precipitated by a remark of William Hollander of Brooklyn that "In front of me I see the finest collection of salesmen and exchange managers I ever saw in my life," there had a sifting of the audience.

"Just a minute, gentlemen," said Mr. Fox, as the laughter created by the observation subsided. "Let's get at the truth of this. I thought we were all exhibitors. Will all those who are not exhibitors please go to the rear of the room and all the exhibitors come to the front."

When the meeting again had settled into silence Mr. Fox asked all who were not exhibitors to stand. About forty arose. The chairman counted those who were left—and he did it with a showman's eye—and declared there were at least 140, which seemed to be a conservative estimate.

In spite of the serious business in front of the exhibitors there were many moments of mirth. Mr. Fox made an excellent chairman. He made it a point to confine the speakers to the business in hand, the only exception to the rule being William A. Brady, president of the National Association, and the chairman explained that he had given Mr. Brady a free rein because it seemed the head of the association had a message for the exhibitors which they ought to hear. Among those who felt the gloved hand of the chairman was President Ochs of the League, who attempted a reference to the tax on films and other war expenses which exhibitors were forced to meet, but he was compelled to confine himself to a discussion of the motion before the house. Altogether, the best of feeling prevailed. In large measure this result was due to the faculty of the chairman in tempering his rulings with a smile; with his unfailing display of all-around camaraderie.

Exhibitors Should Work Together, Says Fox.

"It was the decree of Congress that the public should pay the 10 per cent above the admission price," said Mr. Fox in opening. "Am I right in my contention that the best result can be obtained if we work in unison? (A voice: 'Right.') My object in calling the meeting was to bring about an understanding, so that where there are two exhibitors in the same neighborhood in keen competition both of them will have a clear comprehension of the intention of Congress, so that one of them would not be advertising, 'We are not charging the Government tax,' and forcing unfair competition on his neighbor. The result would be the second exhibitor would be forced to pay the 10 per cent out of his receipts.

"I know that my own profits are less than 10 per cent. In other words, in my chain of theaters if we let in patrons without their paying the tax we would be operating under a loss from the first of November. Some of you may be making a profit of 20 per cent. and may be willing to pay the tax out of your receipts. Supposing before we discuss this question any further we take a rising vote so that we may know how many here are in favor of letting the public pay 10 per cent. in addition to the price of admission, as provided for and intended by Congress."

The response indicated a unanimous belief that the 10 per cent. should be added to the price of admission.

Mr. Lyon of Jersey City read to the meeting a resolution that had been adopted at the recent convention of New Jersey exhibitors. It was to the effect that exhibitors should raise the price of admission so as to cover the expenses of the tax and to meet the necessities of the Government. The speaker urged all present to join in a movement to raise prices.

"I am in favor of high prices for a high-class entertainment," said Mr. Fox. "If you start a campaign to convince the exhibitor that he should raise his admission to cover the tax, within two years from this date you will find yourselves in the same chaotic condition that we are in at this moment. You will find that some will raise and others will not. The result in the meantime would be that the exhibitor who did not raise his price would be doing all the business and the man who did raise it would be standing by and doing no business." Mr. Fox impressed on the gathering it was the intent of Congress that the public should pay the tax, that the exhibitor was merely the collector.

Price of Admission Must Be Stated.

Louis Levine of Brooklyn called attention to the fact that the price of admission must be stated clearly. "You can't make your admission fifteen cents without advertising your tickets at thirteen cents," he declared.

"We forget one thing, Mr. Chairman," said Mr. Ochs "The ten per cent. we may charge is not sufficient. We have taxes put upon us by exchanges. Wherever they arrived at the figure of fifteen cents a reel——"

It was at this point the chairman called the speaker to order.

Mr. Ochs reported he did not want the exhibitors to vote on the question of 10 per cent. alone. He spoke of questions of coal, of the increased wages of operators, and insisted it was wrong to ignore the other matters so closely associated with the growing expenses of managers.

Mr. Fox took exception to the remarks of a speaker who had said it was a case of getting along during the time of the war, even if money was not made. The chairman declared it is the desire of the government that business men shall prosper during the time of the war. It is out of the question to say business men should be satisfied to get along without profit, he declared, saying the war might last two or three years or longer. He called on Mr. Brady.

Intent of Congress Public Should Pay.

The president of the National Association said it was the intent of Congress the public should pay. There was no doubt of that, he insisted. He reviewed the course of motion picture legislation, referring to the action of the Senate finance committee in removing the greater part of the tax, excluding up to the 25-cent admission. He spoke of the divided counsels among picture men, resulting in the establishment of the belief in Washington that there was a divided industry.

"This industry has received from the President of the United States the greatest honor given to any industry in the country," said Mr. Brady. "We have been requested to send representatives to France, to Russia, to Italy. It has even been said in Washington that this industry may win the war—that through the motion picture and what it may accomplish in Russia the people of that country may be brought into line—and any other means of bringing them into line is not now known.

"The industry should be concentrated into one whole. And I want to tell you men that unless you get together your taxation has only begun. It is within the bounds of probability that taxes will be levied upon you in every state this winter. It was only by a hair's breadth that a tax was not put upon you last winter in Albany. If it hadn't been for Governor Whitman you would have been paying that tax, and every theater would have been closed as tight as a nail every Sunday in the year. And I am a Democrat, too.

"The men who came here today came when they were hurt. The tax would not have been put on if such an assemblage as this could have been got together once a week for the last six months. The time is coming when the exhibitors of the United States must get together. When they do that, as a prominent official in Washington told me two weeks ago, they won't have to go to anybody on their knees. Get together."

Mr. Levine said in the past month he had had occasion to test the attitude of the public on the proposed tax. He had shown a slide in his theater informing his patrons that Congress had levied the tax for war purposes and stating that the public would pay it. "Every time the slide was run it was applauded," said Mr. Levine. "And I don't believe we will have the least bit of difficulty in collecting it."

It was at this point that Mr. Hollander upset the meeting by his remark about the salesmen and exchangemen. After quiet had been restored Mr. Hollander rather glowingly referred to his five-cent show.

"Wait a minute, gentlemen, let me interrupt the speaker," said Mr. Fox. "He says he has a five-cent theater. I understand the government imposes no tax on five-cent theaters. Will you please take a seat in the rear among the salesmen and managers?" continued Mr. Fox, addressing Mr. Hollander.

"No," was the reply amid loud laughter. "I charge 10 cents on Saturday and Sunday, so I am going to stay right here—and talk."

"Nick" Schenck of the Loew circuit said his house had made arrangements to have printed tickets with a perforation to cover the amount of the tax, so that one part would go in one box and the other would be set aside for the government.

The motion as passed declared the public should pay the tax and that the exhibitor should give due notice to his customers by lobby announcements and screen slides that the tax had been imposed by Congress on the people. G. B.

Brooklyn Exhibitors Hold Big Meeting

Settle Music Tax Controversy, Confer With Messrs. Powers and Berst on War Tax and Decide to Make Public Pay.

THE Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn held on the evening of Saturday, October 20, in the Triangle theater one of the most important meetings in the history of the organization. Rather it should be dated as of October 21, as the hundred members were called to order by President William Brandt at fifteen minutes before midnight and they continued in session until 3.30 o'clock.

The controversy between the exhibitors of the borough and the Society of American Authors, Composers and Publishers was settled when the exhibitors decided to sanction their members making application for a license through the secretary of the local league, in return for which a discount of 25 per cent. will be allowed members of the organization. All pending suits will be discontinued on the payment of the filing charges. The discussion uncovered the interesting fact that at the present time nineteen members of the Brooklyn organization are licensees of the composers' society. The action of the meeting disregards the expressed determination of the National League's executive committee to resist the composers' claims and also ignores the action of the State League in assessing each theater in the state $3 for the purpose of raising a fund to fight the music tax

The meeting also was marked by the appearance of P. A. Powers and J. A. Berst of the Universal and Pathe respectively but more directly the representatives of the distributors' group of the National Association. The executives had come at the invitation of President Brandt, who on Saturday had addressed the distributors' branch in opposition to the action of the exchanges in levying a tax of 15 cents a reel on all film rented. The two film men explained to the exhibitors why the war tax had been passed on to them and asserted the only thing for the exhibitors to do was to pass it on to the public, as plainly was the intent of Congress.

Mr. Powers made a long statement covering the history of the legislation resulting in the tax. At the same time he revealed many facts pertaining to the exchange business that certainly were interesting and at the same time plainly were new to the exhibitors. Later he answered many questions.

Mr. Powers quoted the firm of public accountants which does the expert work for a majority of the film companies as authority for the statement that the average number of bookings of feature films was fifty. In explanation he said it must be remembered every day was not a pay day for a film. In some exchanges, where a large territory was covered, it frequently happened a subject would be two, three or four days en route on each side of the actual showing. Mr. Berst gave statistics on this line, saying an investigation conducted in all the Pathe exchanges revealed only 20 per cent. of the films working each day.

Mr. Powers quoted the certified accountants as estimating the figure necessary to compensate the manufacturers for the film tax as 16 cents plus on each reel. Mr. Berst said an examination of the Pathe books placed the figure nearer 18 cents a reel. He estimated the amount involved in the film tax at $5,000,000 and said this could not be carried by the manufacturers. As an illustration of the inadequacy of the fifteen-cent imposition on each reel Mr. Berst cited the instance of the news reel—an extreme instance, he admitted. He said that practically no exhibitor in New York uses a weekly more than ten days old. As the three-quarter cent tax on a thousand feet would amount to $7.50, that would mean a daily rate of 75 cents, against the 15 cents charged the exhibitor.

The Universal executive had no patience with those who opposed higher admission prices. He cited as an example the action of the saloon keepers who, when there was an imposition of a tax of 1 or 2 cents on a certain quantity of liquor, had no hesitancy in jamming up the price a full nickel. As to the belief that there would be in the treasuries of the companies any surplus created by the levy of 15 cents a reel Mr. Powers expressed his entire willingness to devote all such moneys to any charity the meeting might nominate.

Questioned as to the reason for making the levy apply to all film whether released before October 4 or not Mr. Powers said the manufactures had agreed that the day the government lifted the tax they would do likewise. This would mean the manufacturers would have to meet all the expenses on films released just before the termination of the tax. To compensate for this they had decided to make the levy applicable to all rentals.

After the representatives of the National Association had retired—it was after 2 o'clock when they did and they carried a vote of thanks with them—there was a long discussion as to what course should be pursued. Speaking on the question of raising admission prices, one member, not quite comprehending one of the colloquialisms very much in use at that particular point, convulsed his fellow-members when he declared:

"How am I going to 'pass the bucket' on to my patrons when all the sports in my territory who are willing to pay more money are now down at Yaphank?"

The meeting finally voted to ask the exchanges to split the expense of the tax, to go fifty-fifty. There did not seem to be any unanimity of feeling that the resolution would have a large effect—there was frankly expressed skepticism. The meeting, however, appointed a committee of five to have general supervision of the working out of the tax law, to advise with members, and to report to the League for the benefit of its members and also of the government any failure noted on the part of any exhibitor to collect and make full returns of all war taxes. It was declared to be the sense of the meeting that the tax should be collected in addition to admissions.

Louis Levine, counsel of the organization, reported the results of his study of the law and advised the members in regard to provisions as to interpretation of which doubt had been expressed.

President Brandt made an important announcement regarding recent conferences with city officials. No longer will an exhibitor be summoned to court for a violation of the standee ordinance, for instance, and then after the case has been adjudicated be compelled to make a second appearance before the license commissioner. Hereafter the manager will be summoned to appear directly before the license commissioner, who will have full authority to adjudge the case. The president also announced that twelve cases now pending against exhibitors had been transferred from the courts to the license commissioner.

To observe the working of the war tax in Brooklyn and Long Island President Brandt named Messrs. Berman, Grossman, Manheimer, Haring and Lesselbaum. G. B.

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS DISCUSS TAX.

At a mass meeting of the exhibitors of Greater New York, held at 48th Street theater on Monday, October 22, the question of the admission tax was discussed, and in addition the increase of 15 cents on every reel of film by the distributors was considered. On the admission tax it was resolved, and almost unanimously carried, that all exhibitors add the ten per cent. tax to the prevailing admission prices and collect it from the public.

The resolution included an amendment that the exhibitors of Greater New York see that no exhibitor violated this agreement and further more that a committee of five be appointed by the chair to confer with the leading distributors to support this resolution.

It was agreed that first it must be learned whether this would be a violation of the Sherman act.

If an exhibitor raised his price from ten to fifteen cents, to include the tax, then he must print on his ticket that admission is 13 cents, and two cents for the war tax. The meeting was attended by 250 exhibitors.

Redfield Talks to Trade Press Publishers

Commissioner of Commerce Discusses the War and Its Beginnings and Analyzes "Trading with the Enemy."

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, representing in President Wilson's Cabinet the Department of Commerce, was the guest of honor on Tuesday, October 16, of the New York Business Publishers at a luncheon served in the Automobile Club, Fifty-fifth street. Several hundred men connected with the trade press of the metropolitan district as well as leading men in many lines of industry listened for an hour to a most interesting talk on the Trading with the Enemy act. By no means was Mr. Redfield's speech restricted to the matters contained within his general subject. It covered the whole range of the war, of its origin, its significance, of the necessity for teamwork upon the part of the whole hundred million of the people of the United States in order that peace may be the more quickly and securely brought about. At the close of the Secretary's address the diners with marked enthusiasm gave a standing vote of confidence in the Administration of which the commissioner has been a part from the beginning.

"The ways of commerce now are the ways of war," declared Secretary Redfield. "The whole nation must be one in its fighting from the smallest to the greatest, from the youngest to the oldest. Our boys in France are merely the spearheads of the United States, the power that actuates the spearheads comes from here. If we weaken here they fail yonder. Commerce has use as a war weapon in two ways—first, to provide the nations associated with us with the means of warfare; second, its use to see that our enemies do not by direction or indirection obtain anything going from our shores if we can prevent it."

Mr. Redfield declared the United States was engaged in a conflict against a hideous evil, an evil lodged in high places. It is not like our civil war, he went on; it is a fight against the devil and his works. He called attention to the fact that for the first time in the history of the world four-fifths of civilization was fighting against one-fifth; that side by side in one cause were representatives of many religions and races—and the speaker most entertainingly and eloquently enumerated all these seemingly diverse elements.

"There must be something unusual, something terrible, going on that has caused all these men to put aside their prejudices of faith and differences of religion and combine in one common sacrifice," declared Mr. Redfield. He analyzed the German philosophy, "the hideous philosophy," which assumed men of Teutonic race to be the superiors of the rest of humanity. He said that when Germans killed children in Belgium; when they pulled up under orders the grapevines, knowing it would take France seven years to replace them; when they destroyed fruit trees; when they committed all the crimes that had been laid at their door they did only what was normal in their philosophy. The commissioner appealed for subscriptions to Liberty Bonds, for self-sacrifice on the part of all that their subscriptions might be larger, in order that the men fighting for the United States and the soldiers and the peoples of the countries associated with us might be the better provided for.

From all angles it was a most impressive address and in every way worthy of the ovation extended to the Secretary at its close.

Want Sunday Pictures for Soldiers

Request of Major-General Bailey, Commanding Camp Jackson, Opposed by Ministers.

COLUMBIA, S. C., is now in the throes of a fight for Sunday opening of motion picture theaters, and a fight that will be warmly contested from both sides is in prospect. City Council was requested to allow the theaters to open Sunday afternoons and nights, this request coming from Major-General Charles Justin Bailey, commanding the Eighty-first Division at Camp Jackson.

The request states that there are numbers of men who avail themselves of the privileges of coming to the city on Sunday, their only entire holiday, and they are in want of a suitable place of amusement. It also states that the opening of the motion picture houses would not seriously interfere with the attendance at the churches and would keep the men from frequenting questionable places.

Members of City Council have expressed themselves as being in favor of the plan. By reason of the fact that a state "blue" law was made several years ago in reference to this matter there will have to be some special action by the city fathers, and the matter will be taken up within the next few days.

It is pointed out by those who are favoring the Sunday opening that it will not interfere in any way with the churches of the city and will be a decided benefit to the discipline and contentment of the soldiers not only in providing innocent amusement, but in keeping them from objectionable places on their whole holiday. On the other hand, the Ministerial Association and many leading citizens are opposing the movement with all their power, and the matter will be decided one way or the other at the next meeting of the council.

The letter to General Bailey was as follows:

"To Mayor Griffith.

"Sir: Sunday is the only day in which the men of the command have an entire holiday, and naturally a large number of them avail themselves of the privilege of visiting the city. During the afternoons and evenings there are no places of amusement open to them. For this reason it is requested that the motion picture theaters be permitted to run on Sunday afternoons and nights.

"It is believed that if such authority is given it will not interfere with church attendance and will be a decided benefit to the discipline and contentment of the command, not only in providing innocent amusement, but in keeping the men from objectionable places.

"CHARLES J. BAILEY,
"United States National Army, Commanding."

Exhibitors Eager for Training Film

Hundreds Make Application for Single Reel Subject Showing Camp Life—To Boost Universal Training.

HUNDREDS of motion picture exhibitors throughout New York, the New England states and Northern New Jersey, on Monday, October 22, added to their patriotic obligations by running the one-reel picture, "Who Leads the National Army?" a film authorized by the Government, promoted by the Military Training Camps Association of the United States, and distributed by Triangle Corporation as a patriotic duty.

The response of exhibitors in the territory served by the New York, Buffalo, Boston and New Haven Triangle exchanges was almost unanimous. Hundreds volunteered to book the picture in place of some other one-reel subject and pay exactly the same rental price that they would pay for the other short subject.

All of the funds derived from the rental of the picture are to be used in the first big gun of a campaign for universal military training, especially with the younger generation. The plan is to establish camps throughout the country at which boys from fourteen to nineteen years of age will be given a course of one or two months each year in military tactics under regular army men. The time at which the boys will attend these camps will be so arranged as not to interfere with their school attendance and will be without expense to the attendants.

The first object sought to be obtained through the showing of "Who Leads the National Army?" is to demonstrate to the people of the United States, and especially the relatives of those affected by the draft, that the officers of the National Army are efficient, well trained men, thoroughly capable of taking complete charge of the physical and moral welfare of the men of their commands.

This object is attained in the picture by showing just exactly the training through which the officers were forced to undergo before they received their commissions. They were "rookies" in everything and were treated as the rawest "rookies" that ever reported at a cantonment. Their military education started at the ground and gradually ascended the military ladder until they were capable of taking command. In this ascent many of them fell by the wayside, only sixteen thousand of about forty thousand applicants having the fortitude eventually to become officers. All of this training is present in the picture.

After the film has been presented in volume in the four districts named for the week of October 22 a few prints will be left in each of the exchanges and the remainder will be shipped to the Philadelphia and Pittsburgh Triangle exchanges, where the drive will be made during the week of October 29.

H. H. Barter in Shipbuilding Campaign

Technical Director of Culver City Plant Accepts Call from American Ship-Building Corporation—Enters New York at Once.

RECOGNITION as one of the foremost constructing engineers in the country has come to H. H. Barter, engineering and technical director of the Triangle Film Corporation's large producing plant at Culver City, Cal., in the form of a call to one of the most responsible executive positions in the American International Ship-Building Corporation of Philadelphia, which is the active agent for the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation. Mr. Barter's acceptance of the position marks another instance where the necessity of the nation has brought forward the motion-picture business as a ranking industry, whose close co-operation with the government is proving invaluable.

H. H. Barter.

Mr. Barter's departure from Triangle is in the nature of a response to an emergency summons from Washington. At the present time the ship-building corporation is undertaking a tremendous enterprise for the allied cause, and is enlisting the services of the ablest technical experts in every engineering line. For seven years Mr. Barter was a member of the technical staff of Stone & Webster, the prominent Boston firm of constructing engineers, and while thus employed he had charge of the development of several large water-power projects in Washington and Nevada.

He is a graduate of the University of Illinois, Class of 1904, and began his professional career in Springfield, Ill., with the mechanical department of the Racine-Sattley Manufacturing Corporation. During the beginning of the railroad extension activity in the Northwest he went to Seattle, Wash., and was afterwards sent to Alaska to build the Seward Peninsula Railway.

When the Panama-California Exposition opened at San Diego, Cal., in 1915 Mr. Barter became chief electrical engineer of the exposition and later director of works. H. O. Davis, now vice-president and general manager of the Triangle Film Corporation, was director-general of the exposition, and through his influence Barter was persuaded to enter the motion picture production field. The two men have been associated in the industry for several years, lately with Triangle.

Accompanied by his wife and two children Mr. Barter will leave Culver City immediately for Philadelphia. He has not yet been informed of his ultimate destination, and for obvious reasons his future headquarters will be unknown. He expects to be engaged in the Government work for at least two years, at the end of which time, or when the termination of the war makes it possible, he expects to return to his work at Triangle. Mr. Barter is a member of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers and a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers.

Illinois Exhibitors Aiding Hoover

Under Leadership of George K. Spoor State Has Been Divided Into Districts.

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, is busy organizing motion picture exhibitors throughout Illinois in the interests of Food Director Hoover's food economy campaign. Mr. Spoor, who is chairman of the Motion Picture Bureau of Food Administration of Illinois, is doing the work at his own expense.

The state has been divided into districts, with an exhibitor appointed in each district to arrange with other theater owners to show the food economy films. Two hundred feet of film will be shown each week. They will show how to prepare foods in an economical manner, how to peel potatoes with the minimum of waste, how to live on less meat, the relative food values of various commodities, etc.

In addition each week "Four-Minute Men" will visit each of the theaters in the food economy circuit and deliver four-minute talks on the importance of conserving food to help win the war. Mr. Spoor is organizing this force now in Chicago and has fifty speakers on his rolls.

Each theater in the circuit will be supplied with one-sheets in six colors, advertising the pictures and the food economy lectures. The films will be extensively advertised in newspapers and through other mediums, and an especial effort will be made to induce housewives to attend when the food economy pictures are shown.

Another form of patriotism was in evidence about the Essanay studios a few days ago when Richard C. Travers, former Essanay actor, now in the second officers' training camp at Fort Sheridan, marched into the plant at the head of two hundred companions, at the invitation of Mr. Spoor. Among them was L. J. Scott, formerly connected with the Essanay advertising department, who joined at the same time Travers entered.

Travers was in command of the men by virtue of his being an acting top sergeant. The men marched from the elevated station, about four blocks from the studio, in regular military form. They broke ranks upon entering the studio. C. F. Chandler, advertising manager, representing President Spoor, made an address of welcome. The student officers were then conducted on a tour of inspection of the entire plant, from the factory and studios to the business offices.

Following the inspection trip and an informal reception that followed, the men gave a few fancy drills in the street in front of the studio while a couple of Essanay photographers worked their Graflexes. Motion picture of 200 feet was taken of the men drilling.

MISS SNOW SELLS BONDS IN BOSTON.

Marguerite Snow, famous motion-picture star, made a personal appearance at the Park Theater, Boston, Mass., last Monday and Tuesday, and through the courtesy of Manager Thomas D. Soriero of the Park Theater it was arranged for Miss Snow to sell Liberty Bonds for the Manufacturers' National Bank at their booth in Houghton & Dutton's, one of Boston's largest department stores.

Originally booked to appear in Boston only one day, so many of Miss Snow's admirers were turned away from both the theater and Houghton & Dutton's that she was persuaded to remain a second day, necessitating wiring to Director Larry McGill of the Pathe-Solax studio for permission to remain away from the studio for another twenty-four hours. Leave of another day granted, Miss Snow was tendered a dinner at the Hotel Lenox by Manager Soriero and Mr. George A. Fecke, manager of the World Film Corporation's Boston branch.

At Houghton & Dutton's Miss Snow succeeded in disposing of more than $100,000 worth of Liberty Bonds, George A. Crittenden, vice-president of the Chandler Motors of New England, personally subscribing for $50,000.

MARION DAVIES A HARD WORKER.

Marion Davies, the beautiful star of the Ardsley Art Film Corporation, has led an active life during the past few weeks. She is hard at work on her second moving picture and rehearsing at the same time as one of the stars in Dillingham and Ziegfeld's "Miss 1917," which will open at the Century theater on October 29. Miss Davies is to be among those featured in this new Century theater production which will include Lew Fields, Irene Castle, Bessie McCoy, Margot Kelly, Cecil Lean, Harry Kelly, Cleo Mayfield and others.

Detroit Exhibitors Meet

Discuss Business Conditions and Elect a New Board of Officers.

THE Detroit branch of the American Exhibitors Association held very important meetings at Detroit, Mich., Oct. 11 and 18, in the Board of Commerce rooms, for the purpose of outlining some definite attitude with respect to the new conditions arising, particularly as to the government war tax, the express situation and the license fee demanded by the music publishers association. The report of the secretary showed that new members are being taken in every week and that the future looked bright from the membership standpoint. Little by little exhibitors are warming up to the new association, realizing that it is for the general good of the industry.

Regarding the war tax, exhibitors believe it will work a hardship on the small theater, but on the other hand, are not inclined to become pessimistic just yet. The war tax is something that the public become used to within a very short time as they have in Canada and exhibitors will note an increase in their business instead of a decrease. The music tax or license fee being demanded is right now the most serious of all.

The asociation has been furnished a list of the music which exhibitors cannot use without the license, and it seems to be the general understanding among exhibitors that they will positively refuse to play any music that is represented in the publishers association. The Detroit exhibitors do not see why when they buy music that does not give them the right to play it—furthermore, exhibitors contend that the popularizing of music really takes place in the theater, which in turn creates the demand at the music stores.

Election of officers was held and resulted as follows: President, George Wilber, of the Majestic and Marx theaters, Wyandotte; vice-president, Harry Oppenheim, Arcade Theater; secretary, King Perry, Luna Theater; treasurer, John Brennan, Cozy Theater.

MINNEAPOLIS EXHIBITORS BALL

Plans have been completed for the grand moving picture ball at Minneapolis, Minn., to be given at the New Coliseum Hall, Twenty-seventh and Lake streets, here on Oct. 22 by members of the Exhibitors Corporation of the Northwest. Bryant Washburn, who will lead the grand march with the winner of the Tribune's popularity contest, is due to arrive in the Flour City on the morning of October 22 from Chicago.

Pettijohn Willing to Resign If——

American Association's Manager Will Go Half Way in Compromise Movement, But Says Ochs Will Have to Come Across Too.

FOR several days there have been hints in the film district that there was a strong probability the chiefs of the National League and the American Exhibitors' Association would get together; that Charles Pettijohn, general manager of the latter organization, and Lee Ochs, president of the former, would resign, and a new head elected to the combined body. When Mr. Pettijohn was asked as to what truth there might be in the story he shook his head.

"I don't believe there is anything in it," he said. "So far as I am concerned the layout is all right. I am ready to lay my cards on the table, but naturally I shall insist on at least one condition—others must do the same thing. And I guess that is where the rub will come. Presumably I am the man who is getting the big thing out of this office holding stuff; just presumably, you know. Actually, it is my belief my interests are minor when compared to those of the head of the National League. Seemingly those are not to be measured by the salary of $150 a year, or whatever it may be. No, I am ready to tear up a perfectly good contract if by so doing a get-together can be brought about. There are those who profess to believe this attitude is a bluff on my part, but let 'em go ahead and try to call it. They'll get fooled."

It is understood the general subject of getting together has been discussed between men prominent on the two sides of the organized exhibitor house. Recently, when Jake Wells and Messrs. Crandall of Washington and Mosher of Buffalo, officials of the new organization, were in New York, they met casually some of the chiefs of the League. The result was a general view of the situation as it exists today, with a discussion as to how a compromise might be effected. When the question of resignations was put up to Mr. Pettijohn he declared his willingness to meet the officials of the National Association and before them repeat his assertion he would resign if Mr. Ochs would do the same thing.

So far as can be learned the matter rests here, with scant belief on the part of those on the inside that anything in the way of a compromise will be effected.

Mr. Pettijohn left New York on Friday, October 19, for Indianapolis, where he expected to remain ten days.

New Jersey Exhibitors Meet

Big Convention Held at Newark—Officers Elected for Ensuing Year.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of New Jersey met in annual convention at Acktel-Stetter Hall in Newark, New Jersey, on Wednesday, October 17th. It was an all day session, attended by one hundred and five exhibitors and seventeen representatives of the distributing companies, President Charles H. Hespe presided, with all the other officers in their respective places. The members of the League went into executive session at 11 a. m. and 12 m. The minutes of the last annual convention were read by the secretary. Report of the delegates to the National Convention was made, which

Coming League and Other Exhibitors' Conventions

(Secretaries Are Requested to Send Dates and Particulars Promptly)

Maryland Exhibitors' League at Baltimore ..... October 28 and 29

Dinner of New Jersey League, at Newark, October 17, 1917.

brought the proceedings to the election of these officers for the ensuing year: Charles H. Hespe of Jersey City, president; Henry J. Rockfeller, Asbury Park, vice-president; J. G. Crawford, New York, treasurer; P. Adams, sergeant-at-arms, Paterson. All were unanimously re-elected. Walter Meyer of New York succeeded Philip Bornsteen as secretary.

At 2 p. m. the convention was adjourned until 4 p. m. to partake of a dinner, to which all those present were invited. After-dinner addresses were made by ex-Governor Fielder of New Jersey, now Food Commissioner of New Jersey; Stephen Bush, Lee A. Ochs and Sam Spedon.

The convention reconvened at 4 p. m., and Lee A. Ochs, the National President, gave a lucid and full explanation of the war taxes on films and admissions, which go into effect November 1st. This matter brought about a general discussion, which ended by the adoption of a resolution that it was the consensus of opinion of the League that the most logical way to meet the taxes which the Government demanded, including admission, film, income, etc., was to increase admission prices five cents.

Another resolution adopted was to this effect: Resolved, that all distributing agents be authorized by their superiors to sign contracts when made with the exhibitors without being obliged to send said contracts for pictures back to the home office for confirmation, thereby preventing confusion and the selling of the pictures contracted for to competitors before the contract is returned from the home office with endorsement. Furthermore, that a copy of this resolution be sent to all exchanges with whom the members do business.

The music license demanded by the Society of Music Publishers and Authors was discussed, and a motion was made and carried that the members refrain from playing all music controlled by the society, thereby avoiding the license until some more favorable arrangement is made.

The advance deposit was gone into. No definite plan of action was reached on this point, but the general sentiment was expressed that a demand for its abolition be made by all members of the League, individually and collectively.

A telegram from a leading film company was read by the secretary, announcing that after November 1st fifteen cents extra would be charged exhibitors on each reel of film. Motion to adjourn, sine die, at 6 p. m. was adopted.

INFORMATION FOR PENNSYLVANIA EXHIBITORS.

A special bulletin containing full particulars of the War Revenue Bill as finally passed by Congress and which levies a heavy tax on theater admissions, raw film and positives was issued on Oct. 15 and distributed throughout Pennsylvania by the Exhibitors League of Pennsylvania. It contains the drastic provisions affecting the motion picture industry, namely, a 10 per cent tax on all admissions with the exception of the five-cent houses; a footage tax of one-quarter of a cent on all unexposed film sold by the manfacturer or importer; and an additional tax of one-half cent a foot on all positive prints sold or leased by the manufacturer, producer or importer. In addition the bulletin contains a partial list of the non-taxable music, which can be used by orchestras, pianists or organists of motion picture houses. It is the intention of Charles H. Goodwin, secretary of the league, to make a drive at this time in order to increase the membership with the view of organizing a stronger and more efficient body of exhibitors for mutual protection.

OREGON EXHIBITORS PLAN FOR BALL.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon held a regular meeting at Portland October 11 and decided to hold another convention and grand ball, in the near future, the exact date to depend upon the ability to get moving picture stars for the event. The Wednesday preceding Thanksgiving has been selected, subject to change. The arrangements will be in charge of a committee composed of W. A. Graeper, chairman, W. E. Tebbetts, J. B. Washtock, J. J. Parker and J. C. Stille. The new municipal auditorium, the largest hall in the city, is the place proposed for the affair.

Since the successful convention and ball last May, the League has received offers from producers to send stars to Portland if ever another event of the kind was staged and it is these offers that inspired the League members to make their present plans. Last year's ball was conceded to be the grandest in the West and the dancing public in Portland is looking forward to a repetition of the event. Over 3,000 people frolicked with the film fraternity at the Multnomah Hotel at the last affair.

The film men are not given much to serious business and the convention management last time made the mistake of holding meetings on two days. This time it is planned to have but one day for both business and festivities.

PITTSBURGH JOINS THE A. E. A. RANKS.

A Pittsburgh local of the American Exhibitors' Association was formed at a meeting held recently in the Seventh Avenue Hotel. There was an attendance of about thirty prominent exhibitors of the city and surrounding towns. Fred J. Herrington presided, and the following temporary officers were chosen: President, Frank Lobert, Imperial theater, Beltzhoover; secretary, Fred Karner, Dome theater, Butler street, Pittsburgh; treasurer, George Burry, B. & B. theater Pittsburgh. A committee was appointed to take up the war tax and music tax questions, consisting of John McConnell, Park theater, Butler street, Pittsburgh; Herman Mewis, Mirror theater, Mt. Oliver, and Fred. J. Herrington, Coliseum theater, Mt. Oliver.

Kansas Exhibitors Meet

Successful Convention Held at Wellington—War Tax and Other Problems Discussed.

THAT "patriotism" would be an important factor in the question coming before the Moving Pictures Exhibitors' League of Kansas was a common belief, but that it would be the most important factor in the complete settlement of all the questions brought to notice in the annual convention of the league at Manhattan, Kansas, October 15 and 16, would have seemed a thoughtless prophecy. The questions in mind are first the use of the Liberty Bond pictures, the use of the picture "Who Leads the National Army?" being released by Triangle, the music tax, and the government tax on the moving picture theaters. A better idea of the work can be gotten from an analysis of the meetings.

The first meeting of the convention was called to order by the president, Chris E. Glamann, owner of the Majestic at Wellington at 4.00 p. m. in the County Court House. The first speaker on the program was David D. Rodgers, national organizer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Mr. Rodgers made an earnest plea for cooperation between the exchange men and the exhibitors, showing them that this condition is an absolute necessity between these two branches of the industry. He suggested the passing of a resolution embodying the sentiment of the league in regard to the policy of President Wilson. The motion was made, seconded, and passed. This resolution was wired to the president of the Motion Pictures Exhibitors' League of Americ., Lee A. Ochs, and to William A. Brady, president of the National Moving Picture Industry of America. The exact wording was:

"We, the exchange men and the exhibitors, in convention assembled, pass the following resolution, 'that we support the President and our country in this war, and extend him every assistance in the power of our organization., We ask you to advise the President that the theaters of these exhibitors are at his disposal."

C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager of the Kansas City Pathe office, followed Mr. Rodgers. He explained the use of the Liberty Bond Pictures and incidentally showed a wonderful example of the efficiency that our government is so desirous of obtaining. The Kansas City Pathe office has mapped out a route for the picture, wherein the picture runs for 28 consecutive days, one day in each theater of 28. Somebody suggested the use of paper on the picture, but it was explained that this luxury was not forthcoming with this picture. His speech fairly sparkled with loyalty to our government, and his sincerity and enthusiasm had its effect on the others present. He de..ied the accusation that there was any ill feeling between the Kansas City exchangemen and the Kansas exhibitors.

C. B. Pittenger, traveling salesman for the Kansas City Triangle office, then explained the use of the picture prepared by the war department, "Who Leads the National Army?" which is being released by his office. He suggested the gift of part or all of the receipts of the theater showing the pictures to the National Training Camp Association. Questions in regard to the showing of the picture were answered by Mr. Pittenger, and the general sentiment was in favor of its use.

C. B. Yost, of Hutchinson, supplied the adverse feeling that tends to make a meeting lively. He said that the payment of the war tax was already a great aid to the national government and that this request of the war department to show the picture for the benefit of the Red Cross was going a little too far.

The evening meeting was begun with an impassioned talk by Mr. Rodgers on the combination of certain music publishers to exact a tax or royalty for the use of certain music in motion picture theaters. Mr. Rodgers pointed out that the heavy tax must be paid under liability to penalty of heavy fines or imprisonment up to five years in the penitentiary; but that there was a loophole for the escape of this tax as well as a loophole for the escape of the war tax. He said lists of music were available, of publishers who were not exacting the heavy payments, and that all exhibitors should use this tax-free music. He mentioned that vaudeville houses were not to be taxed; and threatened that if any Chicago exhibitor were arrested for playing music without paying tax, he would insist on the arrest of every vaudeville manager in Chicago who played the music in his house without paying. He added that the musicians' unions were supporting the exhibitors, so that taxed music would not be played by them. There was much discussion of various phases, especially with reference to vaudeville acts in motion picture theaters; but no definite conclusion was reached as to safe procedure. The exhibitors, however, are united in their purpose to oppose a "tax" on their music, and they later agreed to contribute $3 each to help the fight against the imposition. President Glamann said that he would have copies made of the lists of publishers who did not charge on their copyrights, and distribute them to the exhibitors of Kansas.

The discussion on the music "tax" brought out an interesting suggestion from several members, that the older music, not copyrighted, was often the best. F. E. Pattee, of Lawrence, was especially enthusiastic on this subject; he declared that he had been using old songs lately, and found that they fitted the pictures excellently; he was using them almost exclusively on his music rolls. Others commented that the quality of music probably would be improved by the exclusion of much of the modern rag-time and shallow stuff that would be taxed. Mr. Rodgers added that the Wurlitzer company was calling in all rolls of the publishers who are demanding the payments, and exchanging for untaxed music.

The question of the war tax on admissions occupied the earnest attention of the exhibitors for more than an hour. There were positive opinions on many sides of the problem as to what the tax was, what it meant, how it was to be collected, and how paid. Perhaps other districts have been as greatly confused as has Kansas—but the exhibitors here certainly hope not. There were some 20 features on which opinions differed. Many were sure a 5-cent section could be set aside tax-free in a 10-cent house; that seemed impracticable to others. How about people coming in free, on official or private business? Mr. Rodgers said a man coming on business, such as an exchange representative would not have to pay the tax—that sounded good. Children, it seemed agreed, would not have to pay on a 5-cent admission, unless put into a ten-cent seat by the person accompanying them.

Some believed that a child under twelve paying 20 or 25 cents admission would have to pay a one-cent tax. Several emphasized the difficulty of keeping track of the tax—and the suggestion that stamps would be sold in many places, to be affixed by the patrons as they bought tickets, seemed ideal at first, but had great difficulties. Unfortunately the deeper the convention went into the subject, the more complex it became, and at the close there was less understanding of the tax than at the beginning. Mr. Rodgers read a letter recently received from Lee A. Ochs, from Washington, carefully explaining the law, in detail, and pointing out the best ways to follow it. Mr. Ochs' careful description of the method of charging 13 and 18 cents for tickets, and collecting 15 and 20 cents to include the tax, was accepted by many as the most convenient way of handling the matter; but there were some who insisted that the tax must be paid by the patron without the apparent equivocation of including it in the admission. Mr. Rodgers told of the work of Mr. Ochs to prevent the passage of the bill taxing motion picture theater attendance, and of his own familiarity with the act, and the methods of observing it. He made it very clear that the payment of the tax was to be entirely up to the honor of the exhibitor, whatever the details of the collection might be.

President Glamann read telegrams with reference to the dates for starting the material on conservation, but in view of the fact that some exhibitors had already started the series, on October 14, it seemed likely that the desired uniformity in the campaign would be prevented.

Howard E. Jameyson, assistant manager of the Pathe exchange at Kansas City, delivered a stirring address on censorship, giving ideas gleaned during his participation in censorship fights in Illinois and in St. Louis. He declared that in those cases, women and organizations previously quite decided in favor of censorship, had changed their stand; and that it was possible to secure a similar change of front in Kansas, if the proper method were adopted with reference to the women's clubs of the state. He pointed out that this particular time was most propitious for presenting the subject in the new light, because the whole world was aroused on the principle of liberty.

The third and last meeting of the convention was called at 9 a. m. and lasted until 12.20 a. m. The two topics of great importance discussed and acted upon were the music tax and the use of the deposit system.

In regard to the music tax, a resolution was passed by which all the exhibitors present pledged themselves to use only music published by companies outside of the combination working the royalty plan. Each man present contributed $3.00 to a general fund to combat the proposed tax in Kansas. All the exhibitors in Kansas are being asked to subscribe to the fund and it is believed that this request will meet with widespread response.

The Kansas men are very much opposed to any deposit plan and this opposition was evidenced in their reiteration of a pledge made at the last convention at Hutchinson which was to the effect that no pictures would be used from an exchange demanding deposits. Many of the exhibitors in Kansas as well as in other states look upon the deposit in the light of a royalty.

There was also a short discussion of the war tax with no visible arrival at a common interpretation of the law.

The election of officers closed the meeting. Chris E. Glamann, owner of the Majestic at Wellington was re-elected president of the League; W. H. Willey, Mulberry, Kan., was the successful candidate for the vice-presidency; William Meyns, Kansas City, Kan., was made treasurer; Mrs. Charles H. Barren will continue as secretary of the League. A legislative committee was elected consisting of Chris Glamann, chairman, Wellington; R. H. Holmes, Emporia; Will Meyns, Kansas City, Kansas; W. S. Nelson, Great Bend, and C. E. Ochlrich, McPherson.

McPherson was the place selected for the next convention which will be held in April, 1918. The attendance at this convention is expected to be far greater than the one just closed.

MARYLAND CONVENTION DATES SETTLED.

At a special meeting of the Board of Directors of the Maryland Exhibitors' League which was held on Tuesday, October 9, to discuss the plans for the coming convention of Maryland Exhibitors, it was decided that this convention should be held on Sunday and Monday, October 28 and 29. According to the arrangements which were formulated at this meeting, a letter was sent out on Monday, October 15 to every exhibitor in the state inviting him to attend.

The gathering will be held on the roof garden of the Garden theater, Lexington street at Park avenue, on October 28 at about 2 p. m. and it is understood that many questions of vital importance will be discussed, including the matter of legislation which is adverse to film interests. On Monday there will probably be an oyster roast for all who attend the convention and a program of excellent entertainment is being outlined. Those directors who attended this meeting were: F. A. Hornig, J. Louis Rome, E. B. McCurdy, W. Albers, L. A. De Hoff, W. E. Stumpf.

TICKET TAX MADE PLAIN.

The difference between "United States" language and "legal language," such as used in promulgating laws and regulations by the Government, is well illustrated by the difference between the average man's talk and the lawyer's verbiage. For example, when the average mortal wants to give you an orange he says: "Here is an orange for you." But when the lawyer does it he will say: "I hereby and herewith give, set over, convey and transfer to you, your heirs and assigns forever, this orange, with the right to peel it, squeeze it, eat it, suck it, in part or in its entirety, or to make such use thereof as shall be further provded in these covenants," etc.

It isn't for the writer to say whether or not all this legal phraseology is necessary in publishing laws and legal regulations. It is sufficient to note that the custom exists, and that it eats up valuable time and brain tissue to have to study lengthy paragraphs of this kind abounding in lawful language.

For this reason exhibitors welcome with enthusiasm a "hefty" little brochure with the attractive title, "The New Ticket Tax Law" in a nutshell, not only because it explains the entire situation in the simplest form, but because it contains practical, thoroughly tested hints on the best way of conforming to the new tax regulations without inconvenience, and in a manner that won't subject the exhibitor to the suspicions of the Government or to frequent visitations and inquisitions by the government inspector.

This booklet is to be had free for the asking from the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, 1731 Broadway, New York, and is furnished free for the asking to any reader of the Moving Picture World.

Paramount-Artcraft Drive Under Way

Advertising in the Million-Dollar Campaign Already Placed in Sixty Large Newspapers.

TWENTY-SIX million newspaper readers throughout the United States, a percentage of whom probably have not yet become regular screen patrons, will be told of Paramount and Artcraft productions through the million dollar advertising campaign in approximately three hundred newspapers published in eighty-two cities and having a combined circulation of nineteen million. It is easily estimated that the remaining seven million will see these advertisements which in every instance will carry prominently the trademarks of the companies. These in turn will be used by exhibitors in their local advertising. They are obtainable from the company's exchanges.

This means literally that every corner of the country will be reached and that anyone who reads will see the announcements, learn to know a Paramount or Artcraft picture by its identifying mark and ask for these productions. In connection with the drive also will be the campaign in the national magazines and on the electric billboards in most important and conspicuous places.

It means in addition that an immense amount of publicity for Paramount and Artcraft pictures will be added to the already widespread number of articles, reading notices, pictures, etc., that are being published in the papers and magazines.

Besides all previous or contemporary campaigns to popularize pictures of a certain brand and to bring new patronage to the exhibitors in all parts of the country, the drive stands out prominently, and by reason of its importance, by the way in which the money is expended, as well as the amount devoted to the campaign, has attracted the attention of the industry.

This advertising has already been allotted to newspapers in sixty cities and is merely the beginning. Other cities of populations varying between 100,000 and 75,000 will be included in the campaign, which is the most far-reaching ever undertaken by a motion picture organization.

Oro Company Incorporates

Will Release One Six-Part Picture a Month—Isadore Bernstein to Supervise Production.

THE Oro Pictures Company, Inc., with offices at 729 Seventh Avenue, has been organized. H. Grossman is president. The concern will release one six-part production each month. These will be made under the supervision of Isadore Bernstein. The first three subjects, which have been completed and will be released in the order named, are, "Loyalty," "Humility" and "When Destiny Wills."

"We are going to produce pictures and distribute them under the care of a staff of practical, experienced and artistic men, who are expert in their department," said President Grossman, "and these pictures will measure up to the highest standard of the art.

"We have taken over the plant of the Bernstein Productions, Inc., at Los Angeles, and work on production has already been started. We have arranged a co-operative working plan with the exchanges in which the burden of the work and the burden of the expense are not borne by the exchange. We have shown our proposition to the various exchanges, and it has met with the approval of the Modern Feature Film Company of New York, the Boston Photoplay Company, the Celebrated Players Film Company of Chicago, the Abe Kaufman Film Company of Memphis, and other exchanges. All this territory was disposed of in less than ten days, and this was before we had actually began business."

KEYSTONERS PREPARING TO MOVE.

The entire personnel of the Triangle-Keystone studios, which includes over one hundred and fifty players, cameramen, writers, et cetera, are anxiously looking forward to "moving day." Although no official word has yet been received it is rumored that the comedy plant will be moved to the Triangle Film Corporation's studios some time this month or as soon as the mammoth new 304x80 foot stage is completed at Culver City. Many of the players now live near the Triangle-Keystone studios in Hollywood, and it is very likely that most of them will move to Culver City or one of the many beach resorts which are only a few minutes ride from the Culver City plant. Players seem to agree that one of the best things about working in pictures on the Coast is the long bathing season.

Crandall Opens Knickerbocker

By C. L. Linz

Washington, D. C.'s, New Picture Theater Has Remarkable Premiere---Many Distinguished Guests

WITH the streets thronged with society folks, representatives of the army and navy, and official life of Washington, the opening of the Knickerbocker theater at Eighteenth street and Columbia road, Northwest, Washington, D. C., Saturday evening, October 13, became a society event of the season. With a seating capacity of 1,800 and accommodations for many more people standing, the theater was overcrowded for the two evening performances and it was found necessary to turn a large number away.

The initial presentation of "Betsy Ross" was made notable by the appearance on the stage after each performance of Alice Brady, who stars in the production. With a couple of stories and a few songs Miss Brady won her two audiences by storm and made a place for herself among the people of Washington that speaks well for the future patronage of the house when her pictures appear. Others of the stars who came here for the opening of the house were Carlyle Blackwell, Rose Tapley, Belle Bruce, Francis X. Bushman and Miss Beverly Bayne. Each of these were called to the stage by Charles C. Pettyjohn, who was master of ceremonies.

Many Invited Guests Welcomed.

Following the last performance of the evening a number of specially invited guests gathered in the promenade hall, where a buffet supper was served. At its conclusion, Barry Bulkley, on behalf of the board of directors, welcomed those present. "The energy of a few public - spirited citizens of Washington, under the inspiring suggestion of Harry M. Crandall," he said, "has rendered possible this theater We have endeavored to make it second to none in its appointments, worthy of the great capital of a great nation. To keep it so will be the highest endeavor of its management.

Harry M. Crandall.

"While it is particularly gratifying to see in this gathering so many of local and national prominence, especially is it a pleasure to greet our friends from New York and elsewhere who have generously taken of their time to journey to Washington to felicitate us on our inaugural. We laymen should not arrogate to ourselves the conceit that they have come on our account. On the contrary, it is the lure of a name, that strange influence which has spelled success in the motion picture world, which stands for decency of thought in the presentation of subject—the name of Crandall."

Judge Milton C. Elliott was toastmaster, and he introduced the various speakers, included among whom were Hon. Louis Brownlow, commissioner of the District of Columbia, "Washington's Mayor"; Admiral George W. Baird, U. S. Navy; Charles C. Pettyjohn, Louis Selznick and others beside the various actors and actresses named.

Those of the guests who arrived early enough were given an opportunity to go over the theater and to admire the beauty of its architecture. It was built upon plans drawn by Reginald Wyckliffe Geare, an architect of great prominence, who has made an extensive study of theaters, theater-designing and construction, spending a great deal of time traveling to the many large centers of the east and middle west with Manager Crandall with a view to getting the most modern ideas. The Knickerbocker is the result of this intensive planning of two men, leaders in their respective lines.

Among Notables Present.

Their guests at the banquet included Commissioner Louis Brownlow, Major Ray Pullman, superintendent of police; Fire Marshal P. W. Nicholson, Building Inspector Thomas Costigan, Admiral George W. Baird, United States Navy; Judge Milton C. Elliott, Judge W. I. McCoy, of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia; R. Wyckliffe Geare, Snowden Ashford, Gilbert H. Grosvenor, Robert W. Wooley, commissioner, Interstate Commerce Commission; E. C. Bradley, John C. Hemphill, Col. F. A. Richardson, Robert W. Lewis, Charles R. Light, H. King Cornwell, A. G. Clapham, Felix Feist, Guy Wonders, John Healy, R. E. Barron, manager Goldwyn Pictures; Vivian Whitaker, manager Select Pictures Corporation; Sidney R. Lust, distributor state rights films; Rudolph Berger, manager Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay; A. Dresner, manager Exhibitor's Film exchange; Carl Senning, manager Fox Film Corporation; L. M. Day, president Metro Film Service Company; Robert Smeltzer, manager World Film Corporation; George F. Lenehan, manager Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essenay; A. J. Nelson, manager General Film Company; E. C. What the Knickerbocker Theater Is.

The auditorium has a seating capacity of 1,800 persons, a large refreshment parlor, dancing promenade, lounge tea room, retiring room and accessories. The building is located at the southwest corner of the intersection of Eighteenth Street and Columbia Road. It has a frontage of 173 feet on the former and of 150 feet on the latter. The main entrance is on the Eighteenth Street side. It is very elaborate in design, being ornamented with stone columns and carved pilasters above. It is protected from the weather by a marquise, finished in gold, which extends to the curb. Within the entrance there is a wide lobby practically the entire length of the Eighteenth Street side, with doorways leading into the auditorium and into the refreshment parlor which occupies the corner of the ground floor. At the south end of the lobby there is a grand stairway leading to the balcony, tea room, promenade and lounge.

The entrance lobby is finished in Caen stone walls with marble floors. This room is twenty feet in height and is lighted by specially designed fixtures which are similar to the beautiful lantern hanging in the entrance hall of the White House, the home of our presidents.

The auditorium takes the shape of a triangle with the stage at the apex. It covers 16,000 square feet of ground and has a height of 45 feet to the ceiling. This plan allows unusual sight lines and gives a perfect view to the stage from every seat in the house. The auditorium is decorated in soft grey and cream tones. The wall panels are covered with cream-golden silk.

The lighting system will prove exceptionally good, although on the occasion of the opening of the theater it had not been gotten under control. There are absolutely no shadows. It is controlled in three circuits, one of which produces an amber light during the showing of the pictures, the other two are purple and old rose and may be turned on during the intermission and orchestrations. There are 500 electric globes used in this lighting system.

Crandall's Knickerbocker Theater, Washington, D. C.

The heating and ventilating system is original in this house. The architect considered many systems, including the old mushroom system usually used in theaters. After eliminating all of the known systems of heating and ventilating it was decided to do something radical. This has proven very successful. The elimination from the view of the patrons of the theater of the radiators was accomplished by installing in the balcony ten thousand square feet of Vento radiation, which transformed the balcony into an immense radiator. The radiation was installed in three banks and above each bank an eight-foot Typhoon fan was installed. These fans are so arranged that one or more of them will deliver air through the radiator into the balcony space and then through the registers located in risers into the auditorium. The air is then drawn down under the stage and is exhausted above the roof.

This system has been found to be more satisfactory in its operation, due to the flexibility with which it can be regulated. Regulation of the speed of the fans determines the amount of warm air introduced and can be quickly accommodated to the changes in the weather. In extremely cold weather this system allows of recirculation and the theater can be heated to a temperature of one hundred degrees if necessary.

The ventilation of the theater during hot weather is attained by the use of three eight-foot fans under the balcony which exhaust the air, and three twin-eight-foot Typhoon sets on the roof of the building which blows the fresh air into the building at the rate of 500,000 cubic feet of air per minute. It is said that the rush of air into the theater will equal in coolness and exhilaration riding in an automobile at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour.

The promenade and rest rooms are decorated in varying tones of grey and gold. The promenade is directly over the main lobby and occupies a space 173 feet long, 20 feet wide and 20 feet high. The ceiling is barrel vault. This room can accommodate 200 couples during the dancing periods at intermission. It is equipped with a special ventilating system, similar to the one installed in the auditorium. It was in this room that the banquet was held.

The members of the Knickerbocker Theater Corporation are Harry M. Crandall, president; Barry Bulkley, secretary; Fred S. Swindell, treasurer; James Cahill and Tucker K. Sands.

Pauline Curley to Support Harold Lockwood

DAINTY, golden-haired Pauline Curley has been engaged by Fred J. Balshofer as leading support to Harold Lockwood, Metro star, in the forthcoming Metro-Yorke production, "Love Me for Myself Alone," a screen version of Francis Perry Elliott's story of the same name, published in Smith's Magazine. She will have the part of the "wonder girl," Beatrice Forsythe.

Pauline Curley.

Miss Curley has recently won approval as the Princess Irene in the Brenon production, "The Fall of the Romanoffs." She has also appeared in numerous Triangle, Fox, Famous Players, Pathe, Reliance and Pilot features.

Mr. Lockwood's leading woman will encounter a number of old friends in the Metro forces. She appeared with the star himself in "The Crucible," in which she played the sister of the character played by Marguerite Clarke. At that time she confided to her mother that it was her ambition to play a part opposite Mr. Lockwood. In "Love Me for Myself Alone" that ambition will be gratified. Miss Curley will also meet again William S. Davis, who was her director in "Dr. Rameau," a Fox feature. Hs is now directing Emily Stevens in a forthcoming Metro Super-Feature. Still another friend is Frank Currier, who is in the great Nazimova's cast in "A Rose Bush of a Thousand Years," a Metro Super-Feature now being produced. Miss Curley and Mr. Currier were associated in Triangle features.

In addition to her screen work, Miss Curley has posed for well known artists, among them Church, Munsey and Orson Lowell. Her principal appearances on the speaking stage have been in "Polygamy," with Mary Shaw, and in Hans Robert's vaudeville act, "A Daddy by Express." This was when she was playing children's parts. As a child actress, she was also featured in "Thanksgiving," a Reliance picture in which Irving Cummings and Gertrude Robinson appeared.

PHOTOPLAYERS CLUB FORMED BY JAPANESE PLAYERS.

The Japanese Photoplayers Club, of Los Angeles was formed a few nights ago by natives of the land of Nippon who are members of the local film colony. Sessue Hayakawa of the Lasky Company and Frank Tokanaga of the Universal Company were the leaders of the movement to organize the club, the object of which is principally to see that its members do not appear in productions reflecting upon the Japanese race.

In addition to the Japanese film folk, there were present Ujiro Oyama, Japanese Consul, members of the Japanese Association of Southern California and Japanese newspaper representatives. Addresses were made by His Imperial Majesty's Consul and others, in which the formation of the club was highly commended and its members urged to use their best efforts with the producers to the end that the dignity of the race be maintained in all pictures in which their countrymen appear.

NEW NAMES IN CAST OF COMING TRIANGLE PLAY.

Two new players, Francis McDonald and W. L. (Babe) Lawrence, are cast in Director Walter Edwards' new Triangle picture, "The Passion Flower," in which Alma Ruebens is being featured. Lawrence has had previous engagements under the Triangle banner. Both are well known in the motion picture world. The scenes of "The Passion Flower" are laid among the peasant villages of France and Italy and in the Latin Quarter of Paris. P. McCaskill, who has traveled extensively through Europe and India and is thoroughly familiar with the customs of Italy and France, is in charge of the settings. The play will be staged with exact reproductions of the European background, having the same transplanted beauty which made "Wooden Shoes," the story of Holland dikes and dairymaids, a popular Triangle offering.

Griffith Returns

Visited Front-Line Trenches in France to Get Scenes for War Pictures—Was Deeply Impressed

D. W. GRIFFITH, who has been abroad for seven months co-operating with the British War Office in securing moving picture records of events on the French and Belgian battfields, arrived in New York October 15. Mr. Griffith modestly admits that he has brought back with him some official war pictures, which are to be woven into a mammoth spectacle of the world conflict now raging in Europe, and that he is indebted to the English government for its great aid in making it possible for him to get up to the front line of trenches with his camera men, but asked to be excused from commenting upon this phase of his work until it is completed. He is to work in an American finish to his story of the great war.

David W. Griffith.

The American producer looks none the worse for his dozen or more trips up to the front or the several nights of aeroplane raids on London. Asked for some description of the battles he saw about Ypres the American director, who has guided thousands of mimic warriors in his past spectacles, said that any effort at personal description would be as futile as attempting to brush back the sea with a fan.

"Shakespeare, Hugo, Zola—in fact all the great descriptive writers of wars that have gone in the past—would be unequal to the task of giving one an accurate idea of the things that daily happen 'out there,'" said Mr. Griffith. "You come away from it all with an imperishable recollection of depths of mud and vermin, of decay and stench and horror piled on horror, but also inspired by deeds that attain such heights of bravery and fortitude and heroic devotion to a cause that you wish everybody could know it and understand the spirit that is maintained behind those long lines. If this message could get through to every fireside there would be no question about the success of our Liberty Loans or our concerted efforts to see this war through to a finish. Every man, woman and child who cannot get over to the front would want to do his bit to succor those who are doing this heroic work."

"Were you able to get pictures of actual battle scenes and their attendant details as you describe them?" was asked.

"We got some wonderful scenes, but whether our cameras caught the spirit and the message of it all depends upon how our story turns out," was Mr. Griffith's reply. "You cannot work there without striving for this effect, however. Thanks to the assistance of the British officers at the front we caught actual scenes in the first-line trenches and the surrounding panorama which often covered a view forty miles long and from ten to fifteen miles in depth. This is where the motion picture camera is going to be important in writing the history of this war. It is not within the limit of human possibilty for a dozen pairs of eyes to grasp half of what takes place in a modern battle. No one man, not even the general in command, can see a tithe of it. But the camera has been perfected to such an extent that it possesses a thousand eyes and reaches out in every direction so that it can catch the grand panorama one instant and the next it can disclose a minute detail of the most illuminative and atmospheric 'close up.'"

"What modern improvements did you find that assisted most in this work?"

"The new French lenses with their fourteen-inch depths come first," was his reply. "You see they help materially in getting what are technically known as 'long shots' in motion picture work. Then also comes the gyroscope, a miniature combination of the aeroplane and box kite, which is controlled by an electric wire from the field and which can be sent up a considerable height and get bird's-eye effects which a short time back would have escaped the most painstaking camera expert.

"In this way," continued the American director, "one is able to show a charge along a two or three mile front and also to picture the grim work in the mud holes, called trenches, close enough to reveal men actually wounded at their work or to see groups of two or three straining to toss hand grenades over the ridge to the opposite German line but fifty yards removed or to take a chance rifle shot through a three-inch aperture in the soggy wall, and all the time they are wondering how soon they can go forward to that obstructing wall of steel and fire and death only a few yards away. But they are ever going forward.

"It was wonderful work and more exciting than any drama you ever read or dreamed of. I suppose because I am an American I was struck most by the unusual number of American boys I saw in the thickest of these frays. Until I got out to the front I had no idea the flock of venturous fellows from this land who had got over there through Canadian enlistment and were doing their bit. And feeling the lonesomeness of a stranger in a strange land, it seemed to me that theirs was a task just a bit harder than the other fellows, for our boys were strangers, too, and have been fighting heroically beside these messmates, but are now seasoned veterans and hold up their end as well as the best.

"Yes, there were Canadians from Boston and Highlanders from Atlanta, Georgia, not to mention all sorts of infantrymen whose homes were somewhere between the Battery and Harlem. On the French line above Verdun I struck one gallant poilu who had won his way into the Foreign Legion by way of Paris—Kentucky. As the old commonwealth is my native state I was not surprised when he asked me who won the Derby at Louisville.

"An amusing bit of by-play happened on the St. Julian road, just beyond Ypres. There was a view I particularly wanted to sight through one of the trench periscopes, so I crept along the ridge and got up to a first-line trench just in time to hear, in unmistakable accent, a stirring song being sung by a husky veteran operating a Lewis gun, who was on sentry duty. The song wound up its refrain, 'Take me back to Boston, Mass.' There was all the din of battle about us, but I had to smile.

"We got our camera up to this point, but later fell back to a dug-out near the road, and were clicking away when a shell burst just behind and all but smashed the instrument. That camera is now on exhibition in London. Some workmen were rebuilding a demolished dug-out, apparently secure in the thought that shells, like lightning, never strike in the same place, but this was a perverse shell. A few moments later they took eleven dead out of that one hole. It was one of the worst days along the St. Julian road, but I can truthfully say that it appeared to me that for every shell they dropped over the Allied lines I could count from eight to ten that were hurled in their direction from the artillery bases several hundred yards in our rear.

"The air was strident with these shell songs of death whining funeral chants in many different keys. It was like a testing ground for the souls of mankind. When you are up there and see human beings being put to the test of the last fibre of the least infinitesimal nerve you come to understand why the ancients always were sure their departed comrades went to heaven. Such testing makes you understand that any one's soul would be purged in such a fire. Surely this purging will burn the dross from all humanity and leave a world wherein to build a newer brotherhood. And what a brotherhood it must be. As modern war is carried on the need of brotherhood becomes more apparent. Each fellow is to a very great extent dependent upon the fellow next to him. You see infantrymen shoulder to shoulder with bomb throwers. As individuals caught in these terrific charges they are almost certain to meet death, but if there are two or three of them they are more liable to escape. So you see one is both helpless and hopeless without his brother. I have often wondered since seeing these things if we are not welding a great tie of universal brotherhood which is to outlast the lives of these men who are so heroically finding new truths in the great struggle for the cause of democracy."

Mr. Griffith was asked if he saw the arrival of the first American forces under General Pershing's command.

"Yes, and it would have done your heart good to see the reception accorded our boys. They are getting a different idea of America in England and France since we came in, and I am sure that our efforts there will strengthen these ideas."

Mr. Griffith was asked for his views regarding the outlook for peace, but asked to be excused.

"The question of the war's duration is more or less a political one, and I am not much good at politics. Of this I am confident: It is going to be serious work and we will all have to do our best, but I am convinced that when our forces get into action some American like General Grant will grow out of the American line and get through that heretofore insurmountable wall of German trenches. It may mean greater sacrifices and cost more in men and money temporarily, but some American general, with the blood behind him that Grant had in his last great drive, is going to break through, and once they break through this terrible war is going to come to a quicker ending. That is the true economy in the end—to get it over as quickly as possible."

O. A. C. Lund Directing Sonia Markova

WILLIAM FOX has obtained the services of O. A. C. Lund as director for Sonia Markova, the sensational Russian star, whose acquisition Mr. Fox has announced. Mme. Markova has been busily at work for some time under Mr. Lund's direction in Grantwood, N. J.

Oscar A. C. Lund, who has charge of the direction of Mme. Markova's initial starring vehicle, has been identified with stage and screen nearly all of his life. He was born in Stockholm, Sweden, the son of a distinguished Swedish actress and stage director. When he was two months old Mr. Lund had the role of a foundling who had been left on a doorstep. As he grew older he progressed rapidly from "doorstep roles" to leading parts.

O. A. C. Lund.

After graduation from Upsala University in Sweden Mr. Lund turned definitely to the footlights for a career. For years he was a noted figure in the Folk Theater in Stockholm and in the Royal Dramatic Theater.

The success which was greeting photoplays in the United States led him to come to this country to associate himself with the newer art. Since his arrival here he has written scores of scenarios and has acted in and directed dozens of pictures.

A large cast has been assembled to support Sonia Markova in the film. The principals include Sidney Mason, who played Blackie Daw in the stage production of "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford"; William Lampe, David Herblin, Albert Tavernier, Anita Navaro, Edith Reeves and Julia Stuart.

PARAMOUNT ENGAGES NEW LEADING WOMAN.

As his leading woman Jack Pickford, the Paramount player, has secured Katharine MacDonald, sister of Mary MacLaren. Miss MacDonald is declared to be possessed of a distinctive personality. Pickford is now at work under William D. Taylor's direction. He has completed the two "Tom Sawyer" films and "The Spirit of '17" is under way.

At Leading Theaters

Programs for the Week of October 21 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Spreading Dawn" at Strand.

JANE COWL made her debut as a screen star in a Goldwyn production entitled "The Spreading Dawn," at the Strand Theater the week of October 21. Among the spectacular scenes is the burning of an entire theater, with the consequent panic of the spectators. There is also shown columns of soldiers marching away to France, and a stirring aeroplane flight. The play abounds with thrilling situations. In the surrounding cast are Orme Caldara, Harry Spingler, Florence Billings, Harry Stephenson, Alice Chapin, Helen Blair, Cecil Owen, Mable Ballin, Edmond Lowe and Mrs. Edith McAlpin.

A zoological study of interest on the program was "Animals of Australia," a chapter from Raymond L. Ditmars' "Living Book of Nature." Other film attractions shown were a Bray animated cartoon entitled "Bobby Bumps—Chef," a new comedy, and the Strand Topical Review. Rosa Lind, Lon Coligon and Joseph Martel were the soloists.

"The Price Mark" at the Rialto.

Dorothy Dalton was seen at the Rialto in "The Price Mark," the first of her pictures to be produced by Thomas H. Ince for the Paramount program. As an added attraction, beginning Monday, Charles Chaplin was presented in his latest photofarce, "The Adventurer."

"The Price Mark" is from the story by John B. Ritchie, and is done with unusual skill. Miss Dalton is capitally supported by Thurston Hall, William Conklin and Adele Farrington. The scenes in the picture open in Cairo, subsequently shifting to the studio quarter of New York. Scenic and educational subjects and the Rialto Animated Magazine were also shown. The soloists were Bela Nyary, Mlle. Madeleine D'Espinoy and Alberta Bachman.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street Theater for the entire week Douglas Fairbanks was seen in his latest picture, "The Man from Painted Post."

The Broadway Theater headed its entertainment with "The Savage," a Bluebird production adapted from Elliott J. Clawson's story by Rupert Julian. Ruth Clifford and Monroe Salisbury are the featured players. At the Park Theater Alice Brady, in "The Maid of Belgium," and Madge Evans in "The Adventures of Carol."

PARAMOUNT EXPANDING ON SHORT STUFF.

The importance of short subjects in film production is growing daily, and Paramount has found the increased demand justifies the establishment in its exchanges of special sales branches to handle the great quantity of subjects now being released through this organization. The addition of the Sennett comedies and the Serial Department to the list of short subjects has materially strengthened the output in this direction. The full list now includes, besides the two mentioned, Arbuckle Comedies; Burton Holmes Travel Pictures; Klever Komedies, Black Diamond Comedies and the Paramount-Bray Pictographs.

CUPID BUSY AROUND METRO STUDIO.

Three favorites of the Metro studios, some active and others once in the Metro employ, succumbed to matrimony the week past—namely, Irene Howley, Vera Pearce and Valli Valli. Irne Howley is now Mrs. Charles Frederick Tischner. On the legitimate stage she has appeared opposite Lionel Barrymore and Ralph Herz.

Vera Pearce became the spouse of Lieutenant Frederick Willmott Smith, United Stated Army. In addition to enacting a role in the Bushman-Bayne version of "Romeo and Juliet," she also acquired fame as an aviatrix at the time areoplanes bombarded New York City with the first Liberty Bond literature.

Valli Valli became Mrs. Smith Owens. In pictures she was featured by Metro in "Her Debt of Honor," "The Woman Pays," "The Turmoil" and "The High Road."

GOLDWYN BUYS $100,000 LIBERTY BONDS.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has subscribed for $100,000 of the Liberty Loan bonds, being the first firm in the industry to answer the call of the national government voiced through a special committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. In announcing the Goldwyn subscription, Samuel Goldfish said: "I hope that every company in the industry gives its wholehearted support to the Liberty Loan and the action of Goldwyn Pictures in doing so but faintly expresses this company's support of the national Administration in all of its war policies."

Bill Oldknow ana Frank Hall Hook Up

Organize the U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation, Which Will Distribute Films at Low Rental.

A NEW contender for the patronage of exhibitors has been organized in New York, the U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation, capitalized at a million dollars. Frank S. Hall, of New Jersey and New York, is the president and general manager and William ("Bill") Oldknow of the South and Southwest and North is the secretary and treasurer. The former is known as a large operator in state rights productions. Mr. Oldknow has been in the exhibiting and exchange and supply business for many years.

These two men with their associates, exhibitors and distributors, have given much study, from the exhibitors' viewpoint, of the cost of producing, distributing and playing of special state rights productions. As a result of their examination into present conditions they have formed the nucleus of an organization designed to supply big subjects direct to the theaters without forcing the managers to pay rentals that cover the profits of manufacturers, middlemen and exchanges.

It is expected that by November the new concern will be in full operation in offices in the center of the film district. The first release has been set for Dec. 1. Twelve special productions are planned for the first year, their selection intrusted to a committee on which exhibitors and exchangemen are equally represented. The pictures considered by this "committee of selection" will not only number all productions that appear on the state rights market, but will also include the special efforts of well-known directors who contract in advance to make exceptional features for outright sale to the organization.

By purchasing the world rights for cash and not selling territorial rights to separate buyers, it is planned to eliminate the usual long selling campaign with the extra profits involved in separate deals which the exhibitor is finally forced to pay for by means of high rental prices. A further saving to the exhibitor is planned by limiting the producers' profit to the difference between the cost of production and the selling price for cash instead of having his interest continue during the life of the picture with the usual influence exerted by producers receiving a percentage of bookings to keep rental prices as high as possible. Something new is also promised from the distribution angle. Exchanges now firmly established and doing business will be used to care for the prints of the new organization.

A representative of the new concern located in each territory will take complete charge of the company's business, using the exchange for his headquarters, but working under complete instructions from the main office in New York. He will oversee the maintenance of a carefully figured out one-price rental schedule, one of the main features of which will be the ability of each exhibitor to work out the cost of the pictures for his particular theater. The company's representative will, according to the new plan, be in reality each exhibitor's personal representative in the exchange handling the productions. His first duty will be to see that the exhibitor is charged only the regular price as worked out in the schedule. The prices will be governed by the population of the city, the number of theaters, the capacity of the theaters, the number of days run and the preference of the run. The schedule will be open to investigation by the exhibitor with the representative's assistance in determining equitable rental prices.

A feature of the plan is the guaranteeing by the corporation of box-office winners at the same rental prices as all of the other special pictures it procures for distribution. The announcement of two of these extra productions promises well for the future, and emphasis is placed upon the fact that the main object of the executives of the new corporation is to enable their fellow exhibitors to obtain each season's greatest successes at prices that will allow them to make money for themselves instead of excessive profits for the distributor.

"We believe an organization founded to buy big features for cash with the sole idea of renting them to exhibitors at prices that represent only a fair interest on the investment is sure of immediate and lasting success if honestly and efficiently managed," said President Hall. "The amount of detail work necessary to the correct figuring of price schedules that cover all classes of theaters in all territories was enormous, as was also the detail work connected with the other new feature of our scheme of distribution. But we were very careful to see that every point was covered and we were all ready for a long and aggressive campaign before we made our first announcement to the trade. We are ready now for business. Our first picture, the big Thomas H. Ince spectacle, 'The Zeppelin's Last Raid,' we have reason to believe will prove to be one of the biggest box office winners of the season. Our second feature is a Bessie Barriscale production of great strength, and our committee of selection is also in a position to promise another important announcement in the near future. As to distribution, the M. H. Hoffman Four Square Exchanges will handle our pictures in the many important territories which they cover and other territories will be taken care of by exchanges to be announced shortly. We will release only the best the market affords."

Oldknow Talks of His New Concern.

Mr. Oldknow, the secretary and treasurer of the new company, is one of the oldest exhibitors. His friends claim he has the distinction of being the first picture showman to rip the ceiling from the "store" in which he was exhibiting films and install a balcony. This was over ten years ago in the Alcazar, in Peachtree Street, Atlanta. Then, too, he is credited with being the first exhibitor to install a pipe organ. He was a customer of George Kleine before the days of the General Film.

At the time of the formation of the Universal Company following the split of the Sales Company Mr. Oldknow became associated with Mr. Laemmle and his confreres and the affiliations have continued to this day. He is and for a long time has been the vice-president and general manager of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, with nine offices spread out over the map from Atlanta to El Paso. In other words, his territory includes the country lying between the lower half of the Atlantic coast line and Tucson, Arizona. In the prosecution of his business Mr. Oldknow has been a frequent visitor to New York, so much so his friends long ago named him "Commuter Bill." The man from Atlanta admits that he will continue to make good on his title, as he expects to spend much of his time in New York.

"I am a firm believer in co-operation," said Mr. Oldknow last week, "and of the possibilities of colossal growth under it. I realize the waste in this business is in the distribution end. Eliminate the surplus distribution charges and large overhead and there is no question in my mind but exhibitors can get films for 50 per cent. less by our co-operative plan.

"Another thing, it is my firm conviction that under present unsatisfactory conditions the men entitled to the profits are not getting them. The producer—the creator of productions—and the exhibitor are the ends that ought to be getting the money. Yet they are the ones who are the least compensated. It is the middleman, the distributor, who is getting the enormous profits. This is where the old system is wrong. We have fixed a maximum price of $50 a day for our productions, and to our franchise holders there will be no higher rental. We are booking now on this basis the six-reel Ince spectacle, 'The Zeppelin's Last Raid,' which will be far more timely when we release it than the producer possibly could have foreseen."

MILDRED CONSIDINE WITH MISS TALMADGE.

Miss Mildred Considine, daughter of John Considine, well-known in the West as one of the heads of the Sullivan and Considine circuit of vaudeville theaters, has been engaged as continuity editor for the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation. Miss Considine is a Chicago girl and a graduate of the College of Fine Arts in that city. She came to New York a short time ago to assist Julian Johnson in his work for the Selznick organization.

Beginning her career as a scenario writer when barely fifteen years old Miss Considine has been the author of numberless scripts produced by the leading motion picture companies. She wrote Triangle's "Easy Money," which is just about to be released and last year adapted thirty-two reels of the Jimmy Dale series. More recently she has been writing titles for the Constance Talmadge productions. Miss Considine played the lead in the first three George Ade comedies produced by Essanay.

TRIANGLE OFFICIAL GOES ABROAD.

Charles M. Parker, vice president of the Triangle Film Corporation, has been commissioned a captain by President Wilson and named "Industrial Commissioner of the American army in France." Captain Parker has sailed to take up his new work. His home is in New York.

Fox Talks "Sunshine Comedies"

Said He Wanted the Best in the World, Then He Called in Henry Lehrman, Who Never Batted an Eye.

WILLIAM FOX, after two years of experimenting and the expenditure of an almost untold amount of money, presents to exhibitors and the motion picture public Sunshine Comedies, confident of their immediate sensational success.

In Sunshine Comedies, he believes he has solved the exhibitor's most troublesome problem—the comedy end of the programme. As an exhibitor, himself, Mr. Fox was forced to the realization that the selection of this part of the programme was the most vexing with which an exhibitor had to contend.

"Why can't we have better comedies?" was Mr. Fox's constant demand of his managers and bookers.

"We are getting the very best the market affords," he was told.

Out of this situation came Mr. Fox's ambition to make the best comedies in the world.

"I am going to make the best comedies in the world," Mr. Fox declared. "I am going to be the first in the field or I will not offer a single comedy to an exhibitor."

Mr. Fox sent for Henry Lehrman, who, while admittedly a master comedy director, was regarded as "too expensive" for the average producer.

"I want to make the best comedies in the world," Mr. Fox told Mr. Lehrman when they were brought together. "It is my ambition to make comedies on a scale commensurate with my other productions. Do you think you can do it?"

Without batting an eye, Lehrman said he could. "But it will be an expensive undertaking," Lehrman added. "I do not care what they cost," Mr. Fox told him. "What I want is to produce the best comedies in the world—remember now, I say the best comedies in the world."

"Who is to be the judge of whether or not they are the best comedies in the world?" asked Mr. Lehrman.

"There is but one judge of any production in which I may be interested," Mr. Fox said. "That is the public. The public judges without prejudice and it is the public that you must please,"

"Now, go ahead and make me the best comedies in the world," Mr. Fox continued. "You have the entire resources of the Fox Film Corporation behind you and you will not be hurried. Take your time, experiment all you please, but remember I want the best. Spend all the money you need, but I must have results."

On this basis Henry Lehrman began the making of Sunshine Comedies more than a year ago. His efforts to enable Mr. Fox to realize his ambition to make the best comedies in the world went unheralded. He worked quietly and quickly on the Pacific Coast, in a specially erected studio. When Mr. Fox visited the Coast last spring, he saw the fruits of Mr. Lehrmann's work.

"Your comedies appeal to me, but remember it is the public that must be pleased," he told Mr. Lehrman. "If the public does not believe them to be the best comedies ever offered, I shall withdraw every one of them. I do not want to produce 'among the best' comedies. I am going to have the best or none."

Sunshine Comedies are going to be released every two weeks—two a month—twenty-six a year. The first three releases of Sunshine Comedies together with the dates are: Sunday, Nov. 11, "Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells"; Sunday, Nov. 25, "A Milk-Fed Vamp"; Dec. 9, "His Smashing Career."

In addition to the three releases announced, there are eight other Sunshine Comedies ready, and in the entire eleven there is not a single mediocre comedy—every one is a masterpiece of comedy—comprising a veritable world's storehouse of mirth.

HOWARD HALL, LEADING MAN FOR EMILY STEVENS.

Howard Hall, well-known actor of the stage and screen, has been engaged to play the leading role of Sir Anthony Jessop opposite Emily Stevens, star, in the forthcoming Metro production, "Alias Mrs. Jessop," adapted from the story of Blair Hall, and directed by William S. Davis. Mr. Hall has a record of more than thirty years on the stage. On the screen he has appeared in a long list of important features. He recently played the doctor in the France Film Corporation's picture version of his own play, "The Natural Law," which photoplay is scheduled for early presentation.

Frank Beresford Triangle 'Script Editor

FRANK BERESFORD, prominent both in the theatrical and motion picture world, has been made 'script editor of the Triangle Film Corporation's scenario department of the Culver City studios. Beresford began his stage career as an actor in the Belasco and Frohman companies. He entered the theatrical profession as the result of having a five-act play accepted by Kirk La Shelle, meeting Mr. Belasco and taking an engagement with Warfield so that he might study the technique of the stage.

Later Beresford played with Sir Henry Irving and helped rehearse the company for a repertoire tour. Other engagements took him with many other artists of note, including Maude Adams, Mrs. Fiske and E. H. Sothern, but during this time Beresford's ultimate aim was that of writing and producing plays and he grasped every opportunity to study dramatic construction. He took up the technical side of stagecraft and soon became known as one of the foremost artists in staging theatrical productions. He put on operas for the Aborus and vaudeville acts for Mort Singer and a western producer. For the former he produced many musical comedy successes in Chicago and wrote a number of variety sketches in the meantime.

Frank Beresford.

When Ned Wayburn wanted an assistant in the production of musical comedies on Broadway, he selected Mr. Beresford as the man for the job. "Midnight Sons" was staged under the direction of Beresford. Besides his theatrical career he has won honors as a portrait painter, one of his pictures being in the Royal Academy at London.

Since entering the motion picture field Beresford held the post of technical director with three big companies in the east and one in the west. He is fond of all outdoor sports and declares himself extremely happy that his new work has brought him to Southern California.

PAUL HURST JOINS UNIVERSAL.

One of the most capable and experienced directors recently added to the producing forces at Universal City is Paul Hurst, who will direct photo-dramas in which Helen Gibson is to be featured.

Hurst recently staged the second series of "Stingaree" stories for Kalem, as well as many other successful productions for that company during an engagement practically of six years.

Previously to joining the Universal, Hurst had been connected with the Signal Company where his work included both directing and acting. In "Judith of the Cumberlands," "The Manager of the B. & A.," "Whispering Smith" and "The Lass of the Lumberlands," Hurst played important parts.

The new director already has finished his first two productions for the Universal—"The Brand of the West" and "The Frustrated Hold-up." Helen Gibson is the principal player, with Mildred Wilson opposite, and Buck Connor, "Hoot" Gibson and a troop of Universal cowboys in their support.

L'ESTRANGE SUCCEEDS CUNEO.

Dick L'Estrange has been engaged to play the part of Blakesley in Harold Lockwood's next Metro-Yorke vehicle, "Love Me for Myself Alone," succeeding Lester Cuneo, who was drafted into military service last week just as he was beginning work in the picture. Mr. L'Estrange is a picture player of long experience, having spent several years with the Lasky Company on the Coast and the last six months with Pathe, supporting Mrs. Vernon Castle, and with Edison in the East.

WHO'S WHO IN THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

OVEY, George. Born in Kansas City, Mo. American parentage. Is five feet, three and one-half inches tall and weighs 130 pounds. Brown hair and eyes. Mr. Ovey does not give the date of his stage debut, but says he has had extensive stock company experience and has played in A Knight for a Day and Forty-five Minutes from Broadway. When he wanted to try out the pictures he started with David Horsley in Cub comedies and he has been the Cub comedian ever since, indeed he is the Cub comedies, and though he mentions Jerry and His Pal, Jerry and the Outlaw and Jerry's Big Raid as the roles he favors most, there is an evenness to the Cubs that make it difficult to select any particular titles from the long list of Jerry pictures. Mr. Ovey likes swimming, boxing, jumping, tumbling and dancing as his favorite amusements, as though he did not get enough tumbling and dancing in his pictures. His muscles never get flabby.

George Ovey.

HAMRICK, Burwell Filson. Born in Los Angeles. American parentage. Is four feet, four and one-half inches tall and weighs 60 pounds. Medium complexion, dark brown hair and hazel eyes. Master Hamrick (he is only eleven) studied for two years in dramatic school, thereby disproving the theory that dramatic school pupils never get a job—or perhaps he is the exception that proves the rule. He made his debut in July, 1916, as Cluck in The Romance of Billygoat Hill, a Universal, and he has been working for Universal ever since. Other parts have been Bobby in Bobby and the Roses, Teddy in Polly Put the Kettle On and Jimmie in Jimmie Straightened Out. He has played in other films, but these parts stand out and suggest that when he gets a little older he will be a real leading man and not merely a leading juvenile. Likes dancing and can swim, dance and sing well enough to qualify as a public entertainer instead of a pest.

Burwell Hamrick

BRUNSWICK, Earl. Born in Mt. Vernon, but does not say which one. American father and Irish-English mother. Is five feet, 11½ inches tall and weights 168 pounds. Dark complexion and dark brown hair and eyes. Mr. Brunswick has been on the speaking stage since childhood—about twelve years, and about five years ago changed over to the pictures, his debut being made in the juvenile lead in Dear Old Girl, a Wharton production. He plays both juvenile leads and heavies, and among the companies for which he has since played have been World, Goldwyn, Lubin and Pathe. He is now a Metro player and had a leading part in Draft No. 258. You can get a lot of variety between juvenile and heavy parts, but Mr. Brunswick learned to speak lines almost as soon as he learned to form words, and it doesn't bother him. He likes all out door sports (of course) and really good literature.

Earl Brunswick.

LAKE, Alice. Born in Brooklyn, N. Y. Her father is American and her mother Irish-American. Just a flat five feet tall and weighs 108 pounds. Fair complexion, brown hair and gray eyes—just the ordinary pair of eyes, but one is gray and the other brown. Miss Lake has had no professional stage experience, but she has danced in a professionally amateur way at private entertainments at the Waldorf and other swagger assembly rooms, and has done pantomimic work. Naturally she turned to the pictures for fuller expression, and she made her debut in 1912 in Her Picture Idol, a Vitagraph. In addition to the eastern studios of the Vitagraph she has been with Arbuckle comedies and is now a Universalite. She still makes a fad of her dancing, and she is also fond of motoring and reading, but best of all she likes theater-going, plays and movies.

Alice Lake.

TELL, Olive. Born in New York City. Five feet 5½ inches tall and weighs 127 pounds. Fair complexion, brown hair and blue eyes. After completing her education in France, Miss Tell took the course of the Sargent school and in May, 1913, made her stage debut in stock in Rochester, N. Y., playing the better part of three seasons in that organization and in Broadway productions, including Husband and Wife, Cousin Lucy, The King of Nowhere, The Intruder, Romance and Under Pressure. In March, 1916, she played her first picture, The Smugglers, with Donald Brian, and has played with Robert Warwick in The Silent Master. Her present connection is with the Empire All Star Corp. When she is not working she is golfing or riding horseback, and is also fond of fishing and reading, but the fad that takes her out of the "all outdoor sports" class is a fondness for collecting beads of all sorts.

Story of Joe Fisher's Escape

South African Film and Theater Man Had Harrowing Experience Following Sinking of City of Athens.

JOE FISHER, of Fisher's Bioscope, and director of the Grand theater, Cape Town, South Africa, narrowly escaped drowning when the City of Athens was sunk off the port of his destination on August 10. Mr. Fisher was returning home after many months spent in New York on business connected with his company. The story is told in the Cape Times, a copy of which has just reached New York. Mr. Fisher was in boat No. 3, which became waterlogged and overturned five times, resulting in the death of fifteen passengers and four members of the crew.

Two columns of the story in the Times is from the lips of Mr. Fisher, dictated as he lay in bed the day following the disaster, suffering from severe cuts and bruises and shock. Two explosions, one on each side forward of the 5,600-ton steamer, shook the vessel at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Seven boats left the ship in good order, No. 3 being the last. The ship sank when Mr. Fisher's boat was about a mile away from it.

Joe Fisher.

Boat No. 3 had not been long afloat when it began to leak. The water increased so rapidly in spite of the baling that at 7.25 the boat turned over, throwing the occupants into the water. All managed to get back when it was righted. Four times again the boat was overturned, the air tanks aiding in righting the craft, but each time there were less passengers.

On the last overturning Mr. Fisher by unusual exertion managed to drag into the boat, nearly filled with water, his close friend, Charles More, of Johannesburg. He had left just sufficient strength to prop up Mr. More's head so as to keep it above the water. Just as all the passengers had given up hope of rescue the searchlight of a tug located them. Mr. Fisher lost consciousness as the rescuing craft drew alongside. Three hours later he recovered his senses and found himself in a berth on the tug. In a pair of trousers borrowed from an officer and a shirt loaned by a stoker Mr. Fisher was landed in the early hours of the morning and was taken to his home in his father's automobile.

The foregoing is a bare outline of the tale of Mr. Fisher. In detail it forms one of the most harrowing of the many that have come to us in the past three years. Here are examples of the scenes witnessed by the passengers, in Mr. Fisher's words to the Times reporter:

"The last survivor of the Duckworth family—which consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Duckworth and six children, who were going to Bombay—the others were dead in the boat or had been lost, was little Ethel, a pretty child of twelve years. When I pulled her on board following the third overturning the poor kiddie exclaimed: 'Everybody dead! Everybody gone but me!' At that moment we capsized again. I made a grab for her and got her into the boat, but three minutes later we were knocked over once more and I never saw her again. On the last occasion young Sumner (a friend of Fisher) floated away, and, shouting, 'Good-bye, boys, I'm done, God bless you!' he threw up his hands and sank."

Mr. Fisher's friends will recall that during his stay in New York he was two months in a hospital with an attack of typhoid fever and pleurisy. In view of his weakened condition his escape from death is all the more remarkable.

Air Raids Not Conducive to Sleep

Frank Kneeland, in Ambulance Service in France, tells of his Experiences Near the Front.

UNDER date of September 21, Frank E. Kneeland, a former contributor to the music department of the Moving Picture World, and now in the ambulance service, writes from France to a member of the staff of this paper. Mr. Kneeland's letter in part is as follows:

Two days before we left our last cantonment your letter came to me and I surely enjoyed it. The Moving Picture Worlds arrived soon after, and I have read them as never before, and now most of the fellows have looked them through and will continue to do so until they are worn out.

We arrived here "en repos" Wednesday afternoon. "Repos" is certainly the word, for almost all the boys are at present asleep, and our aim is to do nothing but rest, and I guess we will live up to it. We had an idea we would have little to do at the part of the front where we were stationed last week, but were mistaken. There were air raids around us every night except one. You can imagine it isn't the pleasantest thing in the world to work hard all day and then sit around in an abri waiting for planes to come sailing over at night, for it is impossible to go to sleep when they are near. The night before we left I had been out in the trenches all day and had walked nearly fifteen miles besides being under something of a nervous strain dodging shells as they whizzed over the parapet, hence I thought I should crawl in my car and sleep in spite of the "avions." I had no sooner settled down than I heard a plane coming. Resolved not to move, I waited.

Soon I heard the machine gun sputter overhead. Then I threw the covers off, and was just in the act of crawling out when I was arrested by a tremendous explosion followed by the smell of smoke. Needless to say I ran for the abri then. The chief was telling the fellows to get out their masks, for all seemed to think a gas bomb had been dropped. Fortunately not, and after 2 o'clock the Germans condescended to leave us in peace, for we needs must arise at 5 the next morning.

After a hurried breakfast we departed in groups of threes, as the Germans had been shelling the screened road along which we had to pass all the day before, and it was best to take precautions. At the next village we waited for the rest of the convoy and looked over the shell holes along the road and the mass of tangled wire which bombs had done to that little town. The trip of about seventy-five miles overland was a most delightful one through valleys of orchards, with fruit trees laden until they hung on the ground, while on the other hand we passed through villages which formerly had been prosperous towns, but now nothing remained except a heap of stones and an occasional wall. At 10:30 we stopped in a forest for our lunch of bread, cheese and sardines, after which most of the fellows threw themselves down along the road on stone heaps, in fact any place they could find a space for a little after luncheon nap until the cook could get packed up again.

Soon we were jogging along in the hot sun, and after an hour and a half reached this quiet little town, where we are parked near a mill stream. After parking the next thing is to look for a place to wash, for the Americans must live up to their reputation of washing and dressing all the time. Imagine the howl of delight which rent the stillness when we found a place we could actually swim in. Not many seconds were wasted, and we slipped into the cold water for a wonderful bath. The rest of the afternoon was used in putting up the tent for the fellows to sleep in near the garden where we eat, the kitchen or cuisine being located in the little court of the house. We still continue to sleep in our car, for I think it much more comfortable dark and stormy nights. This morning, however, I jumped up and ran down in my pajamas for a cold plunge before breakfast. It was great, and I have felt like a being ever since.

We are doing, as I said before, nothing except once in a while carrying a "maladi" or sick man of the division to which we are attached to the hospital as the case calls for. We shall no doubt remain "en repos" for ten days, being then called with our division to some front.

I should like to write you about my trip through the trenches and up to the listening post, where I could peek through the little opening and see the Boche trenches not more than 30 yards away, but it is a long story for this time; in fact long enough to write a book on.

FRANK E. KNEELAND.

UNCLE SAM WANTS LABORATORY MEN.

There is an immediate demand in the Photo Laboratory Department of the Signal Corps for trained motion picture laboratory men, and an appeal has been made to the Moving Picture World to send the names and addresses of all such who wish to enlist in the service to the proper authorities at Washington. Here is an opportunity for anyone familiar with the work of printing, developing, joining and inspecting of film to get into the service and to do the kind of work they are best fitted for. Send your name and address to the Moving Picture World, 17 Madison avenue, New York, at once, and it will be promptly forwarded. This is a fine chance for picture men to do their bit.

EARLE FOX, CONSTANCE TALMADGE'S LEADING MAN

Earle Fox has been chosen as leading man in "The Honeymoon," the new Constance Talmadge picture which is now being filmed. Mr. Fox, though one of the youngest men on the screen, has come rapidly into prominence during the past year. His most notable work has been with Mae Murray, Pauline Frederick, and as Gerard Mordaunt with Norma Talmadge in "Panthea." Miss Talmadge and her company are now in Buffalo, where work on "The Honeymoon" is being rapidly pushed. This is an original comedy drama by Lloyd Sheldon, with a scenario by Eve Unsell, and is the last word in up-to-the-minute smart comedy.

Voices from the Past

Picture Production of 1909 Helps to Pull Pennies for the Red Cross Fund at Westwood, N. J.

THE difference between the "then" and the "now" in moving picture production is something to which we give comparatively little thought until by accident we are jogged into realization by an unexpected demonstration of the progress we have made in a few short years. Not long ago it was the good fortune of the writer to be present at a special exhibition given in aid of the Red Cross fund in the Casino theater at Westwood, N. J. After the flashing on the screen of what seemed to be advertisements for all of the village stores and some more, an up-to-date film adaptation of "The Dummy," with Jack Pickford starring, delighted the audience. This was followed by the specialty of the evening, which, by the way, was exhibited in honor of Florence Lawrence, the well-known moving picture star who lent her services unsparingly to the aid of the Red Cross campaign in Westwood.

Florence Lawrence.

The specialty referred to was a one-reel film version of Tolstoy's "The Resurrection," made in 1909 by D. W. Griffith, the now famous director. Miss Lawrence played the star role with Arthur Johnson, gone but not forgotten, playing opposite her. It will be remembered by some of us that in the days when this picture was made Florence Lawrence was known, not by name, but only as the "Biograph Girl," and still in her teens, as the following excerpt from a review of the production, which was looked upon in those days as a top-notcher in moving picture drama, in the issue of May 29, 1909, of the Moving Picture World, will show: "And then, the acting of the leading woman and the prince—how fine and tragic the former is! how excellent the latter! We do not know the lady's name, but certainly she seems to us to have a very fine command of her emotions and to be able to express these emotions before such an unemotional thing as a camera."

It is difficult with the broader knowledge of the art enjoyed at the present day to imagine the crowding of the significance of the Tolstoy drama into the limited space of one reel; yet in the Griffith production the story is clearly outlined and the meat of the drama has been extracted. To be sure, the lack of studio facilities is extremely evident, as well as a finished knowledge of picture direction, illumination and photography. In the old days when this picture was made the players were boxed up in a fiercely lighted space with no attempt made at the finer effects of photography which go so far toward making the success of the picture of today. Here the players were put through the traces to the tune of film footage; and it was not infrequent to hear a director in the midst of a tensely emotional scene shout, "Hurry up, there—cut that! We've only got two more feet!" And then there are the snow scenes, all of which could have been done to much better advantage with the real thing as a background and which were artificially created within the studio.

But in spite of all obstacles the work of the leading players presents as faithful an interpretation of the prince and the peasant as we might look for with all the present day equipments. Florence Lawrence, even in this little one-reel picture, has given a remarkable illustration of emotional acting, and it is to be deplored that her talent is not being turned to account in the same fashion as that of her co-workers of that period. In this cast and in minor parts, besides those already mentioned, were Mary Pickford, Marian Leonard, Owen Moore, Mack Sennett, David Miles, now dead, Mrs. David Miles, Mrs. D. W. Griffith, Charles Ennesley, Herbert Prior and others whose names we are familiar with.

The accompanying picture of Miss Lawrence, taken a year ago, shows her to be the same child-woman type that she was in the days when we knew her only as "The Biograph Girl."

Bessie Love, New Pathe Star

BESSIE LOVE, who has just been signed by Pathe for Pathe Plays, has the distinction of being not only one of the youngest of screen stars, but of having reached the top of her profession in one short year. Unlike many of the favorites of the screen, she did not come to motion pictures from the stage. Miss Love was born in Los Angeles, Cal., in 1900. Living in the greatest photoplay center of the world, it was only natural that all her ambitions should be entered in success in the silent drama. In 1916 this young girl, with braids hanging down her back, went out to Hollywood determined to get an engagement before the camera, it mattered little how small. Mindful of the old saws that "Opportunity knocks but once" and that "He who would do big things must do the small things well," she put her best in the first small part that came to her. The impression that she made upon the director by her earnestness and adaptibility resulted in her being placed at his request upon the list of especially desirable extras. Then came director Jack O'Brien looking for a good type to play a Swedish servant girl in a play in which John Emerson was to be the star. It was not a small part this time and he was most particular to choose a girl who was thoroughly competent. He saw Miss Love doing an extra part in a picture being staged by another director and decided that she was the person he wanted. That picture, "The Flying Torpedo," was the making of Miss Love. From then on she was a factor to be considered. As a direct result of her work in it she was given a part opposite Wm. S. Hart in "The Aryan." The result was that she scored again. When Douglas Fairbanks came to Los Angeles he determined that Miss Love and no one else should be his leading woman. In consequence she was with him in "The Good Badman," "Reggie Mixes In," etc. Then she played with De Wolf Hopper in "Stranded," and then with Wilfred Lucas in "Hell to Pay Austin."

Bessie Love.

For the last few months little Miss Love has been starred in her own pictures, among them being "Nina, the Flower Girl," "A Daughter of the Poor," "Cheerful Givers," "His Daughter's Ring," "Wee Lady Betty,' and the last, "Polly Ann."

Fine as are the results that Miss Love has already attained, great as is her following, the best critics are unanimous in their belief that she has by no means reached the maximum of her abilities. She is very young and ambitious and ready to learn. Her present is brilliant. There is no reason to doubt that her future will be still more brilliant.

ESSANAY PLAYERS DRILL FOR HOME GUARD.

Although many Essanay actors and studio employees either enlisted in the army or navy or were selected for the new national army, those remaining behind are intent on "doing their bit." George K. Spoor has turned over Studio C of the Essanay plant for drilling purposes two nights a week. Nearly a hundred actors and other Essanay employees drill several hours. They represent a unit of the new Illinois Home Reserve Guard, organized by the state officials to replace state militia units called for war service.

Among Chicago men now at the front is, Douglas Weart, a West Point graduate and son-in-law of Mr. Spoor. He is "somewhere in France," where he is a first lieutenant in the United States engineering corps.

Several of the Essanay force joined the officers' reserve corps training camp at Fort Sheridan, and a number are now in training for the new national army at Rockford, Ill.

"Temples of China" (General Film-Selig).

IN the 21st issue of the Selig World Library will be found an interesting series of views showing some of the most famous temples of China. Among these are the Temple of Heaven and the five Pagoda temple, remarkable specimens of architecture and beautifully fashioned. The temple sheep herded by their shepherd afford some picturesque scenes.

"Picturesque Venice" (General Film-Selig).

Some of the most attractive scenes that have been photographed of the City of Venice are shown in the 21st release of the Selig World Library. Here we pass with the cameraman along the canals in the residential section of Venice, over the bridge of the Rialto, and finally to the famous St. Marks. We glance in passing at many points of interest, including the Bridge of Sighs, and marvel again at the picturesque beauty of all about us.

"The Sponge Industry in South America" (General Film-Selig).

A nicely illustrated description of the sponge industry as it is conducted in South America is found in the Selig World Library No. 21. Here we see the fishermen donning diver's suits and diving to the bottom of the ocean, bringing to the surface with them sponges of all sizes. We learn from the picture that the tubes of the sponge are lined with live flesh, and that the sponges are laid on wire screens in the sun a sufficient time to allow this flesh to decompose before trimming them and putting them through the cleansing which prepares them for the market. An interesting subject.

"Cutting a Diamond's 57 Sides" (Universal).

In the Screen Magazine No. 44 will be found a lucid illustration of how small but precious pebbles, which to the unpracticed eye appear much the same as any ordinary stone, are treated for the purpose of revealing their wonderful lustre, and thereby adding to their market value. In the picture, after looking at the diamond in its original form, we watch the expert diamond cutter at work. Before being cut the stone is mounted in molten metal, which, when cool, is tooled down close to the stone. The finished diamond contains fifty-seven sides, each of which has been ground with diamond dust and oil on a soft steel disc revolving at the rate of 3,000 times a minute. The picture is unusually interesting.

"Humpback Whaling in the Pacific" (Paramount-Bray).

The illustration of humpback whaling contained in the 90th release of the Pictograph is a good one and was photographed especially for the Bray studios. The ship on which the hunters embarked sailed from New Zealand into the waters of the Antarctic Ocean, and returned months later after meeting with splendid success. The chase is followed through a sea of icebergs, and when within shooting distance the great harpoon gun in the bow of the boat is loaded and the harpoon slipped into place, and finally the big whale is shot and towed in by means of the rope attached to the head of the harpoon, and lashed to the vessel's side. Once at the whaling station it is relieved of its blubber, from which the valuable oil is rendered. Every detail of the chase is shown in this picture, which will be found thrilling and interesting as a part of the Pictograph.

"Uncle Sam's Hints to Housewives" (Paramount-Bray).

Commencing with the 88th release of the Pictograph there will be found a series of "hints to housewives" that are of value. The 90th release, with the aid of the Cornell University's Domestic Science Department, shows us how to replace meat with compounds of vegetable ingredients temptingly prepared. Not only are instructions given, but each step in the preparation of the food is graphically illustrated, so that it can be duplicated readily in any home.

"Operation of the Aeroplane Gun" (Paramount-Bray).

The 90th release of the Pictograph contains another of the Leventhal animated mechanical drawings. This drawing shows the exact method of operating the aeroplane gun, and is of great interest at the present time. The allied aviators are equipped with tractor aeroplanes which mount machine guns, the operation of which is entirely automatic. This is the type of machine which is illustrated in the picture. It is mounted above the head of the aviator, and the connecting rod joins its operating mechanism to the main shaft of the aeroplane motor. It is adjusted so that at the touch of a lever the motor automatically discharges the gun without the aviator having to more than steer his plane.

Crime and the Moving Picture

The Subject of Juvenile Delinquency as Traceable to the Film.

Discussed by H. F. Sherwood, of the National Board of Review.

THE idea that much juvenile delinquency is traceable to the movies is widely held. The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures investigates all accounts coming to its knowledge of criminal actions on the part of the juveniles credited to the imitation of scenes in motion pictures. The results of the investigations indicate that the burdening of motion pictures with the responsibility for delinquency is as reasonable as it would be to place the onus on a circus performance. A recent case illustrates this fact.

Two or three weeks ago the city press published a story of a Brooklyn boy by the name of Morris Cohen who nearly hung himself while, it was stated, he was imitating a scene in the movies. Morris, twelve years of age, according to the accounts, in company with other boys, was re-enacting a film scene on the roof of a tenement house. He volunteered to be the "traitor." A gallows was erected on the roof and so placed that the guilty person should hang over the edge. It may be added that it was stated in one account that the house was three stories high, and that the victim was likely to fall sixty feet. Not many apartment houses in New York City furnish such spacious rooms as this would indicate.

The facts as reported by the investigator of the National Board of Review were as follows: Morris said there were no boys on the roof except himself, and that he was playing with a rope. He placed the rope around his neck as he had seen it done in the picture, so that it would not fall to the backyard. In doing this, the other end of the rope caught around the chimney. He tripped and knew nothing more until he regained consciousness in the hospital. The boys reported to be with him were interviewed and said they were elsewhere. One of them, however, who was on the fire escape of the next house, saw the accident and screamed. Their statements were corroborated. According to his teachers, Morris was "backward."

It is to be noted from this report that the boy did not see anyone actually hanged in a motion picture. He simply saw a rope placed around a man's neck. Nothing further was shown. As a matter of fact, it is doubtful if any motion picture company would attempt to show a film of a man in the act of being hung. It certainly would be eliminated by the National Board of Review.

Sometimes investigation reveals that there was no foundation for the account whatsoever. This was true, for instance, of a case reported in a Kansas City paper. In the course of a half-column story, it was stated that a certain fifteen-year-old boy, after watching gentlemen burglars in the movies, had perpetrated at least thirty robberies. He was said to have made such a confession to the police. Inquiry of the appropriate city officials of Kansas City resulted in the statement that the boy had a record of crime before he was arrested for the robberies which were the basis of the article; that he had escaped from the detention home where he was awaiting trial, and that the detective who arrested the lad said that he could not recall any conversation that the boy had had with any person, in which his career in crime was attributed to suggestion from motion picture films. This officer added that he felt that the reporter was responsible for the statement.

This corroborates the results of other investigations which tend to show that many of the cases in which the films are blamed are those of youngsters who either already have a record of delinquency, or are mentally defective. Last year certain Wisconsin papers published stories regarding boys "jailed as a result of lurid films inspiration." Two lads, twelve years of age, when arrested for seven incendiary fires, had testified that they "saw it in the movies." Investigation revealed that one of the boys had been declared a mental defective.

A social worker who conducted a city-wide investigation of the recreations of children in New York City last year, which included one hundred stories taken from newspapers dealing with crimes said to have been suggested to boys by motion pictures, found that there was no foundation for the statements in the cases of eighty-nine. Of the remaining eleven, only one boy could fairly be said to have received the actual suggestion for his crime from pictures which he saw at a motion picture exhibition.

It might as well be held that circuses are to blame for the broken arms and legs of small boys, and the league baseball games are responsible for the cracked heads and bruised fingers of youthful baseball enthusiasts. The motion picture has been much maligned by those who credit it with being the chief motive for juvenile delinquency. The National Board of Review seeks to eliminate from motion pictures anything which, if imitated, would be a basis for crime.

In closing, something may be said regarding a recent assertion made at a convention of representatives of one of the largest religious denominations of the country to the effect that upwards of fifty per cent. of those attending motion picture theaters are young people, and that these pictures are causing a great amount of crime. This sweeping statement is self-evidently not based on accurate knowledge. A recent survey of recreations made in the District of Columbia by the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor showed by actual count that in seventy-three motion picture theaters less than one-fifth of those present were under eighteen years of age. This tends to corroborate other data of the same character. Crime is a longstanding evil. The inciting impulse in the case of the young is very frequently declared to be the prevailing forms of recreation. Once it was fiction. Now it is the movies. Doubtless at one time railroads, shortening the journey to wicked cities and perdition, were considered by many to be abettors of crime.

Interesting Material from Gaumont

A Couple of Industrial Subjects Appearing in Reel Life No. 79 Worthy of Special Note.

GAUMONT'S Reel Life No. 79, which is scheduled for release on the Mutual program for November 1, contains a couple of subjects of unusual interest. The first, "Building Our Wooden Fleet," shows us scenes in Southern sawmills which are now working night and day preparing the four hundred million feet of yellow pine for building the wooden ships during the next year. This picture, which was taken in cooperation with the Southern Pine Association, shows the felling of monster pines, as well as their conversion into lumber in the largest sawmill in the world. And in addition to this we see the building of a ship and the launching of the largest combined freight and passenger ship ever constructed in the South.

The second subject of interest is entitled "Important Industries of Argentina." The picture tells us that Argentina now ranks second only to the United States in its exportation of wheat, cattle and hides. In it we see cattle arriving from the pampas, and their final conversion into beef. The method of canning beef is also shown. Other scenes in the picture show a big flour mill on the Rio Plate and the shipment of supplies to feed and clothe the war-ridden nations.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

The following are longer dramatic pictures for the family and for young people which have been used successfully for special programs in theaters:

Artcraft—"Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Down to Earth;" Bluebird—"Mr. Opp," "Mother o' Mine;" Fox—"Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp,' "Every Girl's Dream," "Jack and the Beanstalk;" Goldwyn—"Polly of the Circus;" K-E-S-E—"The Star Spangled Banner;" Mutual—"Charity Castle;" Paramount—"Bab's Diary," "The Varmint," "Little Miss Optimist," "Seven Keys to Baldpate;" Triangle—"Borrowed Plumage," "In Slumberland," "Wee Lady Betty," "Wooden Shoes," "Polly Ann;" Universal—"Man Without a Country;" Vitagraph—"Mary Jane's Pa."

Although only three years old, the better films movement has spread from sea to sea; during the past year it has achieved a loose form of organization, has established a regular means of communication between its members, and has been encouraged by seeing much progress made along the lines of the ideals which it has supported. The September Bulletin of the National Committee on Better Films says: "The strength of the movement is indicated by the fact that several producers of motion pictures are specializing in the making of pictures which will meet the requirements of the lovers of 'better films.' Two which are just placing their pictures on the market may be referred to here. They are The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and the Thomas E. Edison Company with its 'Conquest Pictures'." The Goldwyn pictures are features, such as Polly of the Circus—a splendid picture—and Baby Mine. The Conquest Pictures aim to present a balanced program and will be more fully discussed later.

Picture Career of P. A. Bloch

Recently Promoted New York Branch Manager of General a Thorough Student of Trade Conditions.

SINCE his very recent appointment as manager of the New York City exchange of General Film Company, P. A. Bloch has been very busy organizing his forces for an enlargement of business by this branch and in establishing contact with the exhibitors in his new field. He comes to the metropolis after a highly successful regime as head of the Philadelphia branch of General Film and has been from the beginning of his film career an energetic student of trade conditions in every phase of the industry.

P. A. Bloch.

Back a number of years ago Mr. Bloch was engaged in business in Bay City, Texas, in a line far removed from the film game, by day. By night he conducted a motion picture theater in that town. His experience was then that of many a pioneering exhibitor. Making a promising thing of the picture show end of his activities, he gave up all other activities to devote himself to it. He branched out into states rights activities in the Southwest, which he kept up for some time. He was, however, not satisfied with results, and, suspending operations, made a point of going to New York to investigate the film game at its very headquarters in order to broaden his outlook upon it. Greatly benefited by his experience, he then went to Dayton, Ohio, where he undertook the management of the new Audubon Duplex theater, then considered a hopeless proposition from a remunerative standpoint. Of this he made a conspicuous success for the owners. He entered the exchange field then at Cleveland, becoming manager of the World Film office. After a term there he went to Philadelphia for the General, and has been shifted now to New York. Mr. Bloch's success is easily understood when it is known that he combines with an energetic nature and a bull-dog firmness and persistency a highly modern business instinct and a keen appreciation of conditions.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

BY all odds the most pretentious and best acted picture seen here in many months is "Barbary Sheep." It gave delight to lovers of the artistic, as well as to admirers of Elsie Ferguson. With the combination of Maurice Tourneur, Lumsden Hare—a credit to his dad—and Pedro De Cordoba, to say nothing of splendid scenery and photography, we get here an offering by Artcraft hard to beat. We liked the psychological idea here and the delicate handling of novel situations on the triangle business. As the Arab, De Cordoba was ideal, and Miss Ferguson is some find, for her name will carry sure.

"Polly of the Circus" naturally was a go, for we all have a sneaking regard for the sawdust ring and like to turn the hourglass back. Here we had the real stuff, but poor little Mae Marsh did not get into the picture until half over, and then only incidentally. (My neighbor exclaimed, "Gee, but that's Billie Burke." His chum promptly said, "What—with those legs? Not much.") Certainly the director should have advocated padding. Anyhow, she does look like Billie—neck up. There was an inexcusable slip in staging the race track scene, for we saw at least two of our flags with the union down, when no one seemed in distress except the villain who lost the race. It is scarcely the time to show such indifference or ignorance of flag etiquette and all about me sharp criticism prevailed—even the children rebelled.

The Film Club started its fall meetings with a patriotic twist. Among new members is Charles Miller, formerly of the Hub, now a conspicuous director of big pictures and at present in New York to direct Norma Talmadge for two years. The club president, Marion H. Brazier, told of the individual doings of members during the summer and presented the new vice-president, Mrs. William H. Foster, who gave an outline of the work of her Community Motion Picture Bureau in placing suitable stirring pictures in army camps in many states. A tribute was paid the club president by the hostess of the evening, Mrs. Marie D. Faelten, for her unceasing work since early summer in making small books of cheer for the convalescents in American Red Cross hospitals in France and elsewhere, hundreds having been circulated in the wards "over there" and gratefully acknowledged by the surgeons in charge. One club member. Mrs. Edgar M. Young, a devotee of the pictures, has gone to France as a volunteer worker for the Duryea relief among the refugees. She has a son at the front.

Well, I did not like "The Hostage," with its tactless treatment of war situations and the "pot and kettle" titles, though in no way suggesting this war. "Wally" Reid deserved better and doesn't his new leading woman look like his wife, Dorothy Davenport—same expression and cast of features and named Dorothea at that? The picture has no special lesson and does not make for the kind of entertainment we want these days. The torture scene was too harrowing and needless.

I saw a splendid Fox play the other night at the Fenway with Virginia Pearson well supported in "When False Tongues Speak." Here we get a good mixture of light comedy and domestic difficulties and a bit of triangle thrown in. Miss Pearson is a beauty and takes a close-up "without fear or trembling"—evidently. Dainty Claire Whitney, soon to be here with Clara Kimball Young in "Shirley Kaye," was pathetic in a thankless part, but furnished a foil for Miss Pearson's tropical beauty. The play is convincing and well handled.

* * *

By all odds the most sympathetic play, written, too, around a song, is "Mother o' Mine." Rupert Julian, who directed it and plays the son, is, to my mind, one of the best screen players we have. Will you ever forget Ruby Lafayette as the mother in this play? Think of it, past seventy and able to hold an audience and bring tears to all eyes. Her whole manner and smile, her devotion to the boy and all the rest of it was a sermon which no pulpit can preach. It is a Bluebird and a gem.

* * *

"Exile" may well be exiled until the star thaws out and the play given another title. My critical neighbor said: "Poor Hamilton, he is doing his best to keep from shivering." Petrova has a big following and is picturesque in her many fine gowns worn perfectly, but give me a flesh and blood heroine. Wyndham Standing is some villain and all the sets were splendid. "Paradise Garden," with Harold Lockwood and a fine company, to say nothing of its being an excellent picture, is a credit to Metro. Watch Virginia Rappe, for she has a great future as vampire or heroine. The first fight customary between Lockwood and Cuneo was well done, the villain being thrown over a balustrade to a nice soft sofa conveniently placed—still it took skill to land him unhurt. Vera Sisson is a peach.

"For France" gave Edward Earle an opportunity to repeat his good work while with the Edisons with little Viola Dana. The plot was a bit wobbly, but the fine acting of all puts this over. There was Mother Maurice and Frank Anderson, while Arthur Donaldson played the invader officer perfectly. This was a patriotic play with some good fist fights and airplane stuff and undoing of the enemy. The house applauded this vigorously.

* * *

Pauline Frederick, being one of the Hub's own, the fans filled the theaters showing "Double Crossed," which did not quite satisfy older screen patrons, though "Polly" looked and acted her part well as we have learned to expect. On the same program at one theater we had that delightful comedy "Charity Castle," about which I have read very little and wonder why, as this is what we are clamoring for—a natural picture appealing to all in front with the spirit of cheer predominant and character types doing their bit. That trio—the bum, the burglar and the stranded tragedian—were great! Spottiswood Aitken was some actor when he attempted Shakespeare's lines to a small but delightful audience of four. Mary Miles Minter was the heroine and her conversion of the grouch was natural and compelling. There were some good scenes and the support was way up.

* * *

"Seven Keys to Baldpate" with the only George Cohan packed our theaters—naturally. "Lost in Transit," with George Beban and Helen Jerome Eddy of the Pallas players, was great, especially showing the love of and by little children. I take off my hat to Kathlyn Williams as the author, for here we get a distinctly human play with a lesson.

* * *

Mrs. Ayer at her theater puts on the late Triangles and they are full of life and character work. Saw "Mountain Dew" capitally done by Margery Wilson, Charlie Gunn (he of the perpetual smile) and that clever Thomas Washington, who did a darkey servant whose front name was Theodore, his last that of G. W. and who caused good healthy laughs.

* * *

"Little Meena's Romance" was a fine vehicle for the demure Dorothy Gish. In this play we get some good stuff on the Pennsylvania Dutch, their thrift, cleanliness, and oddity. This is a wholesome play sure to get over. That week we had "Persnicketty Polly Ann," sensibly changed now to "The Little Reformer." Why the Pollyanna author and producers sued on this is beyond us, as there is no resemblance between the two, except that the heroine was the embodiment of cheer. Good small town picture, and Bessie Love will always win for her compelling personality. Another Triangle hit is "Flying Colors," with the dependable William Desmond and capable support.

"The Outcast" is very strong as well as daring as to morals, though at no time does it offend, treated as it is by David Powell, our handsome villain in "Gloria's Romance," and that clever player, Ann Murdock. In the second scene we get a bit of business like that in "The Passersby," when the bored hero calls in a derelict whom he sees in the storm from his window. This time it was the woman to get the bid and she was some sight on entering. Then came the transformation in two lives and what the house likes—the happy ending. I call this an artistic offering of the Mutual's.

Notwithstanding the fact that Otis Skinner has signed with Herbert Brenon for Kismet, a high brow critic here comes out with sarcastic comment, quoting alleged remarks of Mr. Skinner about "the remoteness of it all despite the blither," and puts the actor in a false light in his sneers. Anyhow, Mr. Skinner, who is nothing if not a gentleman, will be in good screen company when we think of the late Sir Beerbohm Tree, Forbes-Robertson, who is to do "The Passing of the Third Floor Back;" Edward Sothern, the Barrymores, Cyril Maude, Sir John Hare, Robert Mantell and countless others who are stars in a firmament of players.

"Six Nights in the Subway" or "The Straphanger's Dilemma."

This is a story combining pathos and comedy. The first scene shows the famous author Hoosa Crook amputating a jitney from his pocket at the subway ticket office preparatory to making a study of the underworld. A thrilling scene follows, showing Hoosa Crook reading the advertisements on the station platform. In the sixty-ninth scene the famous author rises to offer his seat to a lady when—merciful heavens! it is his wife—whereupon he resumes his seat. The climax is reached when Crook suggests to the conductor a cure for sneezing, to which the conductor (according to the title) says "I didn't sneeze, I simply called out the station."

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Advertising Copy.

PROBABLY many exhibitors will be interested in the question of marking copy for the printer, raised by an old friend of the department, who makes a valuable suggestion that you send in a duplicate of your advertising layout with the advertisement that is the result. He writes:

> It would be a help to many of us if the different advertising men would send in a sample of their advertising copy for criticism and reproduction, thus giving us all a chance to learn how to get the desired effects. I recall an instance while I was in a former connection where one of the owners insisted that in preparing ad. copy the larger lines were to be underscored and, if still larger, two or more underscore marks were to be employed. He called in one of the biggest advertisers among the local men and, to my surprise, this man decided that the underlining method was the correct way. I held that the letters should be written into the copy the actual size desired. The printer would, no doubt, understand and follow the underlines, but that doesn't make it right, does it?

Our correspondent is destined to receive another surprise, for any agency man would decide just as the arbitrator did in this case, that the method was common custom; indeed, where a printer sets much copy for one advertiser and comes to know the latter's ideas, the underline method is all that is necessary. There is no one definite and positive way of getting up advertising copy for the printer. Any methods that will get results is good, and the best is that which will give the best results. The underline method gives good results where the printer knows what the advertiser wants or where the advertiser does not know exactly what he does want. Many advertisers cannot prepare their copy any more definitely than this and yet they get good results where they work with good compositors. If we had dealings with only one or two typesetters, and they knew their business, we would not trouble to get up an elaborate layout. We would typewrite the lines on a sheet of paper, without regard for size or proportion, we would underscore the least prominent display lines with one mark, give two to the larger lines or three or four or five or six as the relative importance of the lines seemed to demand. Then we would mark the space the advertisement would occupy and let it go at that. Any pronounced error could be corrected in proof. That is the simplest form of advertising writing, and one largely followed.

Still Other Ways.

The next step is to write your copy, but to mark the size of the type instead of using the underscore marks. Here you write the copy on the typewriter without regard to proportions of the actual writing, but you mark the point or line sizes instead of using the lines. You mark one line to go in a 24-point letter and another in a 30-point, or you call a 24-point letter a two-line letter or a 36 a three-line letter, and so on, the standard being the pica letter of 12-point base.

Being still more exact, you may clip from old advertisements—your own or others—the type faces you like and paste bits of these samples in the margin of your copy to show just what face you want, being careful to select the faces the printer has. This insures your getting a bold face when you want black and a lighter letter when the line should not be so pronounced.

The next step is to mark the special lines with the exact size and face required. You call for a 30-point Cheltenham bold for this line and a 24-point Cheltenham bold italic for another, and so on. In preparing advertising copy for two or more papers you cannot be so explicit, and it is better to give the size only, since no two offices have precisely the same equipment of type. In preparing the advertising copy for a string of New York theaters, we used to send to the advertising agent the sheets of copy, and the agency would send the copy to any one of four or five offices with a demand for extra proofs, these extras serving as copy for the other papers. We never knew what office would get the job, as the work coming into the agency was divided among the different offices, and so we merely marked the copy for size, and we practically never had to make important changes. We typewrote the copy on regular sheets and added a "2 li" for a two-line letter and so on. Italic or full face in the body type was specially marked. Most theaters followed the same plan, even for three sheets from type, and it was only in laying out 28 sheets that a rough layout was supplied.

Where Sketches Count.

But until you can visualize type as the director visualizes a scene from the written words of the continuity, it is helpful to sketch a layout for the printer, more to show yourself than to show him. Here you get a space either just the size of the space you are to take or double the size. The banks of body type are not marked in, but are written as separate paragraphs and numbered or lettered to correspond with similar numbers or letters on the layout. The same thing can be done where the advertisement is laid out in a series of panels or panels with display. If you will turn back to the issue for May 5th of this year you will find an excellent example of the way Dave Udell does it, together with the advertisement that resulted from the layout, or you can find an example in PICTURE THEATRE ADVERTISING from copy by John William Kellette. It will be noted that both of these name the type faces they require, knowing them to be in the cases, but if you indicate the size and general style of what you want, the printer will give you the nearest he can come to the order.

Personally we believe that the best results come from naming the faces, if you can name them correctly and can see how they will look on the page, but until you can do that, we think that the average Exhibitor will get the best results by merely underscoring the matter to indicate the relative values of the lines and leaving the rest to the printer. It is only when some special layout is required, or cuts are to be set in that the sketch is really worth the trouble it entails. Then we recommend a drawing board, a T-square and triangle with a pica rule and a pair of dividers. Use the square and triangle to outline your space and to give you straight lines across, taking your measurements from the pica rule with your dividers. It makes the work much easier.

Now that the matter is under discussion, will big advertisers please send in their layouts on white paper, done in ink?

Spreading Out.

C. W. Bartlett and Son send in a page advertisement for their Majestic theater, Fairbury, Neb. It announces the addition of the Paramount service to their program and three-fourths of the page is taken up with this line of attractions. We show the top of the advertisement. The bottom is divided between Bluebirds and Vitagraph cuts, the former showing Wednesdays and the latter on Saturdays. In between is a mortised cut frame containing the announcement of the change, and on either side the program. We note that both here and in the tasteful eight-page program, the dates are below the text and not above it. This is unusual, but it is sound procedure. You read of a film that sounds interesting, and the last line gives you the day and date. You do not have to look back for the date. It comes at the time you most likely will be interested. They have started their campaign with vigor and dignity. We like the tone in which they announce their change. We like, too, the use of their own pictures along with the stars. It is not vanity but sound sense that put the Bartletts alongside Miss Pickford. They are more important to Fairbury than Miss Pickford, for without the Bartletts, or some other management, there would be no Pickfords, and so the Bartletts mean fully as much to the town as does any of the numerous stars they show. It is plain business to make yourself even better known than your stars, for you may last longer than any particular star.

For Underlines.

A. L. Middleton, of the Queen, De Queen, Ark., has invented a good line for the underlines. He runs

> Watch but don't wait for—— and the list follows. That line is apt and pithy. Mr. Middleton recently tried changing to a card program, but his patrons would not let him and he is back to a four-pager again. That tells its own story. When your patrons insist upon a house organ you can gamble with the sure-thing men that you are making money with it.

Good for Once.

New York theaters have lately taken to the typewriter type for advertising. One form is a typewritten advertisement from the star to his manager, congratulating him upon the success of the play, and another is an open letter to the public commending a production. One is about three and the other four inches, single column, leaded. It stands out on a type page well enough to be copied once or twice, using a brief message.

Going.

L. J. Scott, of Essanay, is going to go into the officers' reserve. He writes that his experiences in Canada, while selling the Max Linder subjects, convinced him that we shall all have to do our bits before the end, and he would rather beat the drafts to come by enlisting now. Starting in a small town in the middle west, Mr. Scott advanced to an exchange position and finally went to Essanay. He has an intimate knowledge of what Exhibitors of all classes need, and in this he had the advantage of the average staff man who knows all of the big towns. Some day soon we hope to see "L. J." back with us, bigger and better than ever. Meantime, along with many others, we regret the passing from the business of a friend.

Vic Winners.

Two good ideas show in a late program of the Victoria, Buffalo, N. Y. One of these is a tag for the program to recall past advertising. It appears under the Sunday program and runs:

THINK BACK! This Friday Evening and Saturday Matinee and Evening, August 24th and 25th, Wallace Reid in "The Squaw Man's Son"—Saturday Kids' Matinee, Marguerite Clark in "Wildflower."

Another idea is a series of skits that can be adapted to any house. We give the series to suggest the general lines along which others can be built—now that the Victoria has led the way:

OUR OWN LITTLE SUNDAY MOVIE.

Scene 1. Mother is unhappy because she isn't busy. Dad's as full of yawns as the Ocean is loaded with fish. Baby whines because he can't think of anything else to do.
Scene 2. Nobody home but the clock and it can't go.
Scene 3. Entire family at the VICTORIA smiley and happy.

OUR OWN LITTLE MONDAY MOVIE.

Scene 1. Dad gets paid. Off to the Club? No.
Scene 2. Dishes in the sink. Tune up the flivver.
Scene 3. Over at the VIC, and nothing doing for the divorce court.

OUR OWN LITTLE MIDWEEK MOVIE.

Scene 1. Busy business man on the veranda all fagged out.
Scene 2. Gets an eyeful of the neighbor's going to the VIC.
Scene 3. Joins the procession.
Scene 4. VIC Orchestra bursts into silvery, refreshing music. Busy business man straightens up. It was the mental tonic he needed. Some music! Some show!

OUR OWN LITTLE WEEK END MOVIE.

Scene 1. Miss Ruby Belle Nason booming music out of the Vic organ that sounds like the melody of the waves.
Scene 2. Grouchy old bachelor sitting in a box and glaring at everything in general.
Scene 3. Organ melody carries him back to the days when he laughed long and loud at the Punch and Pudy shows.
Scene 4. Shakes off the blues. Treats himself to a smile. VICTORIA wins again.

OUR OWN LITTLE REST DAY MOVIE.

Scene 1. Young girl wants something to cheer her up. All alone in a big town.
Scene 2. Sees no familiar faces anywhere around.
Scene 3. Drops into the VIC. Polite girl usher greets her pleasantly and finds her a seat where cool waves brush her forehead.
Scene 4. Lively comedy and music spirits away discontentment. Life's young dream glows again.

There are others for the second week the program covers, and these mostly refer to the current attraction. A single example will suffice:

OUR OWN COMIC MOVIE.

Scene 1. Business went wrong and young man was ready to quit.
Scene 2. Slouched into the VIC and there he saw Fatty Arbuckle.
Scene 3. Skies cleared and life looked rosy again. VICTORIA can't help but win.

The stuff is not really brilliant; it is not intended to be, but it drives home the house name and keeps the patron thinking of the program, and by association the titles and dates will come up. These miniature scenarios are all placed immediately above the date line on each program change. The idea is an excellent one and is worth trying if you have room in your program, or it can be run in the daily advertising if you have a low space rate.

Long Distance.

A. L. Gilbert, in sending in a card from the Vogue theater, Vernal, Utah, writes that the house is 120 miles from a railroad and cost $40,000 to build. The card is red stock, 3¼ inches by 5, and it offers an idea to others, for the text reads:

WE ARE IN WAR

As many of you know, especially those who have sons, brothers, and sweethearts going to serve their country, many of them abroad.

It is not enough that we have helped before such as Liberty Loan, Red Cross, etc., but we want you to come to the VOGUE THEATRE next Thursday and Friday, where 10 per cent. of the gross proceeds will be turned over to the "Boys."

Your mite, large or small, will help to buy some comfort, that could not otherwise be secured. "Over there" is a long journey, and it may take some time to get back.

Thursday: Mabel Trunnelle in "A MESSAGE TO GARCIA."
Friday: George Walsh in "THE BEAST."

Yours Cordially,
THE MANAGEMENT.

We like the ring of this card. There is no false note of jingoism, or "see what I'm doing for the boys." It is what the patron can do, and it is well put. Of course the house will profit from the return visits of the new patrons, but that does not detract from the fact that it is an honest effort to help. It would be better, however, to specify the exact use to which the proceeds will be put.

You Never Can Tell.

Perhaps some of you remember a letter we ran at some length a year or so ago from a Canadian exhibitor, Charles E. Couche. He wanted to hit the big towns, and from his letter we thought it best to advise him to come up by way of a medium-sized place. Tom North gave him a boost in the old V-L-S-E Pals, and he seems to have hitched on in Portland, Oregon. At any rate, he sends a letter on a most attractive letter-head, blue linen stock, printed in blue from a drawn plate with a buff office cipher in one corner. He says:

> Here's your old friend from Revelstoke, B. C. again—the one you criticised so strenuously for a manuscript letter a year and a half ago. I wonder if you like this any better.
> I haven't written before because I've been too busy doing things, and it is just possible the same state of affairs may hinder me from becoming a regular correspondent now.
> Something that seems to me to be almost without parallel in the show game happened yesterday as a result of advertising, at the MAJESTIC here, of which I am advertising manager. It is the best theater in town, and we had been riding through the summer with good old war time economy, but getting good results. For yesterday we had to play an old Fox production which we shelved last season, "The Silent Lie." The attached ad. will show you how I handled it. This ad. ran in three out of our four dailies, in conjunction with regular house billboards. The day was a scorcher, but we played to business that we only beat once all last season with Theda Bara in "The Darling of Paris," and we ran all the big stuff on the market. Am sufficiently tickled to want to write you and at the same time tell you that I'm mighty glad I came to a fairly big town, even though against your advice.

We are glad that Mr. Couche did not take our advice in full, but his letter seemed to indicate that he put most of his trust in music, because he was himself a musician, and we pointed out that something more was needed. Evidently he had that something more, for he has made good in a difficult line. But the point is that with good advertising he filled a house in the hot days with a picture passed over last season. The main advertisement is a three thirteens, a black ground with a picture of the dance hall at the top, a verse below, in white letters, the title also in white and a snow scene at the bottom, with a mortise for text cut into the scene. He seems to fancy the black ground, for he uses it in another example. But he also makes excellent use of white space—use and not waste, which is something else again. We wish Mr. Couche would send in a bunch of stuff before he again becomes too busy to write in. But why should he ever get as busy as all that?

In Keeping.

One thing we have been noting is the display in connection with patriotic subjects. Most Exhibitors have stopped short wih he flag or shield. That seems to be about the depth of their originality in this connection. For this reason we are reproducing the heading of The Movie Fan, the house organ of the Majestic, Grand Junction, Colorado. When Charles Decker had to start thinking, he did run the shields down the side of the story, but he lifted the curse by the figures of a sailor and soldier in the title. The title is 16 inches long, and in a two-inch letter (12 lines), the figures being the same height. They are stock stuff, and may be had for about twenty-five cents apiece. The title runs clear across the page and drops to three columns down the centre of the page, a portion of the space being taken for the shields. There is a turn to another page. If you want patriotic display stuff, do not confine yourself to the flag and shield. Get a copy of the decorative material catalogue of the type foundry, and for a couple of dollars you can get all sorts of stuff; airplanes, battleships and regiments. These are cast in metal, and can be used in newspaper work without trouble on the stereotyping tables.

Wall Paper.

W. J. Weeks, of the Palm, Lindsay, Neb., sends in a wall paper bill and asks for comment. It is the first wall paper bill we have seen in some months. He has picked out a paper not too bright and not too heavy, and had the title been displayed in a heavier face there could be no comment, but it must be remembered that where the black ink has to fight the gay colors of the wall paper, the ink must be put on thick, using a bold letter of large size. Even a large letter of regular line, such as Mr. Weeks uses, will not quite serve. It should be along the lines of Railroad Gothic to fight down the color. The wall paper stunt is good for a novelty. As most readers know, it is a throwaway printed on wall paper, and generally commencing: "We have torn the paper from the walls to make room for the crowds that desire to see———." The title, date, and house name should follow, but little or no descriptive matter should be used.

Ambiguous.

In response to our appeal for information as to how Jay Emanuel liked matrimony we get a postcard in green ink that remarks that we should be still young enough to remember our own honeymoon. Precisely, but what does Jay know what we think about our own honeymoon? He still has us guessing. But Jay sends in a work of art from Niagara Falls. It shows on the left Bob Lynch, manager of the Philadelphia Metro exchange, trying to dip up the American falls, while his assistant, Bill Bethwell, cheers him on. Of course, every photograph and post card studio in Niagara Falls and Buffalo has one of those falls backings, so the feat is not as daring as it looks, but at the same time that is a whole lot of water for a Philadelphia exchange man to have in his possession all at one time. We are willing to wager that they never see that much water out Ridge avenue way. Jay further deposes that he is having a 60-foot prison set painted for use when he runs "The Honor System," the title being lettered across the entire front. That sounds like some sigh. Perhaps Jay will get that photographed, too. Jay sends in a slip of pink paper two inches wide by sixteen long, on the two sides of which he has printed the programs and underlines of his two houses for four weeks. That makes a pretty economical program, and yet it is a distinctly good one, save in the fact that the paper is too light to last four weeks.

Some Job.

Gordon H. Place, of Real Reels, suggests as a stunt that the boy with the most freckled face in his community be permitted to bring his entire family to see Jack Pickford in Freckles, with lesser second and third prizes. The scheme is a good one in that it will attract attention, but there is a troop of boy scouts where we are hanging out and three of them run so close that their freckles would have to be counted to gain a decision. There are lots of these stunts that can be worked. For example, capitalize Arbuckle's weight. Set scales in the lobby with the weights at this point and offer to admit free any couples that together weigh three pounds either side of the Arbuckle weight. You'll not have to give many free tickets, and the number of persons who will try the scales will supply a ballyhoo that you could not afford to hire. That's just a starter. Think up some more and send them in.

Two Color Postals.

Most Exhibitors value postal cards chiefly for their small cost, but the Mikadow, Manitowoc, Wis., goes in for two-color effects, and gets an exceedingly nice result by avoiding the red and black that seems to be the first choice of most printers. Instead of the red they use a transparent brown for the 5 and 10c. and the frame. The price, surcharged, does not obscure the text below, though the one-color reproduction loses this again. Apart from the color scheme the card is very nicely set, a clean, open type that can be read without fatigue. Moreover there is plenty of margin between the frame and the edge of the card. You do not look at it with a do-I-have-to-read-all-of-it? feeling. It does not pay to scare your prospect off with too much type. Say a little, and say it well, and you can sell the prospect more easily.

Follows the Garfield.

Carroll E. King, of the Johnsonia, Leesburg, Ohio, has just taken hold of the house, and he has adopted for his slogan the recent line from a Garfield theater program, "New patronage invited and encouraged; old patronage fostered and maintained." That seems to us to be a particularly happy line for a house under new management. It fills the bill anywhere, but it especially belongs to a changed management, and Mr. King passes along his thanks to the Chicago inventor. Mr. King is new at management, and sends in his first display for comment. We hope that he is going to be a frequent visitor, for we want to watch him grow. He has had no previous experience, but he has been reading the department off and on because he has been interested in the Photoplaywright. He seems to have remembered what he has read. For one thing, his opening announcement is page width, but runs only a scant fifteen. He did not take a page and then start in to fill it. He said what he had to say and let it run what it would. He saves 24 inches, and gets a better proportioned advertisement, and also gets the space on the same page for the interview that backs up the advertisement. This is good work. He gets a better balanced advertisement and pays only for what he needs. He runs but three nights a week, and in laying out the advertisement he puts the Saturday opening in the center of his space with the following Tuesday and Thursday on either side, with an announcement at the top and the house name at the bottom. One error he has made is in not giving sufficient prominence to the house name in the top announcement. It is set in the same face as the rest. He would have done better had he raised this to capitals. The house name occurs three times in the greeting—he could have gained three displays. Even better would have been an underscore for the name each time, using a two point rule with the 24 point type. Underlined matter, in body type, stands out better than capital letters, but it is generally necessary to explain to the printer that the line is for the rule and not merely to indicate italics. To get this, the best way is to draw a line and then mark it "2 point rule." We would carry things a bit further than this and arrange to have the house name underscored whenever it is used in the body of an advertisement. Make the stunt a sort of assistant trade mark. More than this, the house name, in display, should rise to the top of most advertisements, since the house is more important than the attraction. One chance for a good line is overlooked in "No change in prices." That line is all right, especially with a new management, but there would be more biff in "No change in prices—just a better show." In his press work, Mr. King is a bit too general. One item, for instance, says that he spent Thursday in Cincinnati "arranging for high grade film service." That carries little weight. He should have told what he did. He changed from two to three nights a week. He could have written the item to say that he spent the day in Cincinnati "arranging for a more extensive program owing to the fact that he will run the Johnsonia on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings instead of merely on two days a week, the change permitting him to increase the merit of the program without necessitating a change in prices." That would mean more. Mere mention gets the name before the public, but definite fact is more likely to bring them to the house. Evidently the editor is easy with his notices, so it pays to say as much as possible, so long as it remains news.

Nicely Set.

Rather late comes this opening announcement for the Casino, Cape May, N. J. The original is about 3 by 5 inches, but with a wide margin. The type is nicely laid and with the double box the announcement of the opening stands out as clearly as the list of attractions. Run in together each would have fought the other. Side by side each helps the other to display, while good type selection makes a pretty job. The back is printed with type too large for the work and looks crowded. Days and date and feature are set in the same point so close together that each line kills the other. The real trick in display lies in selecting faces that give distinction to each other.

Just One Time.

Special form letters are great business pullers, but they do not last. A letter on some special story will get a crowd, and the pleased Exhibitor may immediately repeat in order to do it again. It may work the second time, but it will not keep up, and if persisted in it will react and spoil the effect already gained. All forms of special appeal will become hackneyed if continued, but nothing stales so rapidly as the form letter. Use it once, and again eight months from now. Meantime make some other use of your mailing list.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

A Cowman's Complaint.

Your cowboy of today is not the least like the cowmen of the Billhart plays. He has brains and often a college education and whiskey is not his chief diversion. We have several riders among our more or less regular correspondents, and one of these is Arthur M. Jordan, who is playing the game like a regular. He writes: "I have met all the disappointments that you have forewarned me I would, and this only makes me more resolute; makes my determination more stubborn. Still I am sometimes of a doubtful frame of mind; for when I read so much regarding the better story of the future and bring up the present staff writer to embellish the proposition, I wonder if the producer really knows what he wants." The producer doesn't. That's the trouble. The big boss and the director are generally as much at sea now as they were five years ago and will be five years hence if they still stick around. They are floundering around hoping something will happen to give them light, but they have neither the ability nor the intelligence, as a class, to strike a match. This does not, of course, apply to all, but it does apply to the business as a whole, and we must look to new blood for support. Somehow we have hopes that J. Stuart Blackton may do something, in spite of the fact that he starts off his independent career with a book right. He is enough of a materialist to know business and enough of an idealist to sacrifice business slightly to reach his ideal. That is the combination that will eventually make for success.

Mr. Jordan, from another angle, gets hold of the real meat of the problem done into his own terms when he writes:

> If we had a cow here on the ranch where I am working that was an undesirable, the cry of "Outlaw" would be raised instanter; and pretty soon there would be a slow wagon and a sad song—as the boys say of a funeral. Then I don't believe that we would be foolish enough to spend a few thousands for another cow like her. Experience is a great thing, and it has required several years of hard study to convince me that it can be subdued. Perhaps this is only another form of the dramatic art that is being improved, but I am not deep enough to catch the drift. I will say pointedly that I will never offer for sale a thoroughly good story until good stories are in demand; for it appears to me that if a regular draws $30 per month, a lieutenant should draw more, or else the incentive would be lost. I can make myself laugh or cry, but it seems that I can't make the other fellow see what I am crying about.

The reason we keep on buying outlaws is that we breed from the same strain. There are three classes of persons who can write plays, the man who wants ten thousand dollars, the man who will take ten, and the man, not known as yet, who would get a hustle on if he could get more than ten and less than ten thousand. Few of the latter class are writing because they know they will not get decent treatment. They must either have a name or be a nobody in these days; be willing to take the ten or be worth the thousands for the name alone. The man who can write a story worth a thousand dollars as a story without a name is not writing photoplays these days. He is the man who should be encouraged, but lofty patronage is not encouragement, no matter what the average editor of today may think. A first class writer should be able to turn out two or three first class plays a year. He should not be encouraged to overstrain and he should be given enough money for the three to make it unnecessary for him to do more. Constant grinding at ideas must inevitably produce hack work, just as will crowding success. Editors must conserve, not exhaust, their few good writers and add to their numbers. Until then there will not be enough good plays to go around.

State Rights.

An inquirer wants to know if we think that there will ever be a real market for the State Rights feature. We take it that State Rights is merely the term for a picture important enough to warrant independent handling. If this is meant, we believe that there will undoubtedly come a market for the feature; not with the present makers, perhaps, but those who will follow them. We believe that in time there will be a genuine and fairly good demand for themes so large as to warrant individual handling by production companies and that these will be handled much as plays are at present. Most of the demand will be filled by the few writers who have made their way to the top, but there will always be an opening for the free lance who has something really good, and through these openings the competent will gradually come to take their place with others at the top. This will probably be a market distinct from the program play, just as at present there are writers of drama and writers of vaudeville material, for it seems inevitable that in time we must come to a division of the houses with big productions at the large downtown houses and some of the neighborhood theaters and one and two reel subjects in the other houses appealing to the same class as those who now prefer the varied vaudeville program to the engrossing drama. But the condition will never come until we have both manufacturers and exhibitors who are sufficiently intelligent to realize that pictures are not a one-style proposition, and who will give us better one reelers than we used to have. At present even the poorer types of ones are being made over into twos. The other night we saw two two-reel plays both of which we did into scripts seven years ago and even then they were not new and checks were sent the authors not so much for the material as because the reminder was good. They made compact one reel plays. As two reelers they were diffuse and tiresome.

There must be better one reelers before there can come better five part stories, for it must be possible to serve either public before this special catering becomes possible.

Adapting.

Last summer, coming from the trolley to the camp, we met a family of seven skunks out for an evening stroll. We were polite and they were amiable and there was no more to the story. But we did not rush to the typewriter and knock out a story of a man who ran into a skunk on his way to see his best girl. We did not write any story, but if we were not so lazy just now we might have written a story in which a hated rival sprayed the hero with the perfume used by the girl the heroine was jealous of; knowing that the hero had hay fever and would not know and that the girl was not similarly afflicted. We would not have used the skunk, merely because we met seven; we would have used the suggestion and not the scene. That is the way to write stories. To not literally adopt what happens to you, but adapt from that whatever you need to make one or more stories.

Ask First.

Last week a young author sent us a twenty-five page script to revise for him. In return he would announce in the book in which it was to appear that we have revised it and that he preferred Technique of the Photoplay to other books on the subject. He sent return postage but no return envelope, and the letter came to us in camp where we have no wide line of envelopes. The week before a woman sent a long script for criticism. It never occurred to these writers to first ask if they might send the stuff. They merely dumped it onto us without warning, and with a supreme faith in the righteousness of their cause and in spite of the fact that each issue of the paper announces that we will not handle manuscript. Before you ship your stuff out anywhere, write and find whether or not it will be welcome. It is less trouble, and your script will be saved a lot of travel. You have not the slightest right to annoy strangers without permission, and no redress if the stuff is not returned. Write first, no matter to whom you write.

Boob Stuff.

Lately a woman wrote us for the address of a presumably successful writer. She had sent the S. W. a sample idea, but the letter had miscarried, and then she sent the idea to Selig in New York with a request for an address and they sent the story back with word that they had enough scripts to last a year, but they did not add the desired address. No reputable company will reveal the addresses of its writers to the boobs, because they know the boobs for the pitiful grafters they are. Don't look for addresses. Go down to the library in your own town and ask for what books they have on photoplay writing. Read them all. Buy the one which seems to help you most, and go to work.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost, will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Powers Improvements for 1917.

During the present year the Nicnolas Power Company has made a number of minor improvements in its projector. These improvements are such as experience has indicated the wisdom of. None of them individually have called for any radical changes in the equipment. They are merely refinements which have made the machine a better instrument, and have lightened the work of the operator, while making his work more effective. The changes, as listed below, apply to the Power's 6B projector.

1.—Gate latch lengthened sufficiently to remove it from the intense heat of the spot. It now is at all times cool enough for comfortable handling.

2.—The tension springs and aperture plate have been lengthened, which operates to give the picture increased steadiness.

3.—Flap of automatic fire shutter has been given double its former heat resisting power by making it double, with a ¼-inch air space between the two sheets of metal.

4.—A comparatively heavy cast iron condenser holder is now being used, instead of the former sheet metal holders, for the purpose of reducing condenser breakage.

5.—The douser-shield is now being made of cast iron and placed so that it comes between the arc and the condenser. This allows of the more gradual heating up of the condenser, which will still further reduce breakage.

6.—In order to reduce noise and friction, the motor drive idler pulleys have been changed from cast iron to non-oiling material.

7.—So that the operator may the more conveniently reach the lever for changing speed, the bracket bearing same has been placed higher on the stand, and the lever lengthened.

8.—The take-up pulley spring for the lower magazine is now being made of heavy spring steel, with both ends fitted at right angles to the pulley and the respective stop-collar. This will greatly reduce the wear, as the spring must turn with the pulley.

9.—All carbon holders are now being made of a bronze composition containing 95 per cent. copper, the same being cast. This composition has large heat resisting power, as well as very high conductivity. Jaws made from this alloy will have a maximum of useful life.

These changes are all good. No. 2 was many times recommended to Mr. Power by the editor, as long ago as eight years, and Nos. 4, 5 and 7 for quite some time. This is not said with a view of claiming any particular credit, but merely as showing that when this department has concluded that a change is desirable, it does so only after making very certain it IS desirable, witness the fact that pretty nearly all the conclusions we have reached have been sooner or later adopted by machine manufacturers, in one form or another.

The reason for this is very simple. When operator after operator after operator suggests to us a certain change, and we examine into the matter ourself and conclude that the thing is both practical and good, it is pretty certain to be just that, because it has eminated direct from the final source of criticism—the users of the projector.

Of course many changes suggested by operators are, for one reason or another, impractical, and it is right there my four years' experience in the Power factory serves me in good stead. I learned something about the manufacturing end, and how to differentiate between the thing which is practical and the thing which is not practical from the manufacturing standpoint.

The inside douser will also fill another important mission other than that named, viz.: it will protect the lens from sudden drafts of cool or cold air when the lamphouse door is opened. This will be an equally important item in reaching condenser breakage with the one set forth.

New Film Cleaner.

M. E. Noble, Elgin, Texas, is the inventor of a new film cleaner, concerning which he writes thusly:

> Well, at last, I have been awarded letters patent on my film cleaning device, concerning which I wrote you quite some time ago. Enclosed find copy of patent description, which I would ask you to go over carefully, giving your opinion on same. If you think the cleaner, as you see it on paper, is worth while, I would like you to let my brother exhibitors know of same through the department. They say necessity is the mother of invention. In this case I can truly say that oil, dirt and grease on the films I received induced me to evolve the device in question, which certainly is an honest to goodness cleaner.

Judging of the comparative merit of an invention merely through examination of drawings and description is, at least to me, an utter impossibility, friend Noble. Moreover, I do not believe the man lives who can do it. I might make an intelligent guess, but that is all. The thing which looks really splendid on paper, often proves a first-class, double back-action, stem-winding flivver when seen in action. Now DON'T imagine I am saying, insinuating or implying that your machine is in that class. I am merely pointing out the utter futility of expressing an authoritative opinion without first having seen the machine itself, and watched it work.

From the drawings and description, however, your machine seems to work essentially upon the same principle of that contained in the Ideal Film Cleaner, page 207, third edition of the Handbook, but to elaborate considerably upon its action. There is no question in my mind but that the device you have invented will clean the films of oil at least fairly well, and maybe very thoroughly. That it will also remove a lot of dirt is beyond question. The two practical things which strike me are (A) will the pulling friction be such that it will preclude hand rewinding, and oblige the operator to watch the re-wind motor constantly to prevent it stalling as process of rewinding advances? (B) Will the friction be so great that particles of dust caught in the cleaning pad will scratch the emulsion?

Mind you, I do not know that either of these things will take place, but they seem to me to be possible. You have asked me to review the matter, and with me a review does NOT consist in merely looking the thing over and saying: "Splendid! Better take half a page of advertising at once!" If your cleaner is practical, and is a better cleaner than we now have, or as good a device which can be sold for less price, thus saving your brother exhibitors money, then we are for it; also we are for it whether you ever advertise a single line or not, though we naturally hope you will. But if your cleaner pulls so hard that, while it does the work when used, still the operator will not use it (which has to date proven to be the waterloo of several otherwise excellent cleaners), or if it will clean the film perfectly, but scratch its surface in the process, then I could not, cannot and will not recommend it, even though you purchase ten pages of advertising a week.

If you have sufficient confidence in your invention to care to send a cleaner to M. M. Moon, Secretary Local Union 468, I. A. T. S. E., box 537, Sherman, Texas, I will ask him to have it thoroughly tried out in all the Sherman operating rooms, each man to make a separate report to me. If these reports are favorable I will then ask you to send the machine on to me and we will see what we shall see, the machine to be returned to you of course, when I have done with it, you to pay the transportation charges.

You may think this is very elaborate caution, and it is, too. But if I gave opinions offhand, how long do you suppose my decisions would have any weight or value to you or to anyone else?

Boylan Even Tension Reel.

R. J. Dwyer, Koch, Missouri, writes:

> On page 1601, June 9, 1917, issue, you indorse and recommend the Boylan Even Tension Reel, and say it is to be marketed by the Automatic Reel Company, New York City. Will you advise as to street address of this company, as I am desirous of obtaining details regarding this life saver in the way of tension devices. Success to the department and to the "Exhibitor's Bible."

Don't know what happened to the company in question. Ever since my return to New York I have been waiting for them to spring something, as I understood they were ready to get busy. But the silence is so dense I can almost hear my own hair grow. The Boylan Even Tension Reel looked good to me, and I shall be very sorry if it falls by the wayside.

Floor Paint and Non-Flam Film.

Paul H. Allen, New York City, an old crank artist, sets us right in the matter of non-flam film, and offers solution to Shreveport, Louisiana's, floor troubles as follows:

In September issue of the department Frank Gwinn, Shreveport, Louisiana, wanted to know about a floor paint. I've been out of the operating room and on the camera crank for about five years now, but I'm going to "come back" and cooperate with the boys who have in their hands the ultimate result of our labors. I used to operate in a small town in West Virginia, where I had the same trouble Brother Gwinn is experiencing. Tried all kinds of paints available, even to a thin coat of concrete, which cracked—possibly too rich a mixture. After the concrete gave way I consulted a successful contractor and builder, and as a result, secured a composition flooring called, as I remember it, "Imperial Flooring Compaund." It was made by a firm of the same name in Rochester, N. Y. It somewhat resembled putty, and was troweled down on the floor about ⅜ of an inch thick. In a few hours it set solid, was fireproof and did not "dust off"; also, and best of all, it did not have that cold feeling in the winter time. The cost was about 16 cents per square foot.

In the same issue the Stout Machine Company asks about non-flam film. You are in error. The Eastman Company does make non-flam now, but on special order only, and at about 25 per cent. advance over regular prices. They call it the Eastman Safety Film. I have a call for it from time to time from my customers. It is the same as Edison and Essanay used in about 1909. I found it satisfactory from the photographic standpoint, as the emulsion is the same as the regular Eastman. It is made only in the positive stock. Its keeping qualities before development are not quite as good as the regular stock, due to some chemical reaction from base to emulsion. This is present to some extent in all celluloid stock—even in ordinary kodak films. I have personally made tests and experiments which bear out the foregoing statements and conclusions, my experience having covered every technical phase of film production.

From now on I will not be such a total stranger, and will be glad to advise or help any operator who is ambitious to become a camera operator, but is having trouble with matters photographic. By the way, the non-flam film must be ordered through J. E. Brulatour, Eastman's New York agent, No. 5 West 32d street.

I wish to personally thank you, Brother Allen. With regard to the non-flam matter I find you are correct in every particular. The information is passed along for the benefit of those concerned. We welcome you back into the department, but suspect our colleague, Carl Louis Gregory, will get jealous and land on our devoted frame if we butt in on the photographic end too much. Well, mebby I'd like to get him peeved just a little. Although we have been on the same paper for lo these long times, to the best of my remembrance I have never met the gentleman. Don't know whether he's afraid of me, or afraid I'm afraid of him. Anyhow, he is as scarce as humming birds at the North Pole when I'm around. I'm getting really curious to know what sort of a good looker he is anyhow.

The Five Thousand Dollar a Year Operator.

At the first annual banquet of the American Projection Society, held recently in Hotel McAlpin, New York City, it came as a complete surprise when S. L. Rothafel, managing director Rialto theater, New York City, who sat next this editor at the toastmaster's table, leaned over and whispered: "When you speak you have my authority to announce the fact that after January first my Chief Operator, Lester Bowen, will be placed in charge of projection of both the Rialto and my new theater at Broadway and Forty-ninth street, at a salary of five thousand dollars a year."

And thus, at long and last has projection been recognized in a comparatively big way. And it is fitting that Mr. Rothafel, the recognized premier in the presentation of the photoplay, should be the one to do it.

Look well at those figures, brother operators, and remember that LESTER BOWEN GETS FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS A YEAR BECAUSE HE HAS MADE HIMSELF WORTH THAT SUM, and for no other reason under the sun, even, as you may get more than the prevailing wage if you, by persistent effort to excel, make yourself worth more. "But," says the unsuccessful one, "I've tried and my boss don't appreciate good work," or, "I tried real hard for a long time, and became discouraged."

To the first I would say, you but waste effort working for a manager or exhibitor who has no appreciation of good work. Leave him, is my advice, and do it quickly, if you ever expect to succeed, because working for such a man will eventually undermine your ambition. You will, in the very nature of things, become careless, and will stand still or drop back, instead of going ahead. There may be cases where it is not practical for an operator to leave such an exhibitor. In fact, there are many such cases, but after all, they are isolated, in a sense, and I speak of things broadly. On the other hand there are now an ever increasing number of exhibitors who are able to, and do differentiate between the good and the bad in matters projectional, and these exhibitors are right now greater in number than are ambitious, high class operators. In other words, there is at this moment a place for every operator where he may advance himself beyond the union scale, or the prevailing local remuneration, by persistent, intelligent effort, backed up by scientific knowledge of projection, in all that entails. But remember that Rome was not built in a day. It takes time to accomplish almost anything really worth while—time and strenuous effort. But persistent effort to improve your position, my brother, will reap its reward, always provided the effort be intelligently directed.

The five thousand dollar a year operator is here. His number may increase slowly, and there may never be very many of him, because there will not be any large number of such positions to fill, but you may at least climb in that direction for a considerable distance by intelligently directed, persistent effort—by making yourself worth more and not becoming discouraged because your efforts and abilities are not immediately recognized.

A Good Operator.

Brother A. Feinman, New York City, arises to make the following very pertinent remarks concerning the profession:

It is only upon rare occasions that the operator of a motion picture theater receives mention in connection with the success of the theater. It seems as though his share in the success is invariably very carefully overlooked, or else entirely forgotten, when the final inventory of a successful theater is taken. As a matter of fact how many really know that to the operator belongs a large share of the glory when a success is made.

But let there be a failure! How quickly, and with what wonderful unanimity they agree that "the bum operator was to blame"! The importance of the operator in success-making is not then forgotten. He is the goat—in fact, he is a whole flock of them. Nor do the critics pause to ask whether he had a glorified cigar box for an operating room, ante-diluvian equipment, and the very cheapest supplies it was possible to purchase, regardless of quality. Nay, nay, Cleopatra, such trifles matter not. The screen result was rotten, the theater failed and the operator is the goat. Had the screen result been high class, and had the theater made a stem-winding success, you would never have known, so far as published accounts be concerned, the poor operator existed.

All of which is eminently correct. The manager has something besides the mere salary to work for. He is, to a large extent, in the public eye. Like the general, he well knows that success will crown him with a halo of glory. He, therefore, works hard, schemes and contrives to the limit of his capabilities to make good.

But friend operator well knows he will get no credit for success, and plenty of abuse for failure. He has not the incentive to hard work which goes with public laudation for success. In but few theaters has the management even the grace (I came near saying common decency) to put the operator's name on the programme, though everyone else, even down to the head seat-shower, has his name there. If there is a splendid screen presentation of the photoplay, the patron smiles amiably on the usher, nods genially at the janitor, if he is in sight, shakes hands with the manager and forgets that the operator, who really did four-fifths of it all, exists. But let there be a break in the show, or a rotten light, due perhaps to the cheap carbons friend manager through an attack of near-economy bought. Aha! The patron grinds his molars in rage. Rotten operator! Curses! The gallery boys whistle, and down below they clap hands and stamp, while up in the operating room the operator, stripped to his B V D's, sweats and struggles with carbons which won't carb. They cost five whole, great big one-buck shin-plasters per thousand less than good ones, though, and friend manager "saved" that sum, even as Pharaoh saved straw when he ordered the Israelites to make brick without it. Or maybe the operator is cranking with one hand, with half of one eye on the screen half of the time, the other half watching the rewinder all the time, while his other hand is, of course, cranking the rewinder. His other eye is busy watching the ammeter, voltmeter, mechanism, clock (for he runs on schedule) and the motor generator. With one foot he regulates the projector speed and with the other he from time to time adjusts his light. If there is a splice to make he does that with his nose and teeth. And through it all friend audience (managers who allow or require such stunts won't and don't know the difference so long as there is a moving figure on the screen) expects the art of Clara Kimball Young to be faultlessly depicted on the screen, with censure for failure and nothing at all but cheap living and work for success. Verily I say unto you it's a great life if you can stand the strain!

Brother Feinman is connected with the Public Projection Rooms in the Godfrey Building, New York City, where his work has played no small part in the success of that company.

Recommends Smaller Carbons.

M. M. Moon, Sherman, Texas, criticises Sour Lake, Texas', procedure as follows. His letter was received quite some time since. Apologies. We'll be more prompt in the future if possible:

Well, Old Man, you're back in New York, and have had time to at least take one good breath, so I'm going to demonstrate my extreme friendliness by jumping on you with both feet and kicking same out again. This ferocious act is prompted by the fact that when you got up in the Northwest you published the statement: "I have but just found the first man to answer the lens question propounded in the course of my lecture correctly." G-r-r-r-r! Waddymean by them woids, man. When I arose on my rear legs, at the time you lectured here, and answered that query you said: "Absolutely correct. Now, Friend Richardson, how in the name of your, or my, great grandfather's specter, can one be more correct than "Absolutely"? Answer me that, if you can.

In a recent issue of the Department I note where a young flicker artist named Rankin. Sour Lake, Texas, is having trouble solving the problem of how to run two projectors with one motor. He said he was forced to do this because his manager would not purchase another motor, and then went on to say he was using ¾ or ⅞ carbons, with thirty to forty amperes D. C. Now right there is where Friend Rankin could save enough to buy a motor in a short time. Reduce the carbons to ⅝, which is none too small for his amperage, thus saving several dollars in a few months, with the same, or better, result on the screen. There are several other troubles mentioned in the letter, including flicker, but the particular issue in question is not at the moment available, else I would take a hand, at least on the flicker question. But the very best advice I or any one else could possibly give Rankin is to purchase a copy of the Third Edition of the Handbook, and having done so, STUDY IT. Don't merely buy the book. That would be almost the same as throwing four dollars away. But buy and STUDY it, and it will be worth literally hundreds of dollars to him, or to any other operator.

Conditions have improved since you were here. All screens now have black borders, with a single exception; also the picture size is reduced, all of which shows your trip did good. The local appreciated your lecture, and will prove that fact later. Our secretary just returned from a trip to Chicago. Says they certainly are a splendid lot of men up there. Both he and our local appreciate the many courtesies extended him by the Windy City boys. Well, here's hoping you and our department grow bigger and stronger as time goes on.

As to your deadly intent with regard to my breath, will a pulling of my forelock, a most humble kowtow and an apology cool the fires of anger? If so, consider them as made. True for you, my notes show that you did answer the lens question correctly. Sorry, Old Top. My error. But as to the carbon matter, I cannot agree. In the first place there would, I think, be but little actual saving in carbon, because, while the five-eighths would cost less per carbon, they would be consumed very considerably faster. In the second place, while I agree with you that under forty amperes three-quarters is too large, some of the best operators in the country are using that size on forty, and claim excellent results. Seven-eighths is entirely too large for Rankin's amperage, of course. Personally I am not certain as to the advisability of using ¾ carbons on anything less than fifty amperes. Between forty and fifty I regard the use of ¾ and ⅝ as a matter for individual preference; also as depending somewhat on the make of carbon. True, I may have advised a ¾ upper and ⅝ lower for forty amperes in some cases. Well, I even now am not sure the advice was so far wrong, everything considered, though it might perhaps better have been qualified. Your remarks concerning the study of the Handbook are entirely correct. Please convey to friend wife and to the members of the Sherman local my very best wishes. You really don't know, Brother Moon, how splendid it is to know I have the confidence and the friendship of the men of Sherman, and of so many other similar bodies. It makes life worth living, and hard work a pleasure, because I know the work will help "The Boys."

Just a Kick.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, California, comments on the article by Brother Phillips, New Haven, Connecticut, as follows:

Just a kick on the article "High Amperage," by Louis Phillips, issue of August 25 last. Phillips claims that the temperature at which carbon will volatize under normal atmospheric conditions is constant, irrespective of temperature of heat source. The above statement is agreed to as being correct. He also claims that the temperature, and therefore implies that the brilliancy of the crater per unit of area does not increase with increase of amperage, which same, according to his argument, merely increases crater area. This is also agreed to as being approximately correct. On the other hand Bowen is quoted as believing the quickening of the process of volatization will increase crater temperature per unit of area. Although volatization may not be quickened by increased current flow, I am inclined to believe Bowen's idea is correct, basing my views on the following analogies, viz.: (1) A piece of charcoal will burn, i. e., be volatized at a constant temperature, but at red heat will give off very little light. But if it be now placed in pure oxygen it will produce a very brilliant light, the only real explanation being, so far as I can see, the process of volatization has been quickened. (2) Investigation has shown that the brilliancy of the electric arc crater is not always constant, varying from 160 to 210 candle power per square millimeter, using the same carbons, but with different activities of current. (3) An oxy-acetylene flame applied to the end of an arc carbon would not necessarily produce the same brilliance per unit of crater area as is obtained by electric current, although the carbon area volatize at the same constant temperature.

The value of the above illustration is to show that brilliance should not be regarded as being so dependent upon temperature. Light is more closely related to activity than to heat.

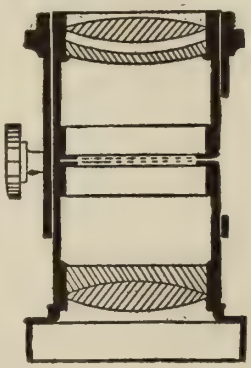
Where do you get your authority for the statement that crater brilliancy varies from 160 to 210 C. P. per square mm., using the same carbons but with varying current density? According to Blondel the intrinsic brilliancy of the positive crater of the electric arc is very nearly constant, irrespective of the current, at about 158 candle power per square mm. for solid, and 130 for cored carbons. My authority for this statement is "Optic Projection," Simon Henry and Henry Phelps Gage, page 564, paragraph 773. The Professors Gage are themselves high authority on matters pertaining to light, but in this instance they quote Blondel. At first glance your charcoal analogy struck me as plausible. After considering the matter, however, I don't believe it is. I am not quite so certain that there is any similarity between combustion and volatization. Your charcoal experiment is combustion, pure and simple, whereas as I understand the matter, volatization, and not combustion, takes place in the crater of an electric arc. The intense heat generated does not cause certain elements to combine with substances known as "inflammable," thus generating heat and light, as in the case of combustion. Volatization, as I understand it, is the disaintegration of particles of substance, and their transformation into gas, the same taking place with great rapidity, and, in the case of the electric arc, under tremendous heat. As to the oxy-acetylene experiment, I cannot comment intelligently. This whole question is of much importance, since upon it depends, at least to some extent, the relative benefit to be gained by using high amperage. If it can be shown that crater temperature, hence C. P. unit of area C. P. increases materially with added current flow, then a different face is put on the proposition of added amperage above the economic limit, or capacity of the lens system to take care of crater area. As the matter now lies, I stand by my guns, and still say there is no appreciable gain in C. P. per unit of crater area as we increase amperage.

Putting a Projection Lens Together.

Connecticut asks the following:

Will you please publish drawing showing how to put an objective lens together properly; also has a stereopticon lens more than two factors? Please omit my name and the city.

I would advise you, Connecticut, to send in four of your hard-earned dollars and get a handbook. Having done so you will be in position to study and become familiar with matters of this kind.



The drawing is necessarily merely typical, since lenses of different focal length will, of course, have very different curvatures—different in amount, I mean. Sometimes the back surface of the back lens of the rear factor will look almost, if not quite, flat. But in general form the various lenses will look as shown, and the surface of greatest curvature must always be placed toward the screen. This applies to all factors of all objective lenses.

There are several types of stereopticon lens. One type has but a single bi-convex lens. Another has a front factor, while a third has the same layout shown in accompanying drawing of the objective.

Efficiency for Motion Picture Studios.

By CARL L. GREGORY.

IT is a trite expression to say that motion pictures are still in their infancy, nevertheless it is true, although we must admit that the infant is a thriving and lusty one and demands and receives recognition among his elder brothers in big business. On account of this rapid growth it has produced enormous profits to men and companies who have flagrantly disregarded even the simplest axioms of business efficiency. These profits have been so great that wastes and losses, which would have swamped any other manufacturing business, have passed unnoticed. There are today avoidable wastes in practically every department of every motion picture studio. Very few of the workers are properly trained for the positions they fill, and, in addition to the handicap of their own ignorance, are compelled to work with inefficient tools and improper appliances. Wastes of water, of chemicals, of film, of time, that if they could be shown in their concrete aggregate to studio managers would appal them. One studio which buys weekly approximately three hundred thousand feet of raw positive stock turns out in finished product considerably less than two hundred and seventy thousand feet of finished film. That is more than 10 per cent., or $1,000, or raw stock wasted every week, and there are probably other studios where the percentage is still larger.

The motion picture business is entering a new era. Profits are smaller than they used to be. The cost of production is greater, competition is keener and the need of economical manufacturing and production is greater than ever before. A successful motion picture studio of today must pay its stockholders dividends on smaller margins of cost. The main cost items in the motion picture business are the same as that of any other manufacturing concern or factory, and it will be the study and aim of this department to figure out new savings and produce better results in the manufacturing of motion pictures. It does not necessarily follow that in obtaining cheaper production that the salaries of the workers should be reduced, but in such systemization of work that the same force may produce better pictures in larger quantities. It is the modern tendency in all factories with up-to-date methods to obtain a speeding up of operations through time studies, better arrangement of processes and bonus wages to workers for increased output and efficiency systems generally. It has been the objection of many that motion pictures are beyond the scope of efficiency systems, such as have been developed in highly specialized shop industries. It is said that time schedules and bonus wages may be applied to railroads, for instance, yet not to be suited to the miscellaneous operations of the motion picture studio. To refute this argument one has only to visit a few of the many laboratories where motion pictures are turned out. In many of them will still be found the antiquated methods which were in vogue in the earliest days of the business. The working force is only half organized, half bossed, half taught and run at half or one-third its possible capacity. The employees of motion picture plants, like those of almost any other line of industry, have a reserve to draw on, not merely of speed, but of intelligent co-operation and good-will. The good-will of the employee is one of the largest assets of a business.

In a large studio, where a new manager was recently installed a system of salary cutting and fines for mistakes was instituted. A large number of the oldest employees were suddenly discharged. The entire atmosphere of the studio has been changed. Instead of the old cheerful attitude and willingness to work overtime if necessary and meet emergencies with increased effort, a spirit of don't care and slip-shod workmanship has invaded the place, and while the salary list has been cut down a few dollars, the intangible loss of the former good-will amounts to many times the small savings. In this same place, where it was formerly possible to obtain appliances for better operation upon proper requisition, it now requires so much argument and explanation that the workers prefer to do with what they have rather than face the difficulties of obtaining what they need. This is a common condition in many studios, which still lumber along handicapped in a hundred ways for want of proper facilities. Camera men are supposed to turn out perfect pictures with cameras which should have been in the junk heap months ago; joining room girls splice with inadequate tools; printers and perforators work with machinery that should be in the machine shop for repair; for want of enough projection machines testers run films at the highest rate of speed possible without tearing them to pieces; films come through the dark room poorly developed and improperly washed because more work is coming through the dark room than its capacity warrants, and a hundred other things that might be mentioned, and yet when called to the attention of the studio manager bring forth a contemptuous grunt and the question: "We have got along so far all right, haven't we? What more do you want?" True, there are many studios where every facility is afforded and everything possible is done for the best quality of work, and their number is slowly but steadily increasing.

The Cameraman's Job.

Experience in photographic work is the best foundation for a cameraman's job. The ranks of the cinematographers of the present have been recruited from strange places in many instances, but the most of the best men have worked their way up from some film factory position—they have worked in dark rooms, they have finished stills, but at the same time they were ambitious. Most of them had a camera or kodak of their own, and they took their little cameras out on Sundays and made snapshots, and during the evenings of the week they developed and printed them, and they got books on photography from the public library and bought photographic periodicals and they read and studied them, and while they were at work in the film factory they learned all that they could from their fellow workers. They earned each promotion by hard work and study, and at last, after a thorough apprenticeship, they arrived at the position of cameraman. But if they became good photographers they did not stop then when they had learned to thread the camera and turn the crank; there were lots of things to learn yet—more about the lighting, more about artistic composition and posing; there was much to learn about lenses, about trick work and visions, and then beside all this, and just as important, too, as the technical knowledge, is the co-operation and co-ordination with the work of the director. It is essential to the best work that the photographer be able to catch and instil into his picture the same spirit and motif which actuates the director who produces it. Unless the photographer understands and appreciates what his director is endeavoring to do he cannot produce the best work.

From the ranks of the newspaper photographers have come some of the best topical news cameramen. Theirs is practically a separate branch from the work of those who make dramatic pictures, and while numbers of them have gone in very successfully for studio work on dramatic pictures the qualifications which make for the success of a topical film weekly photographer are mostly different from that of the photographer who works with a director in the production of staged stories. Many of the boys who are now turning out productions have learned as camera boys or assistants to cameramen, and their success has depended much upon the preceptors under whom they worked. Most of them realize the handicap imposed upon them by their lack of laboratory experience, and only by serious study from whatever sources available to them have they been able to overcome their lack of training in this branch. Unfortunately, there are many such at work taking pictures now who lack this training so necessary to the production of the best work.

Most studios, up to a recent date, have been in the habit of furnishing the cameraman with all of his apparatus, and the best of them have maintained mechanical departments where such apparatus could be kept tuned up to the best mechanical perfection. The increasing demands upon the limited facilities of these machine shops for the repair of factory machinery, such as perforators and printers, coupled with a shortage of the necessary number of cameras, has been to retard the work of camera repair and shove into the background that primary requisite for the making of good negatives—that is, a camera in perfect mechanical condition. So bad has this situation become, and the number of new studios which have started without even a pretense of a machine shop, that many of the more conscientious operators have purchased their own outfits and fitted them up at their own expense in order to have the facilities for turning out work of which they need not be ashamed.

One of the many lessons that the cinematographer learns is to keep his head—to be on the job constantly, be always prepared for whatever emergency may arise, his camera loaded and ready to shoot when the scene is rehearsed, to use judgment and tact, to keep in mind the dignity and importance of the photographic end of the picture, and to insist, as far as consistent with holding his job, that he be furnished with every reasonable facility for the production of the best quality of work

He should make it his interest to know whether it is for the best interests of his company to sacrifice a small percentage of photographic quality and take pictures in a waning light in order to finish with a large cast so that it will not be necessary to call them a second day, or whether the improvement in better negative will justify the expense involved in quitting when the light is getting bad and hiring the large cast again the second day. Get together with your director at the close of work each day and schedule your work for the next day. It beats the haphazard method all hollow; it saves money for the concern, and if you train yourself for doing more you can earn more. If the company you are with is not able to discern when you are turning out more and better work, there are other companies whose business sense is better and who are willing to pay money for results.

Chicago News Letter

Music and War Taxes Discussed—Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A., Solves the Former and Wisely Considers and Arranges for the Latter.

THE recessed meeting of the Chicago Local, held Friday, October 5, was reconvened at 12 o'clock Tuesday, October 16, and the subject of the music tax was resumed. This was the largest meeting held by the organization for several months, and the interest was unusually great. More than 100 exhibitors were in attendance, and they represented over 200 Chicago theaters.

Attention was called by President Hopp to the fact that the first list of non-taxable music compiled by Miss Katherine C. Melcher, employed by the organization for that purpose, had been supplemented by two additional lists, and that the League in all probability will be able, for weeks to come, to increase the number. Great gratification was expressed over the number of musical selections that had been found on the non-taxable list, and it is believed that hundreds more will be found. It is certain that many hundreds more than the exhibitors were originally led to believe by the exponents of the music tax are in existence.

It was also discovered that several music publishers who were set down as being members of the Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers had never been members, as has been attested by signatures to that effect from many of them. It was also learned that several publishers who had been members of that society had withdrawn and entered the ranks of those furnishing non-taxable music in Chicago.

Joseph Winkler, president of the Chicago Federation of Musicians, was present and gave an address on the attitude of the federated musicians toward the music tax. He concluded by pledging the Federation's close co-operation with exhibitors.

At the meeting held October 5 it was decided to form the League's own booking club for the purpose of engaging in collective booking. This merely means the concentration of renting power, and President Hopp appointed the following committee at the Tuesday meeting: Harry C. Miller, William E. Heaney, Fred W. Hartman, Henry E. Newell and himself. This committee will hold a meeting within the next few days to devise plans and means to carry on the work, and will then submit them to the League.

Admission Tax for Moving Picture Theaters.

At the meeting of October 5 it was announced that the collector of internal revenue, Julius Smietanka, would be asked to address exhibitors on the tax question, but it was found that he had been called away from the city on urgent Government business, and that he had deputed Robert W. Blair, a United States internal revenue agent, to attend and interpret that clause of the war revenue tax which has to do with admissions to places of amusement. At the conclusion of his address Mr. Blair invited questions from those present, and answered them according to his understanding of the law. He stated that an admission of five cents was not taxable, and that the patron paying an admission of five cents would not have to pay the tax of one cent. On all admissions of ten cents each individual would have to pay one cent for each ticket purchased; two cents for each purchased at fifteen or twenty cents; three cents for each twenty-five cent ticket, and so on. He announced that the Government would furnish blanks to exhibitors for the purpose of reporting at the end of each month the number of taxable tickets sold and the remittance to be made to the Government.

After Mr. Blair's departure the matter was discussed at length for several hours. Much of the discussion was confined to the establishment of uniformity in carrying out the demands of the law so that everything should be done in like manner, as far as possible, by all exhibitors in Chicago. A poll of those present was taken, and each was called in turn to get up and state his attitude in the matter. It was found that every exhibitor present, with the exception of two, declared himself in favor of carrying out the intent of the law by making the purchaser of the admission ticket pay the tax, this tax to be paid, in addition to the regular admission charge, at the time of purchasing the ticket.

It was afterwards decided by unanimous vote that the League, through a committee selected for that purpose, should get up a uniform placard and slide in explanation of the operation of the tax from its commencement on November 1, the placard to be placed in the lobby of each theater, and the slide to be shown on the screen. These slides and placards will be distributed in all theaters in Chicago at the cost of the League, no matter whether the proprietors are members of the League or not

The committee appointed to take charge of this matter is formed by Charles Stewart, Fred W. Hartman and G. M. Laing. The committee has full charge of the getting up and the distribution of the placards and slides. The members of the committee have also under consideration the getting up of a uniform roll ticket, to be used as a war tax ticket, the object being to establish uniformity in all picture theaters, and to decry the effort of a very small number of Chicago exhibitors from taking advantage of the situation to raise the price of admission from ten to fifteen cents and not letting their patrons know that they individually are paying a war tax, instead of charging ten cents and one cent, thus letting the patron know that he is doing his patriotic duty by paying the one-cent war tax or more, as the case may be.

Talented Compiler of Non-Taxable Music.

Joseph Hopp, president of Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A., and the members of the committee on the music tax of that organization, are to be congratulated on the acquisition of Miss Katherine C. Melcher, who has so ably assisted in compiling the list of non-taxable music for exhibitors, which will appear in next week's issue of The Moving Picture World.

Katherine C. Melcher.

Miss Melcher is an attractive young lady, who impresses one immediately by her affability and keen sense of business. She entered upon the task of compilation with a quiet enthusiasm, which has grown rather than abated as the work has advanced, and this is due to the fact that she is not only an accomplished orchestra leader and musician, but also a strong advocate for the exhibitor against the music tax, as she has been organist at the Kedzie Avenue Theater, 3212 West Madison street, for three years and still holds the position. For several years before that Miss Melcher was conductor of orchestras for dramatic and vaudeville bills at the Joliet Theater, Joliet, Ill., and was in great demand in musical and social circles.

Miss Melcher studied the organ and piano under Harrison Wild and other well-known masters of those instruments, and has a wide knowledge of and familiarity with musical composition. It is due to this familiarty, as well as to her extensve acquaintance with music publishers, that Miss Melcher has proved so capable in carrying on her present work for the members of Chicago Local.

Miss Melcher is well known in North Shore society in Chicago, and is also a prominent clubwoman. For the past two years she has held office in the Catholic Woman's Club of Rogers Park and in the Society of Saint Rose, besides holding active membership in eight other clubs. Nor in her busy life does Miss Melcher ignore the call for sports. She is a daring equestrienne and expert swimmer and an ardent golfer.

Miss Melcher is a member of the Chicago Federation of Musicians. Last week she received a letter from Owen Miller, secretary of the American Federation of Musicians, stating that he would publish in the International Musician (the Federation's official paper), in the November issue, the non-taxable list of music compiled by her for Chicago Local. This publication reaches 50,000 musicians throughout the United States.

Exhibitors are again reminded to look in next week's issue for the list of non-taxable music thus far compiled by Miss Melcher for Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Carl Laemmle, president, and Joseph Brandt, general manager, of Universal, were in the city from Thursday, October 11 until the following Saturday, when they returned to New York. During Mr. Laemmle's stay it was arranged and announced that six stars of the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., will each be featured in eight pictures a year, making forty-eight in all. The new plan will be known as the "star cycle." Mr. Laemmle henceforth will give Bluebird feature subjects his personal supervision, and it is expected that these duties will further increase his patronage of the railroads from east to west.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, made a brief stay in the city Monday, October 15, on his way to French Lick Springs, where he will take a well earned vacation.

David G. Rogers, national organizer of the M. P. E. L. of America, made a brief stay in the city recently and left for Manhattan, Kan., Sunday afternoon, October 14, to attend the state convention held there October 15 and 16. Thence he proceeded to St. Louis, after which he will visit Lincoln and Omaha, Neb., and will then make a tour of the Pacific Coast by way of Seattle. In a brief conversation Mr. Rogers informed me that exhibitors are taking greater interest than ever before shown in the importance of organization. The music tax has aided in this, as it is getting pretty well understood by exhibitors that only united effort throughout the country will enable them to combat successfully such impositions as the music tax. Mr. Rogers believes that music publishers understand that a large proportion of their profits has resulted from the wide advertising given their musical selections in moving-picture theaters. Hundreds of thousands of people have been led to purchase certain musical compositions after hearing them played for the first time in these houses.

E. G. Dollman, capitalist of Indianapolis, recently associated himself with H. Vandawalker in the formation of the Dollvan Film Corporation of Indianapolis. Mr. Vandawalker was formerly manager of the General Film Company's office in St. Louis. Both these gentlemen visited Chicago last week, seeking a suitable location for their branch here in the handling of state right pictures. Their first purchase was made from Pathe for "To-Day," with Florence Reed, and "The Mad Lover," with Robert Warwick. The Dollvan Film Corporation controls Illinois, Indiana and southern Wisconsin for these features.

Goldwyn's Christmas Gift

Will Release "Thais" With Mary Garden on December 30 at Regular Rental Prices.

GOLDWYN Pictures Corporation makes an announcement of interest to exhibitors everywhere with the definite statement that its production of "Thais," in which Mary Garden, America's famous operatic star, makes her screen debut will be delivered to all contract customers of Goldwyn at no advance in prices above what they pay for all other Goldwyn pictures.

"Thais," well under way in the Goldwyn Fort Lee studios, will be released throughout North America on December 30, and will lift the receipts of all theaters playing it to record levels.

This determination by Goldwyn makes "Thais" come as an immensely valuable Christmas gift for the exhibitors of North America, who enjoy the advantages of Goldwyn contracts. And so great is the drawing power of Miss Garden and so vast is the appeal of "Thais" that every theater playing the magnificent picture is assured one of the greatest weeks in motion-picture history.

"The Natural Law" Ready

BIG plays that teach real lessons will be the salvation of the film industry," declares Charles H. France, president of France Films, Inc. "Just as the stage suffered a few years ago, when the effort of producing managers was to merely amuse, the film business today is ordinarily on a shallow basis. Films are made to take their places on a program, make the usual rounds, and then are expected to die a natural death, as they generally do."

Marguerite Courtot.

"France Films," he continued, "are directed on a different basis. We only want to make two or three productions a year, and have each one of them of the highest value, from the showman's standpoint, for the world from the lessons they will teach. If the film is to continue as a staple in the world community it must take its place in world uplift; it must bear its share of bringing the great truths to the public, sharing the privilege with the other great factors of morally beneficial public information—the newspaper and the pulpit. In "The Natural Law," our first production, we are offering a picture that in play form had the commendation of the clergy, many leading educators, social uplift workers and even the Woman's Suffrage Movement. Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont gave the play her highest praise as a factor for good and as something that every young girl in the country would be benefited by seeing.

"It took us fourteen weeks to make 'The Natural Law' because we wanted it to be as near perfect as could be. I think we have succeeded. We have certainly preserved all the value of the play, which last year entertained at the Republic Theater, New York. Howard Hall, its author, played the role of the doctor in the stage version, and does so now on the screen. The production features Marguerite Courtot, whom I consider a most wonderful emotional star. She has a part that will touch the heart of every woman; teach a gripping lesson, and help many a girl to stay in the right path. A picture like this I consider better than a dozen built for one purpose—to merely amuse."

"The Natural Law" has been completed and will soon be shown to the trade.

Ida May Park Director

IDA MAY PARK, who is directing Dorothy Phillips in a series of emotional screen dramas, is one of the few women devoting herself entirely to photoplay production. She is, in private life, the wife of Joseph De Grasse, who has worked in conjunction with Miss Park in preparing for the screen a number of Bluebird features. Miss Park's latest work is the Jewel feature, "The Grand Passion," with Miss Phillips, and which is soon to be released.

Miss Park's work first attracted attention while she was in the eastern studio of Universal, and shortly after the exodus to Universal City in the spring of 1916, she, with Mr. De Grasse, presented two worth-while Red Feather features, in which her genius was so apparent that she, with her husband, was given the direction of the Bluebird star, Dorothy Phillips. Miss Park, with Mr. De Grasse, now hold the unique record of twelve productions in eleven months, three of which were from Miss Park's scenarios, multiple reelers, notably "Pay Me," "Hell Morgan's Girl" and the latest Jewel production, "The Grand Passion," from the story of Thomas Addison, which stars Miss Phillips in a role said to possess unusual dramatic timber and appeal.

Ida May Park.

It was in May of this year, after Miss Park, with Mr. De Grasse, had presented "The Price of Silence" and "The Piper's Price" and "The Girl in the Checkered Coat," that Mr. De Grasse sought a vacation from overwork, and Miss Park, because it seemed expedient at the time, undertook alone the direction of Miss Philips, this being the first time that a star alternated with directors. Mr. De Grasse produced 'The Doll's House," from the Ibsen classic, after which Miss Park directed Miss Phillips in "Fires of Rebellion." She followed this Bluebird with "The Rescue," after which Mr. De Grasse directed Miss Phillips in "Triumph," preceeding Miss Park's production, "Bondage."

Mr. De Grasse, prior to his association with Bluebird, directed the earlier Louise Lovely features, with Miss Park's scenarios, including "The Golden Spider," "Bobbie of the Ballet," "Tangled Hearts" and "The Grasp of Gold."

WILLIAM BILLIG NOW MANAGER OF FOX'S NEMO.

The pretty Fox motion picture theater on Broadway near 110th street, New York City, the Nemo, is now under the charge of William Billig, who by this appointment gets a well deserved promotion. Mr. Billig began his path upward in the amusement business about five years ago as an usher in the Jamaica theater. He has served in the Washington theater in New York and also at the Audubon and Nemo theaters as usher. He was chief usher at the Rievera, also a Fox Broadway house, and now he is in full charge at the Nemo. Mr. Billig is a young man with a pleasing personality and we have no doubt that he will escape the pitfalls that trap so many who win success in early youth. There are still more desirable successes ahead of him. He has many friends and we unite in giving him the best of wishes for a lasting career.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. HARLEMAN

Quinn to Organize National Circuit

To Build, Lease or Affiliate Theaters—Co-operation Assured of at Least Two Film Producing Companies.

J. A. QUINN, who is one of the most progressive exhibitors on the west coast and without a doubt one of the livest and most energetic picture theater managers in the country, is soon to become executive head of Quinn's Circuit of Modern Motion Picture Theaters, with houses in practically every large city in the country, if present plans materialize.

In an interview Mr. Quinn avers he has been assured of ample backing, and negotiations are now pending by which his long cherished idea of a national chain of theaters to cooperate with the producers will become a reality.

"Co-operation—that is my idea in a nutshell," said Mr. Quinn in discussing his latest and greatest project. "We are not out to fight producing companies, exchanges or other exhibitors, but rather to work with them in the endeavor to better the business from every possible standpoint.

J. A. Quinn.

"Under our proposed system worthy films will receive better exploitation, better presentation and better publicity than ever before, and on account of the large number of theaters on our circuit the producers can afford to give us a closer rental price and at the same time by volume make a better profit for themselves.

"In every department of our organization we will have the best people we possibly can get, and the different houses on the circuit will receive the benefit of high priced brains at a small pro rata expense.

"In developing the Quinn circuit throughout the country location will be the principal factor, and when we secure the proper location we will follow a uniform plan of conservative sized houses with every comfort obtainable. In some of the larger cities we will have as many houses as locations and purchase of picture will warrant. We are assured of the closest co-operation of at least two of the largest and best known film producing plants, and they have offered to supply us with pictures at reasonable prices and to consult with us at all times as to the class of pictures required and as to directors, stars, etc., and to work with us with one idea in view; that is, to eliminate waste and give us pictures that the people want at an equitable figure."

Mr. Quinn was born in Toronto, Canada, in 1880. At the age of 18 he entered the business world in a men's furnishing and hat store. Later he went to New York City, and acted as buyer and manager for several of the more important firms there. Having the desire to break into the amusement business, he joined a large musical comedy company. Having a good voice, he soon advanced to important roles. He was soon made assistant director and later director. After a few years he launched out on his own account and founded an excellent character stock company.

His stage experience and schooling gave him a decided advantage when he entered the motion picture industry about ten years ago. Since that time he has operated a many as ten theaters at one time, and has controlled a different times more than fifty theaters. His originality and spectacular methods soon attracted attention, and during the last four or five years he has developed a national reputation as a live wire exhibitor.

J. A. Quinn began his film career in Douglas, Arizona, where he built a small theater. Later in Globe, Arizona, he was double crossed on a theater he had leased, and denied the use of the building. As he had advertised his opening for the following night, he felt that as a showman he had to make good. He recruited a gang of carpenters and within twelve hours had another location revamped into a theater and celebrated his opening as if nothing had happened.

Mr. Quinn broke into Los Angeles in a small way with a theater seating only 150 persons. His first notable exploit in the city was a five weeks' run to tremendous business of Selig's "Two Orphans" after it had previously been run three days on Broadway. No newspaper advertising was used, his success being due to elaborate lobby displays and an intensive house to house publicity campaign of canvassing. At this same theater Mr. Quinn educated the fans to 7 o'clock in the morning performances, often having a line-up in front as early as 8 o'clock. Quinn, it is said, also introduced to Los Angeles the continuous show idea, and was the first exhibitor to use two machines to prevent an aggravating delay between reels.

He made a name by his adeptness at taking pictures lying on the shelves of exchanges and retitling them, trimming the footage and creating his own lobby displays, often turning dismal failures into brilliant successes.

When Mr. Quinn took over the Garrick he introduced many novel features to Broadway, Los Angeles. At this theater he was the first to break away from the "trust" and play "independent" pictures in a high class manner, and it was there he inaugurated photoplayer nights, having the stars appear in person. Having student nights for the colleges around Los Angeles was another J. A. Q. novelty as well as having the audiences form a big chorus to sing the popular songs, throwing the words on the screen by means of slides. At the Garrick he pioneered so far as

Quinn Rialto Theater, Los Angeles.

Los Angeles was concerned in ornate electrical decorations for the front of the house, believing this to be one of the most desirable forms of advertising and well justifying the expense. Later when he built the Superba, he sprung a chain of unusual feats on the Los Angeles theater going public. "Hypocrites" was his first big picture, in 1915. Charging 25, 35 and 50 cents, higher admission prices than Los Angeles picture theaters had attempted before, he played the subject for six weeks on Broadway to capacity business. The first week, with only a 600 seating capacity, the gross receipts were more than $8,000.

Quinn's newest project is his pretty Rialto theater, which is one of Los Angeles' cosiest and finest equipped playhouses. In this theater he has installed spacious orchestra chairs, pleasing lighting effects, organ, ornate draperies, in fact everything to make a model photoplay house. The lobby and display at the Rialto is most attractive and pleasingly tasteful and gives the house an unusually high class apparance.

Chaplin's New Studio Architectural Gem

Hollywood Opposition Dies When Plans Are Approved by Council—Will Look Like Bungalow.

T. L. TALLY, prominent theater owner of the Southwest, and Los Angeles member of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, tells an interesting bit of news about the row which followed Chaplin's application to build his new studios in Hollywood.

Mr. Tally says: "The factory type of studio building is no longer welcome in Los Angeles' swellest suburb, so when Chaplin applied for a permit to build there was a howl of protest from property owners. They had visions of the usual board structure and accessories. The agitation against the new neighbor culminated in a determined committee to the town council, which promised all sorts of dire things if the permit were granted.

The meeting was tempestuous until the plans were produced, passed around for inspection and approved by a vote of eight councilmen for, to one against. Then the protesting committee filed out, with their faces showing relief and satisfaction, for when the million-dollar star's new studio is completed no one will know it from the bungalow residence of his millionaire neighbors. It is to be a regular bungalow, thank you, with flowers and lawns and everything. Of course inside there will be the latest and best appliances for movie making, but passers-by won't know it from an honest-to-goodness bungalow home except, perhaps, that it will be a trifle roomier than the average.

Mr. Tally is also authority for the statement that Chaplin is on his way home from Honolulu, and will start work at once on the first of those "signature protected" comedies.

Fairbanks Gives Rodeo

Artcraft Star Entertains Former Ambassador James W. Gerard, Elsie Janis, Mary Pickford and Other Notables.

THE Lasky lot was the scene of a real western rodeo, furnished by Douglas Fairbanks for the entertainment of the former Ambassador to Germany, James W. Gerard, who was having his first insight into the motion picture industry, guided by the irrespressible "Doug."

A corral was erected on the lot and inside the enclosure "Doug," Art Accord and the highly trained troup of cowboys gathered together to bring before the eyes of the guest a rennaissance of the old West that was years ago. From many vantage points along the top of the fence and the roofs of the neighboring sets clustered the spectators, well out of the reach of the flying hoofs and the waving horns of the cattle used in the bull-dogging acts.

Bennie Zeidman demonstrated a native sport of his home land in a jiu-jitsu bout with "Bull" Montana. When last seen Bennie was headed towards Wyoming.

Taken all in all, as numerous of the local publicity fraternity would say, the party was very rechere.

Universalites Hear Billy Sunday.

More than a thousand Universalites from every department of the big film plant "brightened the corner" where they were one evening recently t Billy Sunday's tabernacle in Los Angeles, at the famous evangelist's invitation. Sunday and his people previously had been entertained at Universal City, and a number of special stunts had been staged for his benefit, which he did not fail to mention in welcoming the film folks.

A section of seats had been reserved for the Universalites and nearly every one of the employes turned out.

Billy's theme was that there is so much good in the worst of us and so much bad in the best of us that none of us has any right to "get-up-stage" with the rest of us.

When the noted revivalist asked the delegation from Universal City to stand up fifteen thousand others in the audience heartily applauded them.

Barter to Build Ships for Government.

Recognition as one of the most capable constructing engineers in the country has come to H. H. Barter, engineering and technical director of the Triangle Film Corporation's plant at Culver City, in the form of a call to an executive position with the American International Shipbuilding Corporation, of Philadelphia. Mr. Barter's departure from Triangle is in the nature of a response to an emergency summons from the nation.

Accompanied by his wife and two children, Mr. Barter leaves immediately for Philadelphia, but he has not yet been informed of his ultimate destination.

H. O. Davis persuaded Mr. Barter to enter the motion picture field and they have been associated for several years, lately with Triangle.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

At the Mena Film Company's studios production has been begun on a new episode of "By Super-Strategy." San Francisco and Big Bear Lake will supply the locations for this part of the picture. Amy Jerome and Virginia Chester are the featured players, under the direction of Howard Gaye.

The Southern California Producing Company, recently organized in Los Angeles, has taken over the Mutual-Strand Comedies featuring the popular little comedienne, Billie Rhodes, and is now actively at work on the first release of a new series. Studio space has been leased at the local studio and the new picture will be made under the personal direction of Scott Sidney, for three years a member of the Ince forces. A supporting company of competent players is being gathered. The Southern California company is making an active canvass for suitable stories and announces that highest prices will be paid for accepted scenarios containing real plot and real action without slapstick.

Marin Sais has been engaged by the Fox studios to play opposite Tom Mix in his new special feature productions. Miss Sais is well remembered from the Kalem Company and is a dare-devil horseback rider. She was born in Marin County, Cal., and was raised on a cattle ranch. Her courageous spirit of adventure carried her into stage work, at an early age. When she found opportunity to go into pictures, however, she immediately deserted the theater for the more outdoor and athletic life of the films.

A tragedy was narrowly averted last week at the studio of the E. & R. Jungle Film Company, in East Los Angeles, where wild animal scenes for the big production, "Tarzan of the Apes," being produced by the National Film Corporation of Hollywood, are being put on under the direction of E. A. Martin. The youthful Tarzan was working in a scene with a leopard, and the director, in order to make the scene more lively, discharged a revolver just outside the cage. The startled leopard leaped up the side of a log cabin erected within the enclosure, and straight out of the top of the cage, which, on account of its extreme height, had been left open. Those within the studio quickly sought places of safety, and it is stated that when the frightened animal jumped onto a gigantic prop tree which was being constructed by a force of men, the place simply rained carpenters. The leopard was finally cornered and was returned to its cage without further incident.

Mary Miles Minter and company, directed by Henry King, have returned to the American Film Company's studios at Santa Barbara, Cal., after spending ten days filming scenes in San Francisco Harbor. Despite the unsettled labor conditions in San Francisco, Director King was able to film his water scenes in an old sailing vessel which was purposely wrecked.

The pending strike made it impossible for Mr. King to secure experienced seamen, and the ship was handled by "land-lubbers," with the director appearing in a new role, that of a sea captain.

Director General J. P. McGowan, of the Signal Film Corporation, is hard at work on the tenth chapter of "The Lost Express," the new Signal-Mutual serial featuring Helen Holmes. The episode has been given the installment title of "A Fight for a Million." Aside from the thrills in this episode, the scenic shots are some of the most beautiful ever protographed, as many of the scenes were made in the beautiful Yosemite Valley.

German Plots and Pictures

Will Be Made in Twenty Episodes by Wharton Under the Supervision of Secret Service Chief W. J. Flynn.

THE true story of the machinations of Germany, the intrigues, the plots, the counter-plots and the devilish ingenuity by which the German government, through its American officials, spies and ploters, sought to put America into a position where it would be helpless under the mailed fist of kaiserdom is to be the subject of a twenty episode series of pictures to be made and marketed by the Wharton Releasing Corporation. The author of the new serial, which, it is predicted, is to be the most unusual multiple-episode picture ever put on the market, is William J. Flynn, Chief of the United States Secret Service—the one man in America who knows the whole story and the true story of every detail of Germany's plots against this country.

W. J. Flynn.

In his story Mr. Flynn has told it all, and that means that only about one hundredth part of the true story is known now. The rest is to come when the episodes of this stupendous serial flash on the screens of America.

The object of the serial is to aid the Government in every way possible in its fight against Germany, to show the reasons for Liberty Loans, for the the need of strong support for our country and for fighting men. That is the reason Chief Flynn has consented to put the revelations of the secret service into motion-picture form. "And when those things are shown," says the Chief, "it's a mighty poor American who will not jump into the winning of this war with every bit of strength that's in him. When it becomes generally known, through the power of the motion pictures, just what the Imperial German Government has done and tried to do every man, woman and child in this country ought to become one great unit of fighting strength, working night and day for the defeat of Germany."

"More than that, they will," echoes Theodore Wharton, under whose personal direction the new serial is being filmed. "I have seen a good many serials; I've made a number of them myself, including "Patria" and the "Exploits of Elaine." Those were imaginary, of course. Beside the truth of the German espionage and plotting system in this country, the cold, hard facts, they are nothing. For the work of Germany even exceeds imagination. Since I have seen the true story of it all, as depicted by Chief Flynn, I have been astounded. I thought I knew something about what Germany had done. Now I find that I knew hardly anything at all."

Naturally a thrilling love story is to form a part of the new serial, and even this will have a large part of its foundation, in fact. The names of the plotters? They will be used to a great extent, for in the records of the secret service are all the stories, all the data, all the accusations to support them. More than that, in many of the episodes many of the actual documents taken from spies and plotters will be used; even motion-picture explosions will be caused by the actual explosives used by the Germans in this country.

More than a half dozen stars are being used in the telling of the story, in which there is material for 322 full episodes, but which naturally is being trimmed to twenty or so exciting episodes, in which the events simply cram, one upon the other. To produce the serial at the maximum of its possibilities the studio facilities of Wharton, Inc., at Ithaca are being doubled in size while the work is going on.

OLCOTT WILL SHOW FIRST BIG SUBJECT.

The first presentation of Sidney Olcott's production of "The Belgian," a story written by Frederic Arnold Kummer, starring Walker Whiteside and Miss Valentine Grant, will take place at the Strand Thursday, October 25, at 10 a. m.

This is Mr. Olcott's first venture as an independent producer, but his name has been linked with important productions in the last few years, starting with the greatest religious picture that has ever been screened, "From the Manger to the Cross." It will be remembered Mr. Olcott journeyed to the Holy Land with his company and made all scenes in authentic localities. This was the first big feature produced by an American.

Mr. Olcott's connection with the Famous Players covered a long period, during which time he directed Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Marie Doro, Valentine Grant and others.

The cast of "The Belgian" includes Arda La Croix, Sally Crute, Giorgio Majeroni, Anders Randolf, Henri Leone and others.

The scenes are laid in Belgium, and are woven around two simple fisherfolk, through whose veins runs the red blood of patriots. The story was written from events that have occurred in Belgium prior to the outbreak of the war and extends through the period of invasion, exposing the mysteries of the German secret service and its intrigue. There is portrayed against these happenings an intensely human and tender love story

Mr. Olcott has organized his own business forces, and intends to make a series of big productions for the independent or state right market. His offices are at 1205 Candler Building.

GERRARD AGAIN WITH UNIVERSAL COMPANY.

The name of Douglas Gerrard was recently added to the Universal roster of directors. Gerrard, it will be recalled, was formerly associated with the Big U organization in the capacity of director, acting leading roles for some time before his promotion to a directorship.

Gerrard has a thorough knowledge of the stage, having been schooled under the direction of the late Sir Henry Irving in London, following which he had a long career in the legitimate in England and the United States. He has played opposite Mary Pickford, Ethel Barrymore and Anna Pavlowa, having filled an important role in "The Dumb Girl of Portici," which was directed by Lois Weber.

During his former affiliation with the Universal Company Gerrard filmed a number of artistic productions, one of the most notable being "Polly Put the Kettle On." He will begin work in a few days on a five-reel picture entitled "Madame Spy," the story of which was written by Lee Morrison. The leading characterizations will be in the hands of Miss Edith Roberts and Jack Mulhall, who will be supported by a cast composed of the best talent among the stock players at Universal City.

KELLERMANN PICTURE ON FOX PROGRAM.

William Fox announces that "A Daughter of the Gods" will be released to the motion picture theaters of America on a rental basis beginning Sunday, December 2. The Kellermann picture will be for general release through the Fox Film Corporation exchanges, and is now available for booking. It will be released in eight reels.

"Two-Bit Seats"

A Delightful Comedy by Essanay, in Which Taylor Holmes Appears at His Best, Supported by Marguerite Clayton, Sydney Ainsworth and John Cossar.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

I BELIEVE everyone who views "Two-Bit Seats" will agree with me that the adaptation of Gladys E. Johnson's story to screen service has been very successfully done by James Campbell, and that Director Lawrence Windom has also been happy in realizing its full possibilities. The action has an easy, playful flow, with nothing tempestuous about it yet always with sufficient charm and interest to delight and amuse.

The author of this American magazine story has shown striking originality in the selection of her subject, making the disappointment of a young man, a regular theatergoer, who fails to secure a seat anywhere in the house except in the gallery on one particular night, the groundwork for a very likable love story. The young man, Jimmy Mason, much against his inclination, goes to his perch in the gallery, and there to his surprise and pleasure finds that his next neighbor, to the right, is a lovely girl, Alice Carroll, the mere sight of whom consoles him for the loathing created by the mountain of gross femininity on his immediate left. This chance meeting brings acquaintanceship to the young people, which in time grows into love and finally results in marriage.

In the role of Jimmy Mason, in my opinion, Taylor Holmes excels any of his former efforts in moving pictures, not excepting his fine work in "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship." I have just used the words "former efforts" in referring to the work of Mr. Holmes in preceding photoplays, but I am somehow impressed that the use of "effort" in describing his impersonation of Jimmy Mason is inadmissible. His work before the camera in this instance impressed me as being positively without effort. According to the old saw "The height of art is to conceal art," and in the screen creation of Jimmy Mason, as closely as the human eye can register, Mr. Holmes has been effortless. In other words, he has so lost his own personality in that of the character assumed that we can see none other.

Just watch Mr. Holmes when he enters the gallery that first night and contrives, after great labor, to squeeze himself into his seat past the big, fat woman. Is not every action and look just what might have been expected from Jimmy Mason? Then the glance at his fair neighbor to the right and the smile, and the surprise on his face and the continued covert glances perfectly natural and respectful.

In strong contrast one cannot help noting the vacuous appearance of Miss Marguerite Clayton's face as she looks down on the stage at the dancers. This lady could have improved the situation to some advantage had she acted just as any normal girl would under the circumstances. There could at least have been cast a shy glance at her left hand neighbor when he was not looking. But this, in all fairness to Miss Clayton, is the only and trifling slip made in her winsome characterization of Alice Carroll.

Sydney Ainsworth and John Cossar are excellent types in the roles of Merton Styles and Mr. Faulkner.

The release date is Nov. 12 through the George Kleine System.

"Society's Driftwood"

Five-Reel Butterfly Production Features Grace Cunard and Joseph Girard in Story of Revenge.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IN THIS five-reel offering, written by Harvey Gates and produced by Louis Chaudet, the attention is carried along without cessation through the entire number. Clear-cut construction and a good running story combine to hold the interest. The chief motive concerns a girl whose brother was railroaded to prison by an unscrupulous judge and her efforts to obtain a revenge upon the latter. This leads up to a semi-tragic close, mitigated by thought of future happiness in store for the girl.

The theme of revenge has certain perils as well as advantages for the plot builder. It is almost certain to afford strong dramatic, or perhaps melodramatic, situations, such as occur at the close of this story, but, on the other hand, it is hard to keep the narrative very far above ground. The author in this case has managed to avoid the sordid and repellent situations which almost invariably try to creep into a plot of this type. He has brought out the strong features of the story without resorting to unpleasant methods.

Grace Cunard is cast as Lena Rogers, and does excellent work in this role. She and her brother are first introduced in a fortune teller's tent at a county fair. The opening scenes catch the interest immediately and provide a proper setting for the incidents which follow. The brother is falsely accused of stealing a pocketbook. His prison sentence follows, at the hands of an unjust judge, and the girl devotes several years to obtaining her revenge. She finally does this by allowing the judge to fall in love with her and getting information as to one of his crooked financial deals. She then caps the climax by marrying his younger brother. Her own brother in the meantime is released from prison and attempts to kill the judge.

Charles West and William Musgrave are cast as the two brothers. The general presentation and photography are very good.

"Arms and the Girl"

Paramount Presents Billie Burke in An Entertaining Story of the War—A Satisfying Portrayal.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

ARMS AND THE GIRL" has its theatrical moments and its romantic ones, but it is high comedy in the midst of adventure at the beginning of war, and presents an extremely interesting situation. Billie Burke, as Ruth Sherwood, descends from a Belgium train in order to send a telegram to her fiance in Paris and is left in a village about to be invaded by Germans. A complacent and self-satisfied American girl, she does not grasp the perils of her situation until her passport is stolen by an escaping Russian spy, who leaves her his own in exchange. Thomas Meighan, as Wilfred Ferrers, seeks to destroy this incriminating evidence just as the German troops enter the village, and is caught in the act. He is taken before a comedy German general, admirably done by

George H. Trimble, swiftly tried, and sent out to be shot as a spy. She saves him by declaring he is her fiance, and as her own identity is established by an officer who knew her by sight when he was a head waiter at a fashionable New York hotel, the general calls in the village burgomaster and has these two young people, strangers to each other, married on the spot. He assigns them to one bedroom, and there they are sent to spend their wedding night.

The entire story up to this point is replete with live incident, and presented with great care as to atmosphere, holding the audience tight and bringing out many spontaneous laughs from character contrast between the American young couple and the German officers. It is delightful comedy at every step to the bedroom, and even after in revelation of the mental state of bride and groom under the extremely trying circumstances in which they find themselves placed. Their escape is not slow, but it involves unnecessary changes of costume, and it is deprived of suspense, hence interest gradually subsides, especially when it is seen that the bride readily gives up her fiance, who arrives too late to rescue her and does not prove to be manly at that. She demurely decides that the man she has married, who shows courage and resource at every stage of the game, who is delicate in his relations with her as well, will do as a life companion, and all that follows is a descent from strong situation to unimportant explanation. In spite of this anti-climax the story holds up well, and it has so much that is bright, spirited and entertaining throughout that it will prove a desirable addition to any program.

"Queen of Spades"

New Pathe-Russian Art Film Production Features Strong Cast of Russian Performers in Unusual Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE tragic note is not so greatly accentuated in this number as in the previous offering made by the Russian Art Film Company. It is true that the leading figure, an unscrupulous young officer known as Herman Strogoff, meets with a bad end, yet the predominating features of the story are found in scenes from Russian court life and in the gambling halls of Versailles. The scenes mentioned lend an attractive color to the number, and the sincere, intense acting carry the interest along without cessation.

All of the players are Russian. I. I. Mosukin plays the sinister Strogoff, whose ignoble end is foreshadowed from the very beginning. Mme. Duvan appears as Countess Anna Fedotovna, whose part in the story is a prominent one. She is first introduced as an aged woman, the grandmother of Prince Tomsky. The latter relates at a men's club the manner in which she amassed a fortune through playing a secret system at cards. As this tale is being related, the life of Countess Fedotovna, sixty years previously, is pictured, and it is this part of the production that brings in the attractive court scenes. Mme. Orlova has also an important role, that of Lizaveta, the young companion of the Countess, to whom Strogoff professes love falsely.

The chief episodes are reached when Strogoff, after hearing of the card secret possessed by the Countess, determines to get possession of it, by fair means or foul. He secretes himself in the latter's home and appears suddenly before the Countess in the dead of night. The aged woman, who has been dreaming over her past, is greatly alarmed at Strogoff's appearance. But she refuses to give him the secret of the cards. He threatens her life and she dies of fright.

Strogoff then becomes the victim of phantoms. In one of these delirious moments the vision of the Countess comes to him and she tells him to play the three, seven and ace. Strogoff accepts this formula as genuine and stakes everything he has on the cards. The first two cards win, but on the ace he loses all his winnings. In his delirium he had mistaken the queen of spades for the ace, and in this the dead Countess has her revenge. Strogoff then loses his reason.

The presentation is novel and brings out the strong features of the story in consistent form. The weird interest of the story itself tends to overcome the rather depressing character of the latter scenes.

"The Son of His Father"

Paramount Presents Charles Ray in an Ince Production from the Story by Ridgwell Cullum.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE SON OF HIS FATHER" is the story of a millionaire railroad man's son, the latter a dissipated weakling called to account by his father. The son retorts that he could make a hundred thousand dollars in six months from a capital of five thousand if he laid aside good principles and followed his father's methods. The father gives him five thousand and tells him to prove it. The son does not apply principles of any kind. He trusts to luck as to where he shall start, spears a map with his penknife, and finally gets a hunch to go to the Yukon. On the way, while on a train which is passing through Montana, he trusts to luck again, gambles with a sharper and loses most of his roll, proving his lack of ability. He is thrown off the train because of a row with the gambler, and by mere chance a man gets off who picked up the money lying loose during the struggle on the train.

The son shows no ability whatever. The man who picked up his money hands it back and invites the millionaire's son to his house, where there is a pretty young daughter. There is a land boom depending on where the new railway station is located, and the "son of his father" has both the land boom and the girl soon in hand. He rescues the girl from the clutches of a villain who also wants the land boom, captures his own father later on, who comes most fortuitously to that very spot in Montana, and through having a father who controls the railroad, whose private code he happens to know, he is lucky enough to put through the land boom, make a hundred thousand and win the girl. Charles Ray does well with his limited opportunity, but it is very limited in characterization. The father approves, and all ends well.

"Life's Whirlpool"

Metro Presents a "Barrymore" Production, Featuring Ethel; Written and Directed by Lionel.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

ETHEL BARRYMORE'S personality and excellent acting contribute materially to the merits of "Life's Whirlpool," the five-part Metro-Rolfe release for October 8. Another Barrymore, Lionel, directed the production, and is also responsible for the story, which, while interesting, is melodramatic, and with no particular strength or novelty.

Left in straitened circumstances by the death of her father, Esther Carey marries John Martin, wealthy, strict and narrow-minded; who soon neglects her; and her unhappiness is heightened by the vindictiveness of Martin's sister. Her only pleasure is in her baby, and the occasional visits of a former sweetheart, Dr. Gray. After a stormy scene, Esther leaves, but returns later for her child; and at the same time a former tenant, half-crazed by Martin's treatment of him, enters the house and strangles him to death. Esther is accused, and is traced to a hut in the woods, where she has been inveigled by two men whom she asked to help her. She is rescued after shooting one of the men who attempted to attack her. A friend of the family obtains a confession from the murderer, Dr. Gray returns from France, and he and Esther renew their childhood affection.

The star's work as Esther is excellent; and Ricca Allen gives Scene from "Life's Whirlpool" (Metro).

a fine portrayal of the disagreeable sister. Allen Hale as Dr. Gray, Reginald Carrington as John Martin, Paul Everton as Hendrix, the family friend, and Frank Leigh as the murderer are satisfactory in their respective parts.

Lionel Barrymore's work is of good quality, although a few of the scenes, including the chase with the bloodhounds, are distinctly theatric. The number of death scenes introduced is more than usual; as, in addition to the death of Esther's father, the choking of Martin, and the shooting of one of the ruffians, the murderer's wife dies after they are dispossessed by Martin, and the murderer himself collapses.

"The Call of the East"

Hayakawa Does Fine Work in a Strong Story Staged in Surroundings of Japan.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

ONE of the foremost actors on the American stage remarked recently, when discussing his work in a forthcoming historical photodrama, that he was going to try to prove to the American picturegoing public that the best screen actor was not a Japanese. Which statement has importance, perhaps, as being revelatory of the opinion existing in certain well-informed quarters as to the ability of Sessue Hayakawa in acting before the camera. Surely for those who follow pictures there is fascination in the character interpretation of this stolid, impassive representative of the Land of the Rising

Scene from "The Call of the East" (Paramount).

Sun. One feels in watching Hayakawa through the course of a picture that he is seeing more than the revealed art of an individual actor; there is a sense of looking upon the near emotional manifestations of an unemotional race, of the potentialities indicated by the surface of deep rivers.

"The Call of the East," a Lasky subject released October 15, is a story that well may have been written "around" Hayakawa. The role of Arai Takada fits him like a glove. Beulah Marie Dix's script gives us a Japanese bent on revenge—a revenge fiendish in its cruelty, but the wrong has been great. It is the revenge of the Oriental, not of the Caucasian. It is a viewpoint that is strange to the man accustomed to swift action, who has little comprehension of a state of mind that like the cat with the mouse finds satisfaction in playing with its victim before destroying it. Nevertheless it is interesting.

Mr. Hayakawa,'s strength is in the interpretation of characters of his own race—in this field he is in a class by himself. As Takada he is at his best. We see the Japanese of high position, of education molded by contact with men of other races suddenly revert to the primitive. Here again through his affection for the sister of his victim he is swayed from his purpose of revenge, a regard in its depth equaling the ferocity of his hate.

Jack Holt is Alan Hepburn, the unconventional American who lures O'Mitsu from her home. Tsuru Aoki is O'Mitsu, in love with Hepburn. It is a strong pair. Margaret Loomis is Sheila Hepburn, the daughter of a Japanese mother and an American father who when a girl grown returns to Japan and feels the Call of the East when she mixes with the people of her mother.

George Melford has finely directed the production. He has given us convincing Japanese interiors and picturesque backgrounds. He has brought out the suspense and the drama of this tale of love and hate, a story that holds and moves.

"The Bottom of the Well"

Vitagraph Five-Part Blue Ribbon Feature, Overburdened by a Superfluity of Plot, Fails to Register a Success.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE mere piling up of material and following situation after situation is not the way to put the important element of interest into a photoplay. "The Bottom of the Well," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, written by Frederick Upham Adams, and directed by John Robertson, exemplifies this truth all through its five parts. A synopsis of the story includes about every incident that could have the remotest connection with the life of the hero and the doings of the other characters. One situation will suffice to show with what careless ease the author vaults over probability and arranges for the climax of his tale. Desiring that a millionaire in the play shall disappear and the hero be charged with his murder, the character is shown, early in the action, to pursue some mysterious pastime in a laboratory on his estate. Later on, when the building is destroyed by fire, a charred body is found that everyone supposes belonged to the millionaire. The man of money is not dead, however, and explains the mistake by relating that his early ambition to become a surgeon having been thwarted he had taken advantage of his millions to have dead bodies brought to his laboratory and spent his spare time in dissecting them. Most of the other incidents are on a par with this, and the entire play is an unskillful bit of scenario writing.

A lost child, a struggle between capital and labor, the killing of the young son of a workman by the automobile of his heartless employer, an unconvincing trial scene and the revelation that the bottom of the well in the picture is situated behind the bar of a saloon and that buckets of beer are hoisted from it into a workingmen's lodgeroom are among the points of the play. Scenes on the land are correctly staged. Some of the business on board a sailing craft would make an old salt grin.

Evart Overton, Ned Finley, Agnes Ayers and Herbert Pryor are the leading members of a hard working, competent cast.

"Thou Shalt Not Steal"

Mystery Story by Fox Begins in Mist and Is Then Cleared Up—Good Offering, Not a Wonderful One.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

AT the close of the first reel of "Thou Shalt Not Steal," a five-reel Fox picture, this reviewer would have been a shaky witness as to just what had happened. It was the director's plan to keep him from understanding; but, to take one instance, the director planned to have him know that the heroine stole a key. The reviewer saw her do it, but thought she had tied a knot in some sort of a telephone cord hanging over the edge of a desk. What happened after that was often in such a subdued light that just what was done was not clear. It was all done fast to heighten suspense, but to a certain extent both interest and suspense were sacrificed for the sake of an involved complication to be cleared up later. One who has watched it for the first reel and wondered whether his mind has grown stupid or the director is at fault finds directly that the mystery begins to unravel and the interest becomes actual and not merely promissory as in the beginning. There are many clever touches in the working out.

The picture opens on a queer family in New York. Everyone but the heroine (Virginia Pearson) is living under camouflage, the father, the mother (Matilda Brumdaye), the nephew, so called (Martin Faust), and even the maid (Claire Whitney). The rich man has a secretary (Robert Elliott), and he, too, is not wholly clear. The girl half loves him. A much camouflaged English load (John Goldsworthy) enters and plots to make the girl marry him. He has a big roll of money, and gets the father to put it in the safe. The old man needs the money for Wall street. The so called nephew needs money, and has some sort of secret on the mother—this is the plot's weak thread. The lord wants to steal the wallet to make the old man give him a second roll. The girl tries to steal it to keep the lord from stealing it. The real owner of the roll is present as a camouflaged doctor, and he gets it from the girl. We don't see how it came about till the end. The maid had been the doctor's sweetheart. He is in disguise, and she thinks he was murdered two years before. The lord did that job poorly, but got the roll from him. The police accuse everybody. The poor girl even consents to marry the lord. She is so wrapped up in the toils till the end of the story makes all clear, so she can marry the secretary.

"Cleopatra"

Ten-Part Film Spectacle Produced by William Fox with Theda Bara as "The Serpent of the Nile," a Massive and Artistic Moving Picture Attraction.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE have been many mimic Cleopatras since the birth of the drama but never before has a feigned "Serpent of the Nile" been given such a massive and artistic setting as the one furnished by William Fox for the ten-part production in which Theda Bara acts the Egyptian vampire. The scope of the story embraces many of the historical facts used by Shakespeare in writing both "Julius Caesar" and "Antony and Cleopatra," and it is evident that Adrian Johnson, the author of the scenario, has gone to the English poet for most of his incidents, rather than to Plutarch. The author has furnished some original material, however, and has also borrowed a character and a striking scene from Sardou's drama on the same subject. Several of the subtitles are from Shakespeare.

The result of this literary patchwork is a lucid and fairly authentic account of the love affair between Cleopatra and Julius Caesar, and the Egyptian queen's overmastering passion for Mark Antony. The scenes shift from Alexandria to Imperial Rome, and several historical moments that have been immortalized by the brush of some famous artist, are reproduced with impressive fidelity. The most important of these are the murder of Julius Caesar in The Capitol, the first meeting between Cleopatra and Caesar, and the triumphant return of the enchantress in her barge with Antony a willing captive.

Opening with the lady's conquest of Caesar and his return to Rome, the action busies itself with a fictitious love affair between Cleopatra and a gentleman of the house of Pharaoh, while fate is disposing of Julius and setting the stage for the entry of Mark Antony into the life of the Egyptian. The meeting between the two, the sudden and violent love engendered in both, Antony's return to Rome, his marriage with Octavia, the weary waiting of Cleopatra, the reuniting of the lovers, the interference of Octavius Caesar in behalf of his sister, the battle against the forces of Antony and Cleopatra by those belonging to Octavius, the sea fight at Actium and the deaths of the Egyptian queen and her Roman, all these historical situations are thrown on the screen with an accuracy that necessitated the employing of one of the largest forces of actors, extra people and other essential workers ever used in a photo-spectacle, and the building of a correspondingly large number of edifices of ancient Rome and Egypt, with streets, waterways and interiors that truthfully reflect the period.

J. Gordon Edwards, who directed the production, has held his work well in hand and brought out a series of rapidly shifting pictures that tell the story with a force in keeping with the subject and the ambitious attempt to make it live on the screen. Toward the end the action would be strengthened by condensing it, the movement up to this point having been firm and engrossing.

The cast is exceptionally able. Theda Bara as Cleopatra is always satisfactory to the eye, save that a certain grade of spectators will criticise unfavorably the very frank display of her physical charms and some of the seductive wiles she uses to ensnare her lovers. Technically her acting commands respect without ever reaching any great tragic outburst, and she is best in the lighter scenes of the part. Her dressing of the Egyptian is remarkable for the variety and beauty of the garments employed.

A gratifying feature appertaining to the male members of the cast is their ability to wear the costume demanded by the time. This is notably so in the case of Fritz Leiber, who plays Julius Caesar, and of Thurston Hall, the Antony; of Herschel Mayall, the Ventidus, and of Henri De Vries, the Octavius Caesar. All four are to be credited with impersonations of the first rank. Albert Roscoe, Dorothy Drake, Dell Duncan, Genevieve Blinn, Hector V. Sarno and Art Acord are useful members of the cast. The cameramen were Rail Schellinger and John W. Boyle.

"The Co-respondent"

Elaine Hammerstein in Five-Part Jewel Production of Good Quality—Directed by Ralph W. Ince.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

JUSTICE and truth are occasionally triumphant in this world, after all: The hero of "The Co-respondent," a five-part Jewel production, is a newspaper editor and the heroine is a newspaperwoman. The scenario was made from a stage play by Alice Seal Pollock and Rita Weiman, and the production was directed by Ralph Ince. The screen drama affords a good quality of entertainment. Its story may have no foundation in fact, but it interests and moves along at a fairly speedy clip. The means by which Anna Gray, the heroine, is named as the co-respondent in a divorce case is cleverly conceived, and her willingness to risk her reputation rather than permit the man she loves to be ruined wins the sympathy of every spectator. The clash in the story is pronounced, and the villain is pummeled at the finish in fine style and then led into the presence of the newspaperwoman and forced to offer her an abject apology. The atmosphere of a newspaper office is sufficiently well sustained for all practical purposes, and the rest of the production is up to standard.

Elaine Hammerstein is the Anna Gray of the cast. She has an easy, natural method of acting and possesses youth and attractiveness. It is never difficult to believe in a situation of which she is the central figure. Wilfred Lucas acts the editor and makes even the heroics in the part seem natural. George Anderson gives the villain, Howard Van Kreel, the proper amount of objectionable attributes, and Edna Hunter, Winifred Harris, Richard Neill, Charles Smith, Josephine Morse, Hattie Hoene and Jennie Mayo supply the needful acting ability to portray the remaining characters.

"Who Is 'Number One'?"

Episodes Three and Four Present Some Startling Features and Maintain the Interest of the Opening Chapters.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE new Paramount serial in its third and fourth chapters follows closely in interesting quality the opening episodes, and introduces some surprises, including scenes in a submarine and on the floor of the ocean, presumably. "The Sea Crawler" is the title of episode No. 3, in which, after the theft of Graham Hale's new submarine of this name, his enemies use it to carry them to the bottom of the ocean to where a treasure ship lies. In pursuit of them, and for the purpose of gaining possession of the gold aboard the old vessel, Hale and his companions, including his ward, Aimee Villon, also descend to the ocean's floor. Here a battle between the men, arrayed in diving equipment, takes place, and Tommy, Hale's son, is imprisoned in the treasure ship, which is dynamited by the enemy party.

It transpires, however, as per the fourth episode, "A Marine Miracle," that Tommy has escaped from the ship before the dynamiting occurs, and he is rescued by his father's party as he clings to some floating driftwood. In this episode, after the rescue of Tommy, the submarine is sunk by a torpedo from the "Sea Crawler," and the Hale party jump into the sea. Aimee, taken aboard by the enemy, is imprisoned in an old warehouse, and the close of the episode leaves us wondering whether or not a message written on a piece of cloth and thrown from the window finds its mark.

Triangle Five-Part Releases

"The Man Hater," Excellent Domestic Comedy Featuring Winifred Allen, and "The Stainless Barrier," Southern Drama Starring Irene Hunt.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The Man Hater."

PUBLISHED originally in the "Saturday Evening Post," Mary Brecht Pulver's story, "The Man Hater," has been brought out by Triangle as a five-part comedy, with Winifred Allen as Phemie Sanders. The first half of the picture is somber and filled with the drab realities of life. A young girl who has known only poverty and the misery brought into her home by a whiskey soaked father has learned to hate the entire male sex. She is loved by Joe Stull, the village blacksmith, but will have nothing to do with him until the death of her mother throws the care of the family upon her shoulders. As soon as the funeral is over, Phemie marches across to the blacksmith shop and informes Joe that she will marry him that very day if he will take her without any question of love in the bargain and let her little sister Anna live with them, a neighbor having agreed to look after the three other children. This part of the story is told with much force and truth to life.

With the opening of the latter half of "The Man Hater" it is at once seen that Phemie has made an excellent bargain materially for herself and Anna. Joe is a steady, well-to-do, open hearted chap, and loves her devotedly. Finding that she will not respond to his feelings for her, he conceives the idea of trying to arouse her jealously. To that end he invents a rival and writes himself letters from a mythical Lucy. The way things turn out is easily foreseen. A real Lucy, in the person of an old sweetheart of his, comes back to town a widow, and Phemie finds that if there can be no love without jealousy there can also be no jealousy without love.

Most spectators will enjoy the story immensely. It has the touches of character and the nice sense of humor that give it real value, and it is capitally acted and produced. Winifred Allen presents a near-to-nature impersonation of Phemie, and makes her a distinct type. Jack Meredith is wholesome and human as Joe, and realistic portrayals of Phemie's father and mother are the result of the acting of Harry Neville and Jessie Shirley. Anna Lehr and two small boys proved themselves clever children, but the most delightful member of the cast is a little toddler just old enough to walk. As the circus poster puts it: This wonderful child actor must be seen to be appreciated. The picture was directed by Albert Parker, assisted by Thomas F. Tracey, and was supervised by Allan Dawn.

"The Stainless Barrier."

Louis Schneider is the author of "The Stainless Barrier," a five-part southern drama featuring Irene Hunt. Its greatest distinction is that it contains the most contemptible piece of humanity ever put into a photoplay. His name is Richard Shelton, and he is supposed to have been born south of the Mason and Dixon line. Shelton comes north, gets mixed up with a party of swindlers, spends his sister's scanty earnings on loose women, helps the swindlers to rob the people in his home town, murders the head of the gang, and then stands up in open court and, to save his worthless neck, swears that the crook had seduced his sister, the unsullied but devoted girl having agreed to swear to the same lie. The jury acquits him without a moment's delay, and he puts on the airs of a hero until his sister's sweetheart chokes the truth out of him and drives him out of town. The least that can be said about this situation is that it is exceedingly irritating and robs the story of any sympathetic qualities it originally possesses.

The direction of the picture is well handled by Thos. Heffron, and all the parts are adequately played. Irene Hunt, Jack Livingston, Rowland Lee, Thomas Guise, T. Barney Sherry, and H. A. Barrons have the leading roles.

"The Sea Master"

William Russell Featured as Virile Hero in Stirring Tale of the Sea—Five-Part American-Mutual Release.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WE have learned by experience that William Russell can entertain us as the hero of a good fight as well if not better than any actor on the screen owing to his athletic physique and evident mastery of muscular forces. In "The Sea Master," a five-part American production, he has ample opportunity to repeat and excel former efforts in this direction. His work throughout is good, and the picture is one of stirring quality suitable for presentation before adult audiences. In places there is a tendency in the development of the story to be obvious, and the director has fallen down once or twice in the choice of locations, such as landing the hero from a storm-tossed sea on a calm beach. These are but trifling matters, however, in comparison with the rousing quality of the production.

Scene from "The Sea Master" (Mutual).

Francelia Billington plays the feminine lead portraying the role of the girl whose life has been without adventure or love romance with less success than has attended some of her former efforts. Joe King, George Ahern, and Clarence Burton do good work in the rougher element of the play, while George Fisher as pastor of the mission has been made to portray the clergyman type in a most colorless and uninteresting fashion.

In the story Emily Gordon, responding to a call from a dying school chum who has chosen the primrose path and has paid the bitter cost, comes to the saloon and dance hall where the girl's life is ebbing away. The brutal saloon keeper, after the death of his former victim, tries to detain Emily, but is deterred from so doing by Bull (William Russell), master of a sailing vessel recently anchored in the harbor. Single handed he fights a path through the menacing mass of humanity in the saloon, and brings the girl and the gentle pastor to his ship for protection from their pursuers. Aboard the ship he proposes marriage to the girl after the manner of the cave man, giving her no alternative but to obey him. Various complications arise before they again reach land, some of which are interesting. The picture will be liked by adults, but should not be exhibited before an audience of children.

"Christie Comedies"

Christie Film Company to Release Half a Dozen New Subjects, All of Pleasing Farcical Type.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

AL. E. CHRISTIE has produced six new comedy subjects under his own personal direction, all of which are uniformly pleasing in certain important respects. They are all clean-cut and free from questionable situations, the casts are appealing, the construction good, and the settings in keeping with the best type of polite comedy. The plots vary, some of them being familiar ideas dressed up in new form, and others containing considerable originality. In all of them the humor is of the best, and will appeal to all classes of observers.

The new subjects are called "Love and Locksmiths," "Hearts and Clubs," "Local Color," "Almost a Bigamist," "More Haste Less Speed," and "Betty's Big Idea." The casts are in each instance recruited from the well known ranks of the Christie players, and include Betty Compson, Jay Belasco, Harry Rattenberry, Gene Corey, Margaret Gibson, George French, Ethel Lynn, James Harrison, Eddie Gribbon, Harry Hamm, Jean Hathaway, Lucille Pletz and others.

For freshness of plot and spontaneous humor, "More Haste

Love, Speed," "Almost a Bigamist," and "Local Color" are perhaps the most conspicuous. The first number is a domestic comedy in which a pair of newlyweds pack up for their vacation so quickly that they forget the baby. The resulting humor is natural and unforced. In "Local Color" a young actress, on vacation, is mistaken for a country girl by a young author in search of fiction material. He makes love to her for the purpose of getting "copy," and she lures him into a false marriage in an amusing way. "Almost a Bigamist" is a laughable farce in which a young man, secretly married, receives a visit from his parents. They bring along the girl they had intended him to marry, and his friend Harry gallantly comes to the rescue by falling in love with her. The other subjects are not quite so new in plot, but are equally good in presentation.

"The Maid of Belgium"

Alice Brady Featured in Five-Part Peerless Photoplay Original in Theme and of Decided Interest—Released by World.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

CONTRARY to expectations the Peerless five part photoplay, "The Maid of Belgium," written by Adrian Gill-Spear, touches but slightly on the present war. Most of the scenes pass in this country, and the plot is a story of mother love told with originality and possessing decided interest. The heroine is a young Belgium girl who is married to an officer just as the Germans enter the country. Her home is attacked, and her family murdered. Crazed by the horrors she has experienced, she is found on the highway by a wealthy American and his wife who are traveling to the sea coast in their automobile. The girl, whose name is Adoree, is clasping a battered old doll in her arms. The Americans bring her to the United States, and, not knowing that she has been married, adopt her. Adoree has no recollection of the past, and when the wife of the American discovers that the girl is about to become a mother she hits upon a plan to shield her good name and to also gratify her husband's desire for an heir.

The head of the house having been called to South America for a stay of several months, his wife informs him of her hopes, and when he returns she is found in bed with a fine baby boy beside her. Poor Adoree, the real mother of the child, has been prevailed upon to agree to the plan, and tries to content herself by fondling her old doll. She rebels at last, however, steals her baby, and takes him to a deserted island. A shock restores her reason, and the story ends by her husband and child coming back to her.

All the details of production have been looked after with close attention, and in the character of Adoree, the Belgian heroine, Alice Brady does the best work of her moving picture career. She makes a pathetic figure of the unfortunate young wife, and indicates her aberration of mind without detracting from her grace and comeliness. Her supporting company is a well chosen one.

"The Desire of the Moth"

Five-Part Bluebird Western Melodrama, Starring Ruth Clifford, Is Filled with Hard Riding, Quick Shooting and Rough-and-Tumble Romance.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

MELODRAMA of the real western flavor is to be found in "The Desire of the Moth," a Bluebird production written by Eugene M. Rhodes and directed by Rupert Julian, with Ruth Clifford starred and Monroe Salisbury her leading support. The scenario is the work of Elliott J. Clawson. Hard riding, quick shooting and rough and tumble romance are the features of the story that stand out most prominently. Director Julian has understood how to take advantage of his subject, and he also contributes a humorous and well rounded impersonation of a Kentuckian named John Wesley Pringle, who arrives on the scene a bit late, but manages to center the interest pretty much on himself for the rest of the time.

The object of the moth's desire—in other words, the young man with whom the heroine is in love—is a "cattle rustler," branded at birth with the name of Christopher Foy. Having run off some yearlings belonging to the father of the girl, Foy is wounded in a fight with the sheriff's posse, and takes refuge in the house of the man he has robbed. Stella Vorhis, the lady in the case, befriends him, and finds the way to his better nature. Foy starts to go honest, but gets into trouble with a tough character and is accused of murdering him. He is in a fair way to be strung up for the deed. But John Wesley Pringle, who is also in love with Stella, comes to his rival's rescue and saves him by pretending to have betrayed him.

The acting is A-1 all along the line. Ruth Clifford as Stella is a heroine worth fighting for, and Monroe Salisbury makes Foy a picturesque dare-devil. W. H. Bainbridge, Milton Brown, and Al Sears are other important members of the cast.

"The Unforeseen"

The First of the Olive Tell Productions Thoroughly Satisfactory and Wholesome in Quality—Appears on Mutual Program.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE play on which the six-part Empire production, "The Unforeseen," is based was written by Robert Marshall and will be remembered by many as one of the Charles Frohman successes. John O'Brien has directed the picture in an artistic and finished fashion, reaching the heart of things in a manner which makes a strong appeal. Olive Tell, charming in personality and easy and natural in her work, plays effectively the role of the eldest daughter of a wealthy senator, lending to the part dignity and poise. Others of the cast are Fuller Mellish, David Powell, and Warburton Gamble.

Scene from "The Unforeseen" (Mutual).

The story of the play allows the leading feminine character to elope with a lover who her father has previously decided is unsuited to be her husband. On the morning on which she arrives in New York to marry her lover he takes her to his apartment previous to visiting the minister, and while they are looking from one of the balconies at a Fifth avenue parade of soldiers, a friend of her lover's, accompanied by a friend of his, happens in. To avoid scandal he introduces the girl as his wife, and a few hours afterward, discovering that he is financially ruined, he refuses to shoulder the responsibility of supporting a wife. The girl goes home, and shortly afterward in dispair the man shoots himself.

At this point of the story a blind novelist comes into the girl's life, and in trying to make his life possible she falls in love with him and marries him. The novelist happens to be one of the men who has seen her in the apartment of her former lover, and upon regaining his sight, which is accomplished by the aid of a skillful specialist, he discovers to his great unhappiness that his wife is identical with this woman. A letter from the dead man to his friend, and which has followed him around the world, throws the proper light on the circumstance, and so all goes well. An interesting and well-made picture.

Uncle Sam "Over There"

"Under the Stars and Stripes in France" First Complete Record of Our Boys Abroad.

UNDER the title of "Under the Stars and Stripes in France," Pathe has just released a two-reel picture of the greatest timeliness and interest. As its name implies, it shows the soldiers of Uncle Sam now on French soil, the vanguard of the vast army that will soon be "over there." Though a number of scenes of our soldiers in France have already been shown in the Hearst-Pathe News, they were of necessity short and disconnected. In this picture is given only new material, just arrived in this country, and taken under the auspices of the Cinematographic Division of the French Army. The result is a picture which will interest every person in the country and make clear to them the conditions under which our soldiers are now living, the various methods that are being used to make them fully fit to meet the world enemy and the tremendous work which has already been accomplished.

The picture is full of human interest. Our soldiers are to be seen affiliating with the French inhabitants of the towns and villages in which they are billeted. After viewing some of the scenes it may be expected that many men will hasten to enlist, provided they receive assurance of being speedily sent to France, for the cameraman secured evidences of forthcoming alliances that certainly are not of a political nature. Various fair maids of France are shown teaching Uncle Sam's boys how to speak French. Evidence is given that the relations existing between the French of all ages and the Americans is of the most cordial nature.

Artillery, small arms, rifle and bomb throwing practice are all shown. The conditions under which the troops are being hardened for the coming combat with the enemy are as close to actuality as is possible. We see the boys digging long lines of trenches and putting in the bomb-proofs, all as carefully as though the lives of all depended upon the way in which they are constructed. We see them in various maneuvers in the fields; we see them on their "hikes"; we see them in their camps apparently very much at home and happy; and it is quite evident that they are quartered in by no means what is the least attractive part of France, for the surroundings are beautiful in every instance.

A most interesting portion of the picture is that showing a grand review of the Americans. It was held on a large plain and it is with surprise and gratification that we note that Uncle Sam has many thousands of men already across the water. The titles, of course, do not tell us the number, but as far as the eye can reach are stalwart, sunburned men, marching in company formation under the Stars and Stripes. Cavalry, artillery, infantry, signal corps, hospital units and engineers all defile before the camera. No American but will feel a thrill of pride as he sees the very evident fitness of his fellow countrymen and their numbers.

As a booking proposition, "Under the Stars and Stripes in France" is of the very best. The great business of the country today is war. From nearly every home men are being called into service in the army or navy by means of the selective service. Hundreds of thousands of others have volunteered. It is very probable that most of these men will before long be sent to France if they have not already gone. In consequence, the life of our boys in France is a subject of universal interest. It goes without saying that the exhibitor who books "Under the Stars and Stripes in France" and advertises it the way it deserves should do an exceptional business. It is the first complete and authentic record of the American army in France.

Paramount Serial Campaign Under Way.

Paramount has launched its big advertising campaign on "Who is 'Number One'?" the fifteen episode serial starring Kathleen Clifford. In more than 150 cities twenty-four sheets by Frederic Dorr Steele, the illustrator of the Sherlock Holmes stores, are now on the stands. The story by Anna Katharine Green, famous mystery writer, will begin on Sunday, October 28—the day before release date—in leading newspapers in fifty cities. Paramount's newspaper advertising begins before the story starts and continues throughout the run of the picture.

Prints of "Who is 'Number One'?" are now in all Paramount exchanges, and all Paramount salesmen are keeping their promise to exhibitors to show the picture and to demonstrate to them the pulling power of the vast advertising campaign behind "Who is "Number One'?"

Pathe to Show "France in Arms"

Five-Part Subject Gives in Detail the Work of Frenchmen Carrying on the War.

ON November 11, Pathe will release a five-reel special, "France in Arms," taken by the cinematographic section of the French army, and, as its name indicates, illustrates every side of the gigantic effort which France has made to thrust back the German invader from her soil. We see the young men who have been called to the colors going through the course of training devised to render them fit to take their places on the battlefield. Then come scenes showing how France not only has mobilized her man power, but her industries, in order to enable her to supply her armies with food, clothing, ammunition, small arms and artillery. From the manufacture of the big guns we are taken to the front where we see guns of every size, from the smallest of the trench mortars and machine guns to the giants mounted on railway carriages, which hurl shells weighing over a ton. After each shot a scene is inserted showing the character of the explosion and its effect.

In connection with these scenes are shown others which graphically illustrate the great advance made in aeroplane construction. The increase in size is remarkable. The 1914 machines placed alongside of the latest models look like baby carriages besides new model locomotives.

In the areoplane section are given some thrilling views. The cameraman was taken aboard one of the big flyers of a French attacking squadron and filmed every stage of a battle above the clouds with a German squadron.

Another series of big "punch" scenes is given in an attack by the French at sunrise. We are shown the poilus scrambling from the relative security of the trench out into the open, where they are at once exposed to the withering fire of the Germans whose trenches are in plain view not far away. Men begin to fall at once, but there is no faltering. With bayonets set the poilus go forward. We see them reach the German trench and plunge their bayonets at the foe beneath. They jump in and soon the strings of German prisoners come forth, proof that the Frenchmen did their work well and the trench has been captured.

Emmy Wehlen Completes "The Outsider."

Emmy Wehlen has completed work on her forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "The Outsider," a six-act production adapted by Charles A. Taylor from the novel, "Nobody," by the popular author, Louis Joseph Vance. "The Outsider" provides Miss Wehlen with a delightful role suited to her charming personality, and is filled with color and action. It is presented by B. A. Rolfe. William C. Dowlan has directed "The Outsider." This will be his second offering on the Metro program, the first being "Somewhere in America."

In the new production, which will have an early release, Miss Wehlen plays Sally Manvers, a shop-girl who is tired of life as she and her two poverty-stricken girl friends have to live it. Chance takes her into a house full of beautiful and expensive things. Its occupants are away for the summer. The forlorn girl treats herself to the luxury of a bath in the marble bath-room, puts on some of the handsome clothes she finds in a wardrobe, and then things begin to happen with power and rapidity, and keep on happening right through the picture.

Three leading men support Miss Wehlen in "The Outsider." These are Herbert Heyes, Harry Benham and Jules Raucourt. Mr. Heyes plays the Western millionaire, one of "nature's noblemen," and the two other men have the parts of society adventurers. Florence Short has the role of an up-to-the-minute adventuress. Ilean Hume, a Metro favorite, plays a girl artist, and Virginia Palmer has the sympathetic role of Mrs. Gosnold, a society leader. The other parts are in capable hands. Mr. Dowlan has been assisted in the direction of the picture by Benjamin S. Kutler, who can direct as well as write scenarios.

Pictorial Record of "Rainbow Division."

Universal has ready for immediate release one of the most unique news specialties that has been put on the market in some time. This is nothing less than a pictorial record of the personalities included in the famous "Rainbow Division" at Camp Mills, Mineola, Long Island.

The entire personnel of the various regiments representing fourteen states has been pictured in a panorama of intimate close-ups, views, and many of the interesting human incidents of life as it is being lived in the dog-tents and on the drilling grounds have been introduced with telling effect.

These pictures will be released in fourteen reels, each state represented being covered separately so that the families of the men appearing in the films will be enabled to pick out their boys readily. Every face shown is said to be so clear-cut that identifications will be immediate. Stress is also being laid upon the fact that these pictures are not hastily gathered panoramas, but real human documents affording the nearest thing to a personal interview with the huge army of the East that could be imagined.

The series will be released as special numbers of Universal Current Events bearing the general title "Our Boys."

ALL THAT TRIANGLE STUFF AS SIZED UP BY THE MEAL TICKET (Essanay).—A George Ade fable, featuring Rod La Roque and Marguerite Clayton, involving a "boob" who makes good, and is grabbed up by his landlady's daughter. She falls for the long-haired artistic faker, and is disillusioned by hubby, who gets him into business and persuades him to attire himself like a real man. A good number.

THE FABLE OF THE FILM-FED FAMILY (Essanay).—An interesting George Ade fable, showing how each of the members of the "best family" in town, fell for moving pictures. The characters are well drawn and the action realistic; however, considerable use is made of "Broncho Billy" paper, there being several closeups. The scenes of the audience are especially good.

WHOSE HOSIERY? (Sparkle).—An amusing farce comedy based on the old idea of the customer who gets the wrong package. Brown receives hosiery instead of gloves, gives them to the right girl who is to bring him the gloves the next evening. His wife gets wise, raises a row in the restaurant, but all ends satisfactorily when the girl produces the gloves.

THE TRIPLE CROSS (Jaxon).—Pokes and Jabs are detectives. Both fall in love with the same girl, Pokes' suit is favored and Jabs, in order to prevent the wedding, masquerades as his wife, appearing on the scene with a number of children. An ordinary number, involving considerable slapstick work and a band of ruffians.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE DESIRE OF THE MOTH, October 22.—Written by Eugene M. Rhodes, produced by Rupert Julian and featuring Ruth Clifford, this five-part western drama is full of action and atmosphere. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Butterfly Pictures.

SOCIETY'S DRIFTWOOD, October 22.—A five-reel feature, written by Harvey Gates and produced by Louis Chaudet. Grace Cunard and Joseph Girard play the leading roles. The story concerns a girl who spends several years working to revenge herself upon a judge who railroaded her brother to prison on a false charge. The story is well constructed and presented with considerable dramatic strength. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Katherine F. Carter.

THE HIGH COST OF HURRY (Carter), October—A two-part "safety-first" film of merit, produced by Katherine F. Carter of 220 West 42d street, New York City. The film in story form draws attention to the various ways in which hurry proves disastrous to the human race, showing in a realistic manner various kinds of accidents which are a daily occurrence due to carelessness and hurry. A full review will be found elsewhere.

Christie Film Company.

LOCAL COLOR, October 1.—A very amusing comedy subject, featuring Margaret Gibson, James Harrison, Ethel Lynn and Eddie Gribbon. An actress on her vacation is mistaken for a country girl by a young author, who makes love to her in order to get material for his story. She learns of his scheme and retaliates by forcing him into a fake wedding. This is an enjoyable little plot, handled in a convincing way, and makes a good subject.

LOVE AND LOCKSMITHS, October 1.—A one-reel comedy, by Robert F. McGowan, featuring Betty Compson, Jay Belasco and others. The plot is a familiar one, in which a young man gains entrance to a girls' school by impersonating a new professor. He is discovered making love to the girl and complications follow. The cast is an agreeable one and the presentation attractive. It is enjoyable in spite of the fact that the theme has been used before.

Fox Film Corporation.

THOU SHALT NOT STEAL, October 14.—A five-reel picture of mystery that can be recommended as acceptable. It never becomes a truly gripping picture because of the experimental form of plot used. Nothing is sufficiently understood to be entirely absorbing till near the close and suspense has but a little way to carry when that happens. Virginia Pearson plays the leading female role. There is much cleverness in the way the picture is handled and much excellent acting. For a longer notice see elsewhere in this issue.

ALADDIN AND THE WONDERFUL LAMP (Fox Standard Picture).—Eight-part screen version of the old fairy tale is charmingly acted by the Fox Kiddies. A full review was printed on page 247 of the issue of October 13.

CLEOPATRA (Fox Standard Picture).—The William Fox production of "Cleopatra," with Theda Bara as the Egyptian Queen, is a sumptuous affair in ten parts. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph.

THE BOTTOM OF THE WELL (Vitagraph), October 22.—Production and acting of this five-part story are all right, but the story is involved and leads nowhere. It is the work of Frederick Upham Adams. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

BOBBY OF THE HOME DEFENDERS (Vitagraph).—In this one-reeler Bobby Connelly gets the better of some German agents who try to blow up a munition factory. It will please Bobby's following.

THE FIGHTING TRAIL (Vitagraph).—The last four installments of this spirited serial, in which William Duncan and Carol Holloway play the leading parts, kept up the interest of the story and confirm the excellent impression it has made from the start.

BOBBY'S FAIRY (Vitagraph).—A pretty story of how Bobby adopts a poor little girl, thinking that she is a fairy. A regulation Bobby Connelly release.

TOUGH LUCK AND FAIR LIZZIES (Vitagraph).—Lawrence Semon and his agile band of acrobats put speed and comic punch into this one-part comedy.

Jewel Productions, Inc.

THE CO-RESPONDENT (Universal).—Well made and interesting five-part story adapted from a stage play. Elaine Hammerstein and an excellent cast do it ample justice. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

George Kleine System.

THE APPLE-TREE GIRL (Edison Perfection Picture), October 1.—Shirley Mason is the star of this worth-while five-part comedy, which was photographed in New England, a novelty in itself. It was given a longer review on page 251 of the issue of October 13.

TWO BIT SEATS (Essanay), November 12.—A most pleasing comedy in which Taylor Holmes plays the leading role very happily. In the strong support are Marguerite Clayton, Sydney Ainsworth and John Cossar. See detailed review on another page, this issue.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

SUSIE SLIPS ONE OVER (Black Diamond), October 7.—A slap-stick number of no great merit. The comedy centers about a rival love affair in which the usual series of slap-stick events takes place.

ARMS AND THE GIRL (Famous Players), October 8.—A comedy of war adventure and romance with strong situations and plenty of entertainment. Billy Burke in the leading role and at her best.

THE CALL OF THE EAST (Lasky), October 15.—Sessue Hayakawa does sterling work in this strong story of Japan. He is finely supported by Tsuru Aoki, Jack Holt and Margaret Loomis. This subject is reviewed on another page.

THE SON OF HIS FATHER (Ince), October 22.—The story of a son who is expected to emulate his father, and does so through mere luck, with Charles Ray in the lead.

HOME DEFENSE (Klever), Oct. 22.—A Victor Moore comedy, in which the husbands of a certain circle of townspeople are discovered by their wives to be spending their evenings playing poker. To overcome the situation and enable them to continue their evening entertainment they lead their wives to believe that they have formed a home defense league and are spending their evenings in training to overcome the enemy. Of course their sin is eventually discovered for the second time, and the husbands are threatened with being forced to use their doorsteps for beds.

WHO IS NUMBER ONE?—The first two episodes of Paramount's first serial with Kathleen Clifford starring in pictures for the first time. The story of the serial was written by Anna Katherine Green, and is of that thrilling type of melodrama loved by most audiences. The serial is one of the best of its kind and has been reviewed at length elsewhere.

WHO IS NUMBER ONE?—Episodes Three and Four of this serial are entitled "The Sea Crawler" and "A Marine Miracle." The same interesting quality marks these two episodes as was noticeable in the opening chapters. A full review of these will be found elsewhere.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUSE (Pathe-International), October 21.—An excellent educational half reel, illustrating the Montessori method of teaching youngsters by playthings that are usually regarded as hard lessons. This is a clear exposition of an interesting system of child discipline.

BOARDER BUSTERS (Rolin-Pathe), October 21.—During the absence of Mrs. Boggs, the father and two children decide to take in boarders. Mrs. Boggs returns unexpectedly and demands explanations. The action is of a knockabout sort and becomes quite amusing at times. This is fairly strong.

THE DOUBLE DISGUISE (Pathe), October 21.—Episode No. 16 of "The Fatal Ring." Pearl is tied in a tree with a rope around her neck in this instalment. After her rescue by Tom she visits the rooms of the Priestess, where she gains possession of the diamond. She then impersonates the Priestess, but Carslake discovers her and again threatens her life. A typical number, not particularly strong in plot but full of entertaining action.

RAINBOW ISLAND (Rolin-Pathe), October 28.—A laughable one-reel comic, featuring Harold Lloyd and Harry Pollard. They row in a boat to a cannibal island, where they are captured and fattened for killing. Their adventures are of an amusing, knockabout sort and the settings are pleasing.

DOING THEIR BIT (Pathe-International), October 28.—Excellent photos of women at work in American munition plants. Shows the making of bullets, fitting of caps and other features. A very instructive half reel.

AT THE PICNIC (Pathe), October 28.—On same reel with above. Happy Hooligan, Gloomy Gus and the kids go to a picnic, where some funny adventures befall them. Enjoyable animated drawings.

THE MAN TRAP (Pathe), November 4.—Episode No. 8 of "The Seven Pearls." Ilma is visited by a priest from a Pagan cult, who drugs her and tries to steal one of her pearls. Harry arrives and follows the priest to the temple room. He sees Mason in the grasp of a mechanical image, into the eye-sockets of which pearls have been fitted. Ilma comes and they steal the pearls, but are forced to relinquish them. The number is not specially exciting, but holds the interest well.

LOVE, LAUGHS AND LATHER (Pathe-Rolin), November 4.—An extremely laughable two-reel number featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. Both the scenes at the boarding house and in the barber shop are good; the latter, in fact, are as hilarious as anything recently shown. This is an exceptional comedy of the knockabout sort.

THE QUEEN OF SPADES (Pathe-Russian Art Film Co.).—A strong five-reel subject, with a tragic close, featuring I. I. Mosukin, Mme. Duvan, Mmé. Arlova and other Russian players. Scenes from Russian court society, gambling at Versailles and other features give an unusual atmosphere. The plot concerns an unscrupulous young officer who gains a gambling secret at the expense of his own life. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

LIFE'S WHIRLPOOL, October 8.—A moderately interesting five-part melodrama, featuring Ethel Barrymore, whose personality and good work add materially to its merits. Lionel Barrymore wrote the story and directed the production. A longer review is printed elsewhere in this issue.

THE DENTIST (Drew), October 15.—An entertaining number of the Drew comedies, in which the husband in the case is suffering from toothache and in spite of his wife's pleadings with him to visit the dentist he fails to yield. Finally she makes an appointment for him and the dentist succeeds in extracting the wrong tooth. Very amusing.

Mutual Film Corporation.

JERRY AND THE BULLY (Cub), October 11.—In this number of the George Ovey comedies Jerry falls accidentally into the position of school teacher. The comedy in the picture is not good and while not being in any particular sense vulgar, is not of the sort to be exhibited before the masses, and especially is it out of place as a picture for the children's program on account of the comedy conduct of the teacher in the school.

JERRY'S JAM (Cub), October 18.—One of the usual type of Jerry comedies, and perhaps a trifle more entertaining. For the purpose of outdoing his rival, who sends flowers to his sweetheart on her birthday, he attends an auction sale of unclaimed goods held by a certain express company and procures a trunk full of pretty things for her. The trunk gets mixed with another one of similar appearance when being delivered, and the contents of the trunk which arrives at the young lady's home are a drunken man and a whiskey bottle.

THE LOST EXPRESS NO. 5 (Signal), October 18.—"In Deep Waters" is the title of this number of the serial. Following the last episode, in which the cabin was demolished by an oil train, we find Helen Thurston, believed by her enemies to be dead, struggling with conditions in the cellar of the cabin. Here she is rescued by her friends, and is on her way home when the episode closes. The action of this episode, while not as stirring as some of the others, is, at the same time, interesting.

THE SEA MASTER (American), Oct. 22.—A William Russell feature made at the Amsterdam studios. The production is in five parts and is a stirring one, containing more than one good fight. The feminine lead is Francelia Billington. A full review of the picture, which is not a good one for child audiences, will be found elsewhere. The production is one of Russell's best.

THE UNFORSEEN (Empire), October 22.—A wholesome drama marks the first of the Olive Tell productions. Olive Tell plays the role of the eldest daughter of a wealthy senator who, in following her own impulses, succeeds in creating in her life a very peculiar and unhappy condition. David Powell also plays an interesting role in the picture, portraying the character of a novelist who goes blind, and who, upon regaining his sight through the help of a specialist, discovers that his wife is the woman whom he has formerly seen in the rooms of a man who was found dead shortly afterward, leaving a suspicion hanging over the woman who is identical with the role played by Olive Tell. A full review will be found elsewhere.

REEL LIFE NO. 78 (Gaumont), October 25.—The interesting subjects contained in this issue of Reel Life are "The Rocky Mountain Jay," showing its characteristics and a hunt for its eggs which are sometimes laid as early as February: "The Then and the Now, or, How the High Cost of Living Wins the Race"; "Queer Trees of Trinidad," and "Dining on Wheels," showing how the kitchen and dining room of a dining car are managed.

REEL LIFE NO. 79 (Gaumont), November 2.—The subjects contained in this reel are "Building Our Wooden Fleet"; "Important Industries of Argentina"; "An Unusual Foster Mother," showing a cat mothering chickens, and "A Dry Land Periscope," a comic subject showing boys watching a baseball game through a periscope.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE MAN HATER, October 28.—Entertaining and cleverly acted comedy-drama, a Saturday Evening Post story by Mary Brecht Pulver furnished the foundation. Winifred Allen is the star. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE STAINLESS BARRIER, October 28.—Irene Hunt has the leading role in this five-part photoplay written by Louis Schneider. It is a story of a woman's sacrifice for a worthless brother. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE SULTAN'S WIFE, September 30.—A swimming pool in the Sultan's harem, a lively cast, an intelligent dog and a clever monkey are the main props of the Keystone comedy.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 93 (Universal), October 8.—This number leads off with some extended views of the world's series between the Giants and White Sox. Also includes memorial exercises to President McKinley, swimming contest in San Francisco, Swiss mission enroute to America and various other topics.

CURRENT EVENTS NO. 23 (Universal), October 15.—U. S. Marines on gridiron in California, opening of Liberty Loan bank in Madison square, views of war chiefs in France, scenes from the recent world's series of ball games and other entertaining and instructive features are shown in this number.

VAMPING REUBEN'S MILLIONS (L-KO), Rel. Week of October 22.—A two-reel comic of the burlesque type, featuring Bob McKenzie, Eva Novak, Catherine Young and others. The scenes at the Jasmown race track, the farmer-hero who plows with a sail, and the later events in which the vampire lady gets the rich old man's roll, are all amusing and quite successful for this style of humor. One or two short scenes border on vulgarity, but there is nothing really offensive. The offering, as a whole, is a commendable one.

I QUIT (Joker), Rel. Week of October 29.—A comedy number by Tom Gibson, feautring Gale Henry, William Franey and Milburne Moranti. A restaurant, with the help on a strike, is the principal scene of operations. Franey hires out as a substitute cook and is beaten up as a result. The action is of the slapstick order and is quite lively and amusing, though not exceptional in humor.

EVEN AS HIM AND HER (L-KO), Rel. Week of October 29.—A quick-action comedy number, featuring Phil Duncan, Lucille Hutton and Bill Bevan. This deals with the adventures of some newlyweds, both of whom are addicted to flirting. The young man's father also flirts and so does Mr. Spifflegoofer, whom the young bride picks up in the park. All hands finally meet in the same restaurant, after numerous adventures in the park. Not much plot to this, but it is attractively presented for this type of comic and contains come amusing nonsense.

THE RED ACE NO. 3 (Universal Special), Rel. Week of October 29.—Under title of "The Leap for Liberty," Virginia is seen arriving at the Lost Hope mine region, where she is quickly observed by the group of foreign spies operating there. She is made captive and a mysterious voice from a hollow tree trunk asks her to name the location of the platinum cache or die. She refuses and afterward escapes, swimming across Phantom lake, pursued by the conspirators. Many rugged, picturesque scenes are shown in this instalment, which carries the interest nicely.

World Pictures.

THE MAID OF BELGIUM (Peerless), November 5.—Novelty and interest are to be found in this five-part photoplay written by Adrian Gil-Spear, with Alice Brady as the star. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

WORLD'S SERIES IN HEARST-PATHE NEWS.

Disappointed baseball fans, unable to secure tickets for the opening game of the World Series in Chicago, were given an opportunity to see the game that same evening in Chicago's leading theaters. This was made possible by the enterprise of the Hearst-Pathe News, which took motion pictures of the first contest and had them developed and positive prints made in time for showing at the first performance in all Chicago's leading theaters. At the opening game in New York, Wednesday, another "special" was issued and released the same evening in the New York theaters.

PRODUCERS' PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION FORMED.

Eight Producers Start It Off—Guarantee Forty-eight Productions a Year—Will Eliminate Advance Deposits.

QUITE in keeping with the confident expectations of the independent film manufacturers who sponsored the movement, the Producers' Protective Association, Inc., has become a financed actuality. It was born Thursday night, October 18th, at a meeting in the offices of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, presided over by President William L. Sherrill, the man who conceived and developed the idea from the embryo. On that occasion eight men put up $1,250 each to defray the preliminary expenses of the body until it becomes self-sustaining by virtue of the earned commissions on the future sales that are negotiated through the medium of the joint sales bureau or exchange. The executive committee, which comprises the officers and the board of directors, by name, Wm. L. Sherrill, president; Harry Rapf, vice-president; Jesse J. Goldburg, secretary and treasurer; I. N. Chadwick, M. A. Schlesinger and Leopold Wharton, was empowered to lease quarters in the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh Ave., where a suite, consisting of a display room, a projection room, a manager's sanctum, a room for the working force, and a room for meetings of the directorate will be engaged before the current week will have expired.

When approached on the subject by the representative of the Moving Picture World, Mr. Sherrill delivered himself as follows:

"The selection of the man to head the sales bureau will probably take place at the meeting held this coming Tuesday. Seven men either presented themselves or were proposed by members of the body for this post. At last Thursday's meeting a discussion of the various applicants was engaged in with the result that the selection has now narrowed down to two. Here is a vital spot in the Producers' Protective Association which is being given painstaking consideration. We must have an honest man. We must have a representative man. We must have an experienced man. We must have an able man. And that is exactly the kind of a man that will get the job. No others are being considered. We have determined upon the process of elimination in the engaging of this sales-head. In order to insure integrity, capacity and experience we have determined to pay the incumbent of this post a minimum of $7,500 per year, exclusive of commissions. Of course this man can have no film interests of his own. If he has any now, he must dispose of them absolutely before he assumes the chair as sales-head of the Producers' Protective Association. This condition must be absolute.

"Then, another cardinal point regarding our membership (and we have received some preliminary advance payments by mail from some who could not attend last Thursday's meeting in person), no producer can enjoy membership to the body who either exploits a star or a story not compatible with public decency. Drive that point home and rivet it for all time. This automatically eliminates some from joining the organization who have already made application for membership. Understand, we do not intend to be snobbish—only unyielding in this principle. In order that no one man or set of men control this seat of judgment, we have provided in our by-laws that such decisions can be rendered only by the complete membership itself. As for the directors, they can merely recommend and suggest—but can not arbitrarily assume any such responsibility.

"Again, in regard to the manager of our sales bureau, it shall be his duty and that of his staff to tabulate and reduce to statistical form every item of importance to the state right exploiter, be he producer, exchangeman or theater-owner. Prime amongst this data will be the standardization of buyers' credits and financial responsibility. Risks and bluffers will became a blur of the past. That will be as much appreciated by the exchangeman and foreign buyer in time to come as the fact that when he hereafter comes to New York he can do all his buying, see all his pictures and their advertising material in one office, and at the saving of several days' costly time.

"Then, furthermore, we intend extending a condition to the exhibitor, which we are sure he will regard as a real blessing. I refer to our intended policy of establishing a line of credit, whereby we can eliminate advance deposits and enable the exhibitor to reserve his funds. We shall only desire the theater-man to agree in advance upon what pictures he desires to book. If, of course, after the exhibitor has observed the production at the trade-showing given it by the state right buyer, and comes to the conclusion that it does not meet with his purposes, for some reason or another, he shall be allowed the privilege of cancellation. Then, too, already there are eight members, which number will be augmented at the coming meeting. Each is put out a minimum of six productions a year, which guarantees forty-eight per annum to begin with, regardless of the additions which will be assured by the advent of each new manufacturer to the P. P. A. We realize that this number will serve as a safe working basis for the independent buyer and the exhibitor as well. And last, but not least, every one of our members understands that we must put out A number one productions that will make the market independent of the program problem. We not only realize this, but we intend to accomplish it."

The eight concerns who are now full-fledged members belonging to and comprising the Producers' Protective Association, Inc., are the Frohman Amusement Corp., the Ogden Features Corp., the Crystal Film Corp., the Mayfair Film Corp., the Ivan Film Corp., Wharton Bros., Inc., the Duplex Film Co., Inc. (John W. Noble), and the Harry Rapf Productions.

CHARLES ROSENTHAL IN NEW YORK.

Buys a Number of Feature Subjects for the M. & R. Exchange.

THERE arrived at the Hotel Astor, New York City, on Monday, October 15, after a transcontinental journey from his headquarters, the M. & R. Feature Film Exchange in San Francisco and Los Angeles, one Charles Rosenthal, Jr., the "R" and junior member of said Pacific state rights buying enterprise. And, though here less than a week, he has done quite some buying, and at this writing intends purchasing three more productions providing he comes across said number still open for his territory that measure up to the standard of merit that he has set for himself and partner, E. B. Mayer.

In addition to buying for the states of California, Arizona and Nevada for the M. & R., he is also the buying commissioner for the Australasian firm of P. C. Crown, Inc. During the week past, Rosenthal has already closed deals with the Ivan Company, the Peter Pan Film Corp., and the Export and Import Co. From Ivan he has secured "One Law for Both," "Married in Name Only," and "Sins of Ambition"; with R. M. Vandivert, of Peter Pan, arranged for the "Honeymooners" travelogue series; while he has also purchased "Robespierre" from Ben Blumenthal. The foregoing are all the property now of his exchange. Next week our columns will undoubtedly carry the news of further M. & R. purchases. For the P. C. Crown interests he closed with the Ivan Film Corp. for "One Law for Both," "Babbling Tongues," and "Married in Name Only" for Australasia.

Charles Rosenthal.

When interviewed by a representative of the Moving Picture World in the offices of the Ivan Company, Mr. Rosenthal enthused over his recent purchases and then went on to talk of his enterprises: "The M. & R. Company is barely seven months old, yet in that brief space of time our success has been highly gratifying. I am particularly proud of the sincere confidence that the exhibitors throughout the three states that we control place in us. This confidence both my partner and myself assiduously try to preserve. As a case in point, I need only cite the fact that Mr. Mayer owns a substantial interest in the Alcazar theater, Frisco. Though we could place all our first runs in this house, or at least threaten to, and thereby hold up local exhibitors for a stiffer than necessary rental we make it an inexorable rule that no M. & R. production ever be allowed to run at this theater. Both Mr. Mayer and myself have not forgotten that we were once exhibitors ourselves, and are keenly sympathetic to their hardships and even maltreatment. In fact it was the difficulties as theater owners that we endured that prompted us to become exchange folk. We have made it our slogan to treat our customers quite as we would want to be treated if we were running our former theaters, which, as already stated, we have disposed of with the exception of Mr. Mayer's interest in the Alcazar. After our trade showing if we find we have made a buy which exhibitors do not take much faith in we always regulate our prices accordingly, so that our worthy features will be properly regarded by our clientele.

"Exclusive of the purchases I have made since reaching Manhattan, we are already exploiting such stable productions as 'The Crisis,' 'The Lust of the Ages,' 'Forbidden Fruit,' 'The Immortal Flame,' 'A Fool's Paradise,' and 'The City of Illusions.' One point that I would like to drive home is the fact that we contemplate an extensive campaign of advertising both throughout our territory and in certain of the trade press that will be in keeping with the dignity and calibre of our new offerings. Before November exactly one hundred billboards in Frisco and Los Angeles will display the elaborate 24 sheets of 'One Law for Both.' We will do everything in our power to thoroughly legitimatize the moving picture industry along the Pacific coast."

Mrs. Rosenthal accompanied her husband eastward, and will return home with him about November 1.

SALES OF THE WEEK.

Here Below a Compendium of the Selling Activities Recorded in the State Right Market the Past Seven Days.

Ben Blumenthal has progressed a step further in his efforts to do business with Latin-America. He announced the week past that he has sold "A Man's Law," "Humility," and "Loyalty" to the Glucksmann interests of Buenos Aires, Argentina. The deal was consummated in New York by Jacobo Glucksmann.

Robert Priest, general manager of the Arrow Film Corp., announces that with the sale of the last territory on "The Deemster" the week past this production has now been closed for all of the United States. The final sale was transacted between Mr. Priest, representing Arrow and Messrs. W. E. Condell and N. Greenfeld, proprietors of the Liberty Feature Film Co., Shrevesport, La. The territory in the deal comprised Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Louisiana.

Harold Z. Levine announces that he has successfully negotiated the purchase of the E. I. S. Company's "Trooper 44" by the firm of Griever and Herz, state rights exploiters of Chicago, for the territory of Illinois, Indiana and southern Wisconsin. Levine is kept busy buying for the exchanges he represents in New York.

Lee L. Goldberg, secretary and treasurer of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, has closed contracts with Joseph S. Klotz, of Klotz & Streimer, Inc., for exhibition rights for the state of Kentucky for "Whither Thou Goest."

W. S. Brewster, of the Jordan-Brewster Company, Seattle, Wash., has acquired "The Warrior" for Idaho, Montana, Oregon, and Washington. Mr. Brewster also obtained the rights to distribute "The Warrior" in Alaska. The Jordan-Brewster Company already controls the rights to "The Birth of a Nation." He will exploit the Itala picture in a scale commensurate with its magnitude, and it will play all of the large houses in the western territory as a road attraction, accompanied by a special crew and orchestra.

To the Civilization Company, of Newark, N. J., have been allotted the state rights for New Jersey. This contract was negotiated between Mr. Sawyer for General Enterprises, Inc., and Henry Allsopp, president, and H. Heidelberger, manager, for the Civilization Film Company.

The Globe Films, Limited, of Toronto, to which organization the Canadian rights for "The Warrior" was sold, have broken all records in the matter of prints used on a feature in this territory. Six copies are in use throughout the Dominion, which is four above the usual number of prints required for exhibition purposes for the average screen offering. Large orders for lithographs has been placed by Globe Films, Limited, in order to properly exploit the film starring Maciste, and space has been taken in the large Canadian cities for the placing of twenty-four sheet stands.

Edward Warren, general manager of Edward Warren Productions, Inc., announces that he has sold the New England rights to his company's "Souls Redeemed" to Edward Segal, manager of the Globe Feature Film Corp., whose headquarters are in Boston.

At the same time, Mr. Warren points proudly to the fact that the Elk Photoplay Corporation, owners of the Greater New York rights to this production, have booked it for a fifty-day engagement in the Keith & Proctor houses and for thirty days among the William Fox houses.

President Maurice H. Bob, of Master Dramas Features, Inc., last week wired from Chicago to General Manager Becker of that company that the territorial rights of their feature, "Who's Your Neighbor," for Illinois, Indiana, and Southern Wisconsin have been purchased by the Unity Photoplays Company, Chicago.

Frank Zambrino, president of the Unity, was in charge of negotiations on behalf of the latter firm. The feature will be exploited in the three states as a road show.

Mr. Bob stated in his wire that he was leaving for Kansas City to close a deal embracing the rest of the Middle West territory. The states of Washington, Oregon, California, Arizona, Nevada, Montana, Utah, New Mexico, Colorado, Idaho, Wyoming and north New Jersey have already been sold.

The firm of Hiller & Wilk closed a deal with the Adirondack Film Service, of Monroe, N. Y., whereby this up-state firm secured the rights on the Enlightment Co.'s "Enlighten Thy Daughter" for New York State exclusive of the territories embraced in and around Buffalo and Greater New York City.

William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, announces that he has just sold the rights on "God's Man" to the Deseret Film Co., of Salt Lake City, Utah, for eleven states comprising California, Nevada, Utah, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Arizona, New Mexico, and Colorado.

The Ivan Film Corp. has sold the California, Nevada, and Arizona rights on three of their latest productions, namely, "One Law for Both," "Married in Name Only," and "Sins of Ambition" to the M. & R. Feature Film Co., of San Francisco and Los Angeles. (Refer to article on another page entitled "Charles Rosenthal in New York.")

The Peter Pan Film Corp. has sold the California, Arizona, and Nevada rights for their travelogue series entitled "The Honeymooners" to the M. & R. Feature Film Co., of San Francisco and Los Angeles. (See article entitled "Charles Rosenthal in New York.")

Ben Blumenthal, of the Export and Import Film Co., announces the sale of "Robespierre" to the M. & R. Film Co., of San Francisco and Los Angeles, for the states of California, Nevada and Arizona. (See story elsewhere in this issue entitled "Chas. Rosenthal in New York.")

Kaufman Specials, of Memphis, Tenn., announce that they have just closed a contract with Harry Grossman for the exclusive distribution of the Oro Features in the states of Tennessee, Alabama, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Mississippi.

From the Isadore Bernstein Film Co. subjects based on "The Seven Cardinal Virtures," the first three releases, "Loyalty," "Destiny," and "Humility," have also been contracted for by this Tennessee exchange.

Crystal Photoplays Corporation announces that the rights to "Mother Love and the Law," their new seven-reel feature drama, have been sold to Greiver & Herz, of Chicago, for Illinois, Indiana, and southern Wisconsin. This deal was consummated some time ago, but the news regarding the same was held in abeyance because of an auxiliary deal having been closed whereby the picture is to be shown in the loop beginning Saturday, October 20, at the Casino theater, 58 West Madison street.

"DANGER SIGNALS" FOR PIONEER.

Preparations are under way by the Pioneer Film Corporation, of which Nathan Hirsh is president, for the release about Nov. 1st, of "Danger Signals," a new seven-reel picture involving a big drama of New York and having universal emotional appeal. The significance of the title is found in the warnings which the big city is ever projecting for the safety of citizens against the common pitfalls that beset society, particularly youth.

WARREN TAKES SHORT TRIP.

Edward Warren, president of Edward Warren Productions, Inc., who has just completed his "Weavers of Life," as already announced in our last issue as the successor to "The Warfare of the Flesh," left New York City Friday, October 19, for a brief trip to Buffalo and Cleveland. He plans to return to his offices the Tuesday following, whereupon his last production will be released to the trade via the state-right route.

"DEEMSTER" SOLD.

N. Greenfield and W. E. Condell, comprising the Liberty Feature Film Company of Shreveport, La., have just bought the states of Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas and Oklahoma for "The Deemster," by Hall Caine.

The Liberty Feature Film Company will have their main office in Shreveport, La., from which point Louisiana and Arkansas will be covered, while Texas and Oklahoma will be covered from the Dallas office. The address of Dallas office will be announced later. The above firm will handle nothing but top-notch features in the above territory.

BARKER IN NEW YORK.

E. L. Barker, president of the Birth of a Race Photoplay Corporation, of Chicago, Ill., arrived in town last week, and expects to remain in the environs of New York City until the end of this month. When interviewed by a representative of the Moving Picture World, Mr. Barker insisted that he preferred to remain silent, but expected that he would have news of great interest to the trade in time for our next issue.

BIG SELLING AGENCY FORMING.

W. E. Shallenberger and Robert W. Priest Incorporating Firm That Plans Extensive Campaign in State Right and Export Markets.

A new and what promises to be a most effective combination of talent and ability is at this very time being consummated between several men of repute and discerning in the motion picture domain. The organization has been four or five months already in the making, wherefore the state rights trade can soon expect to receive the company's announcement. Two of the parties behind the movement are W. E. Shallenberger and Robert W. Priest.

Though the firm has just applied for its incorporation papers and therefore has as yet no official title, Messrs. Priest and Shallenberger have already signed contracts with the Mayfair Film Corporation whereby the world's selling rights, including those of the United States, have been secured from M. A. Schlesinger for his first Peggy Hyland production, "Persuasive Peggy," and also with Clune Productions whereby "The Eyes of the World" will be sold throughout the world by them, and "Ramona" for its world rights, exclusive of the territory for which it already has been purchased, which comprises Australia and the western half of the Unites States. Contracts for the selling rights on two other features, the names of which are being temporarily withheld, are also in the safe-keeping of the Shallenberger-Priest undertaking. Mr. Priest assures, however, that each is the work of an exceptionally well known author and directed by men of respected ability.

This enterprise, which is to devote itself to the marketing of independent productions throughout the buying markets of the world as well as this country, is a closed corporation—no stock being for sale.

DIAMOND HEROES TO LECTURE FOR "REVUE" FILM.

General Manager Tom McAvoy, who with Marty McHale, ex-Yankee pitcher, and Tris Speaker, field captain of the Cleveland Americans, controls the destinies of the Athletic Feature Films, 218 West Forty-second street, sponsors for "The Baseball Revue of 1917," has perfected arrangements whereby any particular exhibitor who books this picture from the state right buyer of his territory may secure the services of one or more stars from the particular team that his community and patronage is interested in. This service has even been made on a nationalized basis in the case of the White Sox, and exhibitors will be gratified to learn that Eddie Cicotte, Urban Faber, Ray Schalk, Eddie Collins and others can be secured as lecturers during the exhibition of "The Baseball Revue of 1917."

"Bugs" Baer, by special arrangement with the management of the New York Evening World, has written the sub-titles for the seven reels and some characteristically clever and side-splitting fun has oozed from this humorist's pen onto the celluloid. Baer's work alone is said to serve as a feature which of its own accord could recommend the production.

HOFFMAN PICTURES WILL PENETRATE ENTIRE CANADA.

The establishment of Hoffman-Foursquare Canadian Exchanges in conjunction with the Metro Pictures Service, is proceeding nicely. M. H. Hoffman received last week from J. J. Unger, of the Metro organization, at the Montreal office, assurances that the special salesmen for Hoffman-Foursquare products in Canada have been already engaged.

"I want Canadian exhibitors to know," said Mr. Hoffman to a representative of the Moving Picture World, "that our exchanges will cover the three chief distribution points in Canada. We shall have offices with the Metro Pictures Service in Montreal, Toronto and likewise in St. Johns, New Brunswick. I am particularly desirous that it should be known that the extreme northeastern portion of Canada will be covered through St. Johns.

"From inquiries already received from Montreal, Toronto and St. Johns I am sure that our features will find as ready a welcome there as has been extended them in the United States."

CHARLOTTE WALKER FILM SOON.

As stated in last week's issue the photoplay version of Eugene Walter's drama, "Just a Woman," which will be presented to screen patrons by Joseph M. Schenck, Lee Shubert, and Julius Steger, is nearing completion at the Crystal studios under the personal direction of Mr. Steger. Miss Charlotte Walker, who created the title role in the stage rendition of that play, will be the star, supported by an exceptional cast of prominent players. Lee Baker will make his first screen appearance in this production, and among the other leading members of the cast are such well-known names as Forrest Robinson, Florence Deshon, Henry Carvel, Camilla Dalberg, Edwin Stanley, Ann Williams, Paul Perez, Fred Kraus, also Little Lorna Volare, who made a hit in "The Claim," and Cornish Beck, the boy, whose splendid performance in "The Lone Wolf" was one of the features of that photodrama. The scenario version of "Just a Woman" is the work of Maitland Merill, supervised by Julius Steger.

SPECIAL SONG FOR ROBARDS PRODUCTION.

Any picture to be a success in the state rights field, according to H. J. Shepard, of Shepard and Van Loan, must contain one of three values: Propaganda, sensation, or an exceptional story. A release which does not size up to one of these qualifications should never be presented on the independent market. Naturally, if a picture contains more than one of these three qualities it is so much the surer of a favorable reception.

"The Robard's feature, 'Mothers of Men,'" he contends, "contains a distinct propaganda on the suffrage question. Also the story is one of the most exceptional of the year. Thus the picture fulfills two of the three qualifications for the state rights market, and is therefore easily deserving to be released in that field.

"Dorothy Davenport plays the leading part. Apart from the values of the picture itself a star of her magnitude is a drawing card of no mean proportion.

"Although the propaganda element in the picture is strong, it can be used with or without the endorsement of the Suffrage party, for the story will carry it upon its own merit. It is a picture that will invite discussion, and, as every one knows, that is the sure road to picture success.

"One feature of its advertising campaign is the song, 'Mothers of Men,' which has been written around the picture by Gus Edwards and Will D. Cobb. A large syndicate of 5 and 10 cent stores in the country has contracted to display it in their windows while the picture is playing in their respective territory, and to hold it on sale. An attractive cover for the song has been designed, and this will also be used for the 24-sheet posters, thus linking the song definitely to the picture. In addition to this there will be numerous other features, such as lobby displays and newspaper advertising, which will be a great benefit both to the territorial distributor and to the exhibitor."

MORE PUBLICITY AID FOR "WARRIOR."

Bert Ennis, publicity director of General Enterprises, Inc., has added to an already comprehensive list of aids an additional eight-page "Exploitation Guide" for "The Warrior."

The book is nine by twelve in size and contains among other things several styles of synopses to suit all needs, a biographical sketch of Maciste, the star, and an unusual quantity of especially written newspaper stories and program fillers. The various styles of scene cuts are well illustrated and a complete resume of the eulogies on "The Warrior" by the New York dailies' theatrical critics has been so compiled as to be readily available for reprinting in the exhibitors' newspaper advertisements and circular matter. Arthur H. Sawyer has caused a specially orchestrated musical setting by M. Winkler to be incorporated in the "Exploitation Guide" in the belief that it can be more conveniently used by the theater men than an individual folder.

ROSETWIG ANNOUNCES NEW HELEN MARTIN FEATURE.

About the 1st of November the Rosetwig Feature Films, so Manager Rosenzweig instructs, will present to the state right market another production in which Helen Martin will be starred. The film is almost completed now, but it is still too early for it to have received its name. Seven reels, however, is to be its finished length. Rosenzweig describes the film as a powerful Jack Gorman drama that will bring lots of buyers to his quarters at 218 West Forty-second street.

As to "Corruption," the six-part feature in which Helen Martin was also given the leading role and which was also put out by the Rosetwig Company, Mr. Rosenzweig relates that its further exhibition has been stopped in the confines of Greater New York only by Commissioner of Licenses Bell, of New York City. Elsewhere throughout the country and the state it has met with no such restriction.

LUBIN CONVALESCES IN "SOUTH."

Herbert Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., has recovered from the operation which he recently underwent for appendicitis. He was removed last week from The Stern Sanitarium in New York City to his home.

Owing to the severity of his case it will be necessary for him to remain away from his office for another few weeks, wherefor he left New York on Monday, October 22, for Palm Beach, Florida. He will remain at the southern resort until his strength is fully regained.

During Lubin's absence from his offices, at 1600 Broadway, Arthur H. Sawyer, also of General Enterprises, Inc., has been handling the affairs of the company.

DUTCH CHAPLIN MUTUAL RIGHTS SOLD TO AMSTERDAM FIRM.

A letter from the World's International Film Office (Algemeen International Filmbureau), of Amsterdam, Holland, to the Moving Picture World bears the request that we make known to the trade the fact that the rights to the complete library of Mutual two-reel Charlie Chaplin comedies have been secured by them for the territory of Holland itself, as well as the Dutch East Indies and the Dutch West Indies.

Cosmofotofilm Head Deplores Buyer's Apathy

E. C. Wallace Cites Evil in Independent Exchangemen Falling for Ballyhoo of Cheap Productions.

THAT there is a lack of keenness on the part of many men now engaged in buying state rights on the many worthy offerings manufactured by firms catering to this market is the contention of E. C. Wallace, general manager and treasurer of the Cosmofotofilm Co., Inc., who has amongst recent productions placed at the disposal of independent buyers such pictures as "The Manx-man," "Mother" and "I Believe." In the case of the first mentioned it was secured by Goldwyn, and is now being released by them through their exchanges, while "Mother" has been secured by McClure's Pictures, who are handling it on the state rights basis. In this connection Mr. Wallace reveals some facts that will interest the trade in general, and also delivers some ideas worthy of repetition.

In an interview with a representative of the Moving Picture World, the Cosmofotofilm executive spoke as follows:

"The ever recurrent cry from state rights buyers to the effect that manufacturers and manufacturers' agents are in the habit of holding their best big films from the state rights market and only offering second grade films to state righters has become so insistent that unless controverted it is likely to work harm to a big and flourishing industry.

"The Cosmofotofilm Company, Inc., for several years has conducted a business of importing big English "specials" and distributing them in this country. It has kept its fingers closely upon the pulse of the state rights market throughout the varying conditions which have arisen from time to time. It finds that the average state rights buyer is woefully apathetic—prone to be misled by glaringly untrue publicity—seldom takes the trouble to investigate fully—and handles much inferior film at a financial loss because of this indifference and apathy.

"Two concrete examples may be cited, 'The Manx-man' and 'I Believe.' 'The Manx-man' was offered to responsible state rights buyers for several weeks at territorial prices, which would have enabled both local exploiters and local exhibitors to reap large profits. After waiting over two months for results, advertising widely in all trade journals, and using every legitimate means to bring this great 'special' to the attention of state rights buyers the Cosmofotofilm Company was approached by one of the great distributors with a proposition so favorable that it could not be turned down.

"Instead, therefore, of the state rights men of the country reaping big profits on 'The Manx-man,' this classic feature is now adding to the revenues of one of the international film distributors of America.

"Whose fault is this? Certainly it is not the fault of the Cosmofotofilm Company, which spent several thousand dollars in publishing the details of this splendid example of George Loane Tucker's work as director and producer. State rights men lost a golden opportunity, which was seized by the far-sighted men directing a nationwide exchange system.

"George Loane Tucker's latest big effort is 'I Believe,' a splendid seven-reel 'special,' to which a consistent publicity campaign has been given in the trade press during the past several weeks. Is 'I Believe' to be allowed to go to national distributors also? Are state rights men so really apathetic that they cannot grasp the fact that by purchasing direct from the manufacturer they are saving several intermediate middlemen's profits? The territorial prices on 'I Believe' are emphatically not exorbitant. They leave an ample margin for excellent profits for both state righter and exhibitor. 'I Believe' is a real feature of big film quality and quantity. Yet in nine weeks the Cosmofotofilm Co. has sold territorial rights on less than half of its available territory.

"Wake up, state righters! Let us have examples of true co-operation between yourselves and the manufacturers. There are big profits awaiting those wideawake territorial exploiters who are alive to their opportunities."

CREEL APPOINTS FINK AS ASSISTANT.

M. R. Fink, head of the foreign department of General Enterprises, Inc., was compelled to cut short a trip through the southern circuit in the interests of "The Warrior" this week due to a call received from Lawrence Rubel of The Bureau on Public Information at Washington.

He returned to New York from Baltimore in answer to a summons from George Creel, the head of the bureau, who offered him the important position of caption writer in the still picture division of the photograph department. The work entails the spending of two days each week in Washington. The pay is nominal and the position a patriotic service to the United States Government.

Mr. Fink has agreed to "do his bit" and has so arranged affairs as to be able to title the Government photographs by spending some time each week in Washington.

Arthur H. Sawyer has generously offered to loan Mr. Fink to the Government for the work in question and a decision will be reached imediately after the tour of the film executive is completed.

The foreign department head left for Atlanta following the conference with Mr. Rubel to resume his interrupted trip.

NETTER DUE BACK EAST SOON.

Leon D. Netter, the aggressive manager of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Cleveland, Ohio, writes us that he will return to New York either around the first of next month or on the 15th of November. In the latter case, he will get in just about the time that Sol. L. Lesser makes his first return to the film center since his recent attack of appendicitis. Whether Netter comes on in advance of his associate or not, it is certain that their stays in New York will overlap, for both are officers (Lesser, president, and Netter, secretary) of the State Rights Distributors, Inc., and a meeting of this organization is to be called when the president gets here. Owing to the sick spell of Lesser it was impracticable to hold any meetings until his health permitted him to again carry on his extensive business affairs.

In this connection it would be interesting to quote from Mr. Netter's own letter: "I think the opportunities for state-righting film, in other words, giving big productions the proper exploitation, is far bigger now than it ever was. This leads up to the matter of the State Rights Distributors, Inc., and all I can say in connection with this is that both Mr. Lesser and myself think that the opportunities offered through this organization are greater now than ever, and all the members feel the same way and are anxious to have the organization in active force.

"It was unfortunate that Mr. Lesser's illness should have delayed the matter thus, but as you perhaps are aware, Mr. Lesser will return to New York the middle of November, at which time the organization will be put in full force and further announcement made."

WEST AND BEE-SWARM FLY WEST.

Louis Burstein has arranged for forthcoming winter-made King-Bee comedies to be produced in sunny California. As a result of his imperial ukase nineteen of the human insects who make honey for the King-Bee Film Corp. departed from the depot of the Lehigh Valley across the Hudson Monday, October 22, bound for Los Angeles. The party traveled in a private car, and in addition to cameramen, carpenters, and property men comprised of Director Gillstrom, Billy West, Babe Hardy Leo White, Bud Ross, Ethel Gibson, Martha Dean, and Jackie Jackson—nineteen in all.

The heads of the firm gave the tourists a farewell party the Friday evening previous. Incidentally, West got a chance to see his name displayed on the large electric sign in front of Loew's New York theater before he journied westward during the engagement of his "The Goat" at that Broadway playhouse.

Scene from "The Candy Kid" (King-Bee).

At the same time that the troupe pulled out of the city so did publicity sharp-shooter Ed. Rosenbaum, but he went to Philadelphia instead, where he spent a couple of days with Ben Amsterdam, whose Masterpiece Film Co. controls the local territory on King-Bee products, and did effective service for his sales head, Nat. H. Spitzer, by putting over some special publicity.

"FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS" BRINGS RECORD PRICE.

New York state rights for "The Fall of the Romanoffs," Herbert Brenon's picture drama depicting the birth of Russian democracy, are said to have brought a record price the week just closed.

The purchase was made from A. H. Woods, theatrical producer and half owner of "The Fall of the Romanoffs" with Mr. Brenon, by a group of capitalists organized for the purpose. They have appointed Sol. J. Berman as sales manager to handle the New York territory.

"The Fall of the Romanoffs" recently completed a three weeks run at the Broadway theater, where it attracted capacity business at a two dollar scale of prices.

Canada Proves Fertile Market

Growth of State Rights in Dominion a Pronounced Characteristic of 1917—Future Appears Decidedly Roseate.

By W. M. Gladish.

DEVELOPMENTS in the state rights field throughout Canada have come thick and fast during the past few weeks until now there is a wide variety of special releases from which exhibitors may make a choice or which can be presented as a road show by Canadian right owners. In fact, the situation is such that serious inroads are being made into the so-called legitimate stage business.

There are reasons for this state of affairs. Many legitimate theaters have been unable to make solid bookings for the present season, and the big picture productions are being used to fill the breaches, proving, incidentally, big money-makers. The arrangements are generally made on a percentage basis.

With the opening of the New Princess in Toronto on October 1, the Ontario Capitol now has three dramatic houses, and there are not enough available flesh-and-blood road shows to fill the seasons at two of them, it is declared. On October 15 there were still ten open weeks in the season of forty weeks at the Royal Alexandra, according to a reliable authority. The dates at the Grand opera house, Toronto, for the next three months include a comparatively large number of state right feature bookings. Toronto also has three vaudeville houses, and moving picture features are the principal attractions at two of them.

With the state right developments during the past two months arrangements have been made for many, if not nearly all, special releases for the Canadian market. One of the latest important moves in the state rights field has been the organization of "Griffin Pictures," with offices in Toronto and Montreal. Closely allied with Griffin Pictures is Superfeatures, Limited, the general manager of which is Charles Stevens, formerly of the Canadian Universal. Griffin Pictures has been organized by Peter Griffin, who has a circuit of thirteen theaters in Ontario. Exchanges are to be opened jointly immediately in Winnipeg, Calgary, and St. John by the two concerns, according to an announcement by Mr. Stevens.

Griffin Pictures recently secured the Canadian rights for Brenon's "The Lone Wolf" and for "Civilization." Superfeatures, Limited, has just obtained the Canadian rights for "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," "Bought and Paid For," "The Russian Revolution of 1917, with Kerensky," and "The 13th Labor of Hercules" serial. Superfeatures, Limited, also holds the rights for "The Whip, "The Crisis," "The Barrier,' "On Trial," and other big ones.

Globe Films, Limited, Toronto, is continually adding to its array of big productions. Phil. Kaufman, vice-president, recently closed for "The Lust of the Ages," "The Warrior," the two Metro specials, "The Slacker" and "The Call of Her People"; "Birth," "In Treason's Grasp," and other features. The company also controls "Redemption," King-Bee Comedies, and Ivan productions. The Globe has already opened branch offices in Montreal, Winnipeg and Calgary, and another office is being placed in St. John.

Manager Harry Law, of the Toronto Metro office, has just consummated a deal whereby the Metro Pictures Service of Montreal and Toronto will distribute Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures in Canada. There are five special releases ready for Canada as a result of this deal.

Regal Films, Limited, handles "The Fall of the Romanoffs," as well as Rex Beach features, "The Great White Trail," "A Mormon Maid," "The Masque of Life," Victor Moore Comedies, Mutt and Jeff Cartoons, among its state rights propositions.

The Famous Players Film Service is exploiting a number of specials, including "The Public Be Damned" and several war films.

The state rights department of the Canadian Universal is also coming strong. Manager H. Fischer, of this department, looks after the distribution of Universal specials and Century Comedies. This department will also look after the releasing of Jewel Productions in the Dominion.

The Specialty Film Import, Ltd., Canadian Pathe distributors, have closed for the Canadian distribution of both Italian and French official war films, and arrangements have been made for the handling of the Russian Art features.

A recent Canadian development is the tendency on the part of the average exhibitor to put on these special productions in a comparatively big way.

Present expansion in state rights circles of the Dominion means that within a very short time practically every exchange which deals exclusively or otherwise in special releases will have branch offices in from three to six cities of the country, principally Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Calgary, and St. John.

"MOTHER" GOES TO SING SING.

Sentimental interest was loaned to the request received by General Enterprises, Inc., from Edward J. Meagher, chairman of the Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing, for a showing of "Mother" to the inmates of the Ossining institution.

The feature, recently produced by George Loane Tucker, starring Elizabeth Risdon, deals strongly with the subject of mother-love, showing the influence of a loving heart over an erring son whose strong passions finally lead him to a prison cell.

Meagher touches upon this factor in his letter of request, stating that "Mother" is bound to exert an influence for good on the entire prison body. Accordingly "Mother" was screened within the prison walls on Wednesday evening, October 17. Mr. Tucker himself appeared at the conclusion of the exhibition and delivered a short address to the prisoners on the making of motion pictures and the various difficulties encountered therein by the producer.

Several members of civic and personal welfare bodies of New York City made the journey to Sing Sing in order to note the psychological effects of "Mother" on the audience.

Incidentally A. H. Sawyer, president of General Enterprises, has arranged for a special poem on the subject of motherhood, to be used in the exploitation of the feature.

NEWMAN OUT FOR "BATTLEFRONT" PICTURES.

Lewis Newman, manager of the Pittsburgh Exchange of the Fort Pitt Theater Company, is away on a country wide trip in the interests of the Royal Italian Government's official war pictures, "The Italian Battlefront," the American tour of which is under the exclusive direction of the Fort Pitt Theater Company.

Mr. Newman has been commissioned by the Italian officials to make this tour for the purpose of assisting exhibitors in the proper presentation of these war films, the supreme command of the Italian Army being especially concerned with the manner in which their activities are received by the American public.

Mr. Newman will visit every important center of 20,000 population upward from here to the Coast. His long acquaintance with all the fundamentals of successful film exploitation, and his own success as a producer of special screen attractions insure the trade of the maximum of co-operation and service.

UNUSUAL SHARK CAPTURE IN "HONEYMOONERS."

The first quartet of releases of "The Honeymooners," scenic serial being prepared by the Peter Pan Film Corporation, should be ready for exhibition about the middle of November.

This is the first scenic serial ever released by any film company, and H. C. Allen, president of the corporation, says he has some beautiful and unequalled material for the exhibitors. The material for the series is being gathered all over the world by a party consisting of H. H. Van Loan, William F. Aldrich, Gertrude Cameron, and Peggy Aldrich. They have been in the Hawaiian Islands for the past month preparing the first releases.

Van Loan, who is in charge of the expedition, has written to headquarters that they have succeeded in obtaining the finest shark picture ever taken.

The moving picture camera caught the entire trip, and Bonine, the local expert photographer, who has developed all the moving picture stuff taken in the Hawaiian Islands for various companies, says that Peter Pan has the greatest shark picture ever taken in those islands. The scene will form one of the first releases in "The Honeymooners," and will be certain to interest all lovers of real sport, Mr. Allen assures.

BLUMENTHAL BELIEVES IN ADVERTISING.

Ben Blumenthal, president of the Export & Import Film Company, Inc., is a great believer in proper and efficient advertising. He feels that every state rights picture to be worthy of the title must possess possibilities for bringing it properly before the public, not in a sloppy-lathered-on fashion, but in an efficient and organized manner.

Thus with the waste reduced to a minimum, a campaign is organized: first from the angle of the company; second, from the view of the distributor; third, from the point of view of reaching the general public and filling the theaters. This cannot be laid out in a haphazard way, but the cost of the whole is estimated, and balanced against the positive returns on the money laid out, thereby reducing the proposition to one of dollar for dollar.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Glendon in Another "O. Henry"

Sparkling Satire Mingled With Love Theme in "A Night in New Arabia."

O. HENRY'S penchant for flinging delicately barbed shafts of satire at New York reaches its ripest stage in "A Night in New Arabia," the current release in the Broadway Star Features distributed by General Film. His descriptions of Caliph-ridden Bagdad-on-the-Subway and the Haroun al Raschids who go about seeking to find a way of crawling through the eye of the needle forms one of the richest and most whimsical of his many stories of New York life, and is peculiarly adapted to retelling in pictures. It is the fifth of the series of four-reel O. Henry subjects released through General Film.

The story deals with the attempt of Old Jacob Spraggins to find relief for his soul by scattering about donations to charity with a lavish hand. Having failed to obtain relief, Spraggins orders his detectives to find the heirs of a poor miner he had defrauded in a coal deal. This happens to be Tom McLeod, a delivery boy, who has fallen in love with the romantic Celia Spraggins. The latter changes places with the parlor maid and courts her ideal with the aid of her expert whistling. Spraggins hands Tom $10,000 and the latter pursuades Celia to elope with him in his wagon, not knowing that Celia is Spraggins' daughter. A year later, when the infant Jakey McLeod arrives, Spraggins suddenly cancels all of his donations and begins piling up a fortune of $100,000,000 for the "kid." To do this he raises the price of vinegar three cents on the gallon, and Bagdad-on-the-Subway settles back into its old rut.

Director Thomas Mills, who has superintended the filming of many of the O. Henry successes, has attained a new mark in picture workmanship in this story, which possesses all of the original charm with which O. Henry endowed it. "A Night in New Arabia" features J. Frank Glendon and Patsy DeForest. The former gives a breezy and thoroughly life-like interpretation of the role of Tom McLeod, while Miss DeForest is particularly likable as the vivacious Celia, who loves to be loved for herself and not for her millions. The two stars are ably supported by an able cast.

ESSANAYS RELEASED BY KLEINE SYSTEM.

Essanay's offerings to exhibitors this week consist of a comedy-drama starring Taylor Holmes, the comedian, a comedy-drama featuring Little Mary McAlister, and two George Ade Fables.

The Holmes' picture is entitled, "Two Bit Seats," and is full of amusing situations, with a light romance running through the story. It has a screen time of sixty-five minutes and will be released through the George Kleine exchanges November 5.

Little Mary's picture, "Young Mother Hubbard," while containing much excellent comedy, has a dramatic appeal so strong that it is sure to tug at the heart strings. The principal characters are all children. The picture has been especially well acted and staged. Its screen time is sixty-five minutes. It will be released October 29 through the Kleine System.

"THE LADY IN THE LIBRARY" (Falcon).

Adventure and romance follow fast upon the heels of each other in "The Lady in the Library," the eleventh release in the Falcon Features being distributed by General Film Company. It is a social adventure which provides plenty of action, and its four reels are crowded with the sort of thrills to which the fans who have been following the popular Falcon Features have become accustomed.

"The Lady in the Library" was picturized from a story written by Frederick Orin Bartlett for Ainslee's, and the film version is expected to duplicate the success enjoyed by the story. Mildred Vandeburg, a society girl, who is interested in hospitals and slum work, breaks her engagement with T. Huntington Forbes, her fiance, because their interests are so far apart. "Spike" Jones induces his weak brother, Dan, to sell some jewels he has stolen, and the latter is killed while resisting arrest. The shock causes the death of Dan's wife, who has just given birth to a baby girl. Mildred decides to place the baby in the home of Forbes, in the hope that it will arouse the latter to an interest in something besides sports and club life. When he returns home Forbes is told there is a "lady in the library" waiting to see him. He discovers the baby left by Mildred and his heart is touched with love for the first time. Mildred and Forbes defend the baby in a series of startling adventures with "Spike," and their engagement is renewed.

Vola Vale and Jack Vosburgh have given great strength to the portrayal of the leading parts in this drama. Other prominent characters in the cast are: Ruth Lackaye, Robert Weycross and Jane Pepprell. The picture is the result of the able direction of Edgar Jones under the supervision of H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer.

CAREY IN "A MARKED MAN" (Butterfly).

Harry Carey makes his third appearance as a star of Butterfly features in "A Marked Man," to be released Monday, October 29th. Improving steadily in technique with each succeeding picture, Carey now has a loyal and numerous band of admirers. He first sprang into favor as the star of Bluebird's "Three Godfathers," and has added to his prestige with two recent Butterfly plays, "Straight Shooting" and "The Secret Man."

His forthcoming vehicle was written by George Hively and directed by Jack Ford. It recounts a series of episodes in the checkered career of "Cheyenne" Harry, which come within an ace of cutting his adventurous life off short. Trapped red-handed while holding up the desert stage, through the perfidy of his own accomplice, Harry is sentenced to be hanged because he is unable to prove that he did not fire the shot which killed the stage driver. While he is awaiting execution, his mother, who has always considered him a model of dutiful manhood, writes that she is coming on to pay him a long-deferred visit. Knowing that the truth regarding his real status would probably kill the old lady, Harry gets permission from the sheriff to leave the jail, under surveillance, and pose as a prosperous cattle dealer the day that his mother spends in town. This unique arrangement leads to a surprising climax, and Carey puts over some of the most sincere acting that he has ever shown in the tense scenes that mark the denouement.

Fox's Week's Work

Doings at the Studios, East and West, Told Briefly—Four Standard Pictures.

THE complete cast of Gladys Brockwell's new picture for William Fox has now been determined upon. Besides Miss Brockwell the players are Lewis J. Cody, Vivian Rich, Willard Louis, Colin Chase, Gloria Payton, Fred Whitman, and Barney Furey. The photoplay is being directed by Bertram Bracken and photographed by Charles Kaufman. Mr. Cody and Miss Payton make their debut as Fox players in this production. Miss Rich played opposite William Farnum in "The Price of Silence," Mr. Farnum's first super de luxe picture.

Mr. Fox also announces that Marin Sais, whose name is synonymous in the screen world with beauty and daredeviltry, has been engaged to appear as leading woman for the new Tom Mix company recently organized. Mr. Mix has already begun on his first Fox Special Feature.

Another newcomer to the Fox fold is Fred Church, one of the best known and best liked players on the West Coast. Mr. Church is a Canadian by birth, but came to the United States when a lad and attended the University of Michigan. Mr. Church commenced his motion picture career by affiliating himself with the first company of filmites that came to Los Angeles.

Release dates for four of William Fox's finest and most spectacular productions have been determined upon by Fox Film Corporation. All four are Standard Pictures. The dramas and dates are:

October 7—"When a Man Sees Red," William Farnum's greatest "fighting" photoplay.

October 14—"Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," the film version of the most fascinating of all Arabian Nights' Tales.

November 18—"The Babes in the Woods," a photo-dramatization of the world-known story.

December 2—"A Daughter of the Gods," Annette Kellermann's famous marine picture.

Virginia Pearson, the statuesque Fox star, has started work on a new production under the direction of Carl Harbaugh. In the cast are Gladys Kelly, Carl Moody and Herbert Evans. Several members of the company are yet to be chosen. Miss Pearson is enthusiastic over the story for her new vehicle.

"The Scarlet Pimpernel" will probably be the first Fox release in November among the Special Features. This is a photo-dramatization of Baroness D'Orczy's great novel.

"THE SCARLET PIMPERNEL" (Fox).

The star, the director, the leading woman, some of the supporting company and the photographer who filmed "The Spy," one of the biggest achievements in William Fox's Standard Pictures series, are factors in "The Scarlet Pimpernel," the Fox Special Feature which will be released October 28th. Dustin Farnum, Winifred Kingston, William Burress and Howard Gaye are in both casts, and Richard Stanton directed and J. Dev. Jennings photographed each of the pictures.

"The Scarlet Pimpernel" is a dramatization of Baroness Orczy's well-known book of the same name. The title is derived from a small English wild flower which was attached to letters that a mysterious individual wrote to the French Government during the reign of terror in 1792. Each of these letters was a notice that the Scarlet Pimpernel League has rescued another French nobleman whom the revolutionists had condemned to the guillotine. The story centers equally around the efforts to identify and capture the league leader and his devices to avoid detection. This picture was being made during the recent visit of Mr. Fox to his Hollywood, Cal., studios and it was while disguised for one of the several characters he portrays in the drama that Mr. Farnum so deceived Mr. Fox that the latter, thinking he was talking to an aged woman who was applying for work, offered the actor a position in the studio.

MARY GARDEN GOES TO FLORIDA.

When the California motion picture director wants a desert he whisks himself off a few miles across the state. When a New Jersey photoplay expert feels a need for sand it's off to Florida, where St. Augustine furnishes the nearest stretch of sun-bleached terra firma to the film capital of the East.

Mary Garden, the newest film star of Goldwyn who has just started work on "Thais," made a flying trip South last week accompanied by Directors Ballin and Crane, Cameraman Ables, and Assistant Director Berthelon, a still photographer, a publicity man, sundry costumes and their custodians, a good-sized technical staff—and one actor.

The single film player to accompany Miss Garden is her leading man, Hamilton Revelle, who plays the monk Paphnutius. Together Miss Garden and Mr. Revelle have about a dozen strong and vivid scenes of suffering in the desert, which the regenerated courtesan has to cross with the monk on her way to the sheltering nunnery where she is to spend her life far from the beauty and corruption of Alexandria.

All told these scenes might take some eight hours to "shoot." But because of their nature Miss Garden and her entourage have had to set off on a thousand-mile trip at the end of which they will almost literally "walk right in and turn around and walk right out again."

At first it was thought that longer portions of "Thais" showing scenes at the nunnery would also have to be taken in Florida, and plans were laid to that end. But by a little skillful drawing, measuring and figuring the Goldwyn technical staff discovered that the nunnery, as well as the temples, houses and streets of Alexandria called for in the script could all be built on the big "lot" back of the studio at Fort Lee. Within a record space of time all these structures will be completed. Half at least will be finished before Miss Garden and her party return from Florida.

MARY MacLANE IN ESSANAY COMEDY.

Exhibitors soon will be offered a novelty by Essanay. The title is, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me." It is an elaborate comedy-drama, starring Mary MacLane herself, the famous authoress of unconventional books and magazine articles, and the writer of the story on which the picture is based.

Director Arthur Berthelet has spared no pains nor expense to make the settings as elaborate, luxurious and expensive as the wonderful apartments Miss MacLane describes in her story. One set alone, representing seven rooms of the apartment, contains thousands of dollars' worth of the most expensive furniture, pictures and rugs. When the camera is trained on the spacious library of this set, glimpses of the other six rooms are revealed through wide doors. It took weeks to build some of the sets, where the ordinary kind are erected in a few hours.

Of especial interest to women will be the wardrobe of Miss MacLane. It is an amazing array of evening gowns, traveling suits, riding habits, lounging robes, boudoir outfits, motoring costumes—in fact, everything, including bathing suits and gymnasium togs. Much of the wardrobe was imported.

The story deals with the love adventures of Miss MacLane, and is based on truth. In fact, Miss MacLane was really wooed by each of the six male characters in the picture. Of course their real names are not used.

The picture reveals the love-making methods of the six suitors, and shows, in turn, how their attention were received by Miss MacLane. The authoress appears in the role of vampire, but the picture is far different from the usual type of vampire stuff. In the first place, it has none of the morbid features that are usually associated with "vamp" films. On the contrary, it fairly bristles with amusing situations. It might be called a sparkling comedy-drama with a vampire playing the lead, but with the fangs extracted.

Pathe Program

Features and Serials, Scenics and a News Reel Compose the Schedule for Week of November 4.

MRS. VERNON CASTLE, Mollie King, Pearl White and Lonesome Luke are the box office stars on Pathe's program for the week of November 4. Mrs. Vernon Castle is seen in the second of the recently announced big new Pathe Plays. It is in five reels, and was produced by Astra under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, scenario by Philip Bartholomae, from the book by Carolyn Wells. It marks the first appearance of Antonio Moreno as Mrs. Vernon Castle's leading man, and the cast further includes J. H. Gilmore and John Sainpolis, both of whom are very well known. "The Mark of Cain" goes "Stranded in Arcady" one better. It is a fast action, thrilling detective-mystery-romance acted by a splendid cast, produced by a great director, and written by two very well known authors.

The list of advertising matter on this picture includes one, six and two styles of three sheets, colored photographic lobby display, two 22-28 photos of star, a slide, a Pathe Art Portrait of Mrs. Castle, one column newspaper cut of Mrs. Castle music plot, campaign book.

Mollie King appears in the 8th episode of "The Seven Pearls" entitled "The Man Trap," with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary. This two-reel chapter produced by Astra opens with a running fight between a sailing vessel and a fast naval launch, and ends with one of the most thrilling stunts ever concocted for a photoplay. Perry Mason attempts to take one of the precious pearls from the eyes of the Sacred God. It releases a secret spring, and the outstretched arms of the statue come together, holding Mason in an embrace of death.

Pearl White stars in the 18th episode of "The Fatal Ring" produced by Astra in two reels. This chapter has a very unusual story. In a series of thrilling incidents the Violet Diamond is hidden in a bottle of San Yen perfume. There are only four bottles of its kind in existence, and Pearl learns that they have been shipped from a department store to people who have ordered them by mail. Disguising herself as a salesgirl, she succeeds in obtaining the slips giving the addresses of the purchasers. Carslake, however, gets the same information. The rest of the episode is a race between the two to see which will get the right house first.

"Lonesome Luke" stars in a two-reel "Luke" comedy entitled "Love, Laughs and Lather," produced by Rolin Film Company, and there are one, three, six and stock one sheets on the picture. This twelve cylinder joy-wagon travels sixty miles a minute, with our hero in the new and comical role of a barber. Every man, unless he cuts his own hair and shaves himself, will find this burlesque on a business with which he is in almost daily contant laughable in the extreme. Harold Lloyd shines as the dandified barber who is less a slave to his profession than he is to the beauty of woman kind—and there is considerable of this latter in the picture.

"Fifth Avenue, New York, U. S. A." is the title of a one-reel travel picture. Among the points of interest shown in which are the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, the Metropolitan Museum, the Public Library and the houses in "Millionaires' Row," including the residences of Henry C. Frick and Andrew Carnegie.

An International cartoon and educational split reel subject and Hearst-Pathe News No. 90 and 91 complete this big program.

Cowl Picture Booking Strong in South

While Actress Has Not Appeared There Managers Evidence No Doubt of Her Popularity.

WITH the release of Jane Cowl's first Goldwyn picture, "The Spreading Dawn," from the story by Basil King, the celebrated emotional actress of the speaking stage will be seen for the first time as a star in a number of cities of the South.

What managers of the so-called speaking theaters have declared a Southern predilection for musical comedy and farce has kept Miss Cowl in her tours from being booked south of the Mason and Dixon Line, and Southerners have come to know her only through her great reputation as a favorite in the Northern cities where she has appeared. That these managers were wrong in their estimate of native appreciation is proved in the prompt booking in the South of Miss Cowl's present venture as a picture star. The picture field is utterly independent of the system of booking which brings attractions to the speaking theaters, so no handicap was offered in that direction.

Leading theaters in a number of cities of the South are paying high prices for the privilege of showing "The Spreading Dawn." It is said the degree of expectancy with which patrons are awaiting the new Cowl play thoroughly justifies faith in omnivorous Southern theatergoing taste. Among the theaters in the list are the Rialto, Atlanta; Trianon, New Orleans; Old Mill, Dallas; Grecian, El Paso; Hippodrome, Fort Worth; Queen, Galveston; Queen, Houston; New, Baltimore, Md.

All of these are first-run houses. There are a large number of other theaters that have booked the picture for second and subsequent runs.

In her pleasure over the situation, Miss Cowl feels it is a complete vindication of her long-held belief that Southerners do like something beside stage inanities. It is said that already her managers in the world of the "regular" theater have planned attentative schedule of "dates" through the South.

VICTOR MOORE IN "HOME DEFENSE."

Victor Moore will release, Oct. 22, his latest comedy, written for him by Thos. J. Gray, called "Home Defense?"

Changeyour-Manor is a nice little town, and all the boys there are fond of a good game of cards. This "Indoor Sport" kept many of them up until the wee hours of the morning and, needless to say, their wives grew tired of it. They soon began to investigate the enemy of Orpheus and make for the Good Fellows' Clubhouse, to find the dear husbands in the midst of a very exciting card game. They break it up in double quick time, and husbands are brought homeward. The husbands meet the next night to devise an excuse for staying out late at night, so they decide to form the Changeyour Manor Unit of Home Defense. They figure this will give them a good enough excuse to get out. It does, for the wives fall for it good and proper, and we again find the boys at the "indoor sports." This would have all been very well if the wives hadn't decided to also form a "First Aid Unit." This formed, they decide to go to the Clubhouse to see the dear husbands drill. The husbands get wind of this and immediately they start to get uniforms of any kind and anything that will do for guns. They get policemen, street cleaners, postmen's, and all sort of uniforms for the drill, as the wives arrive. Knowing nothing about drilling the boys start to give an exhibition. They do, and almost get away with it, when Rastus, the ethopian waiter of the club, hearing the boys upstairs, brings up the usual refreshments—all wrong, but he meant well. Seeing the wives, he drops tray and all and rushes out. Needless to say this puts the "kibosh" on the Home Defense League, and leaves the boys in a worse mess than ever. The wives inform their husbands that this drilling stuff is only an excuse to get out nights, and they tell them to try to get in that night. The finish ends up with a lot of excitement, but the husbands win out, through a clever ruse of Vic's.

This comedy is very timely and is full of fast funny action. It gives Moore lots of opportunity, and he is supported by a big cast, including D. L. Don. The comedy is directed by Chester M. De Vonde.

NEW JEWEL MANAGERS.

R. E. Bishop has been appointed Cincinnati manager of Jewel Productions, Inc., succeeding Ralph Peckham. Mr. Bishop has been with the General Film Company in Cleveland, Cincinnati and Columbus in the capacity of booker and assistant manager and was manager for the Mutual Company in Minneapolis. Jewel's Cincinnati office, which is under the general sales management of A. J. Mentz, with headquarters in Cleveland, is located at Room 402, Strand Theater Building.

A. Kaufman has been appointed salesman for the Jewel exchange in Cleveland, having been promoted by Manager A. J. Metz. On his first trip Mr. Kaufman closed some very desirable contracts in Lyria and Lorain on "Sirens of the Sea," the Jewel picture beautiful. Mr. Kaufman was formerly salesman for the General and Unicorn companies and is popular in the trade.

Milton Feld, former Vitagraph man, located in Kansas City, has been appointed Kansas City manager of Jewel Productions, Inc., succeeding M. R. Ward. Mr. Feld is well and favorably known in the film business from which he was forced to retire recently because of an accident from which he is just recovering. The Kansas City Jewel exchange is one of the largest on the entire Jewel list, occuping almost the entire fourth floor in the building at 1025 Main Street, in the center of Kansas City's shopping and theater center. Harry Berman, New York's Jewel manager, is now in Kansas City aiding Mr. Feld in getting started on his new duties and superintending the bookings of important features, including Jewel's "Come Through" and "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," which have just been placed by Jewel at the Columbia for two-week runs.

Lowry Picture Shows Battle Practice

Taken in Canadian Camps, Scenes Should Interest the Many Friends of National Army Men.

A VIVID presentation of what the half million men of the new National Army are doing to make themselves fit soldiers for the United States service in France will soon be flashed before the motion picture patrons of America through the new patriotic photoplay, "For the Freedom of the World," made by Ira M. Lowry, and to be released shortly throughout the world by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

In the course of the story of this patriotic panorama of the present war the hero enlists in the Foreign Legion of Canada —a favorite avenue for red-blooded Americans anxious to see quick and active service in defense of the rights of democracy —and goes through the course of training prescribed by the Allied armies after the most thorough of trials at the actual front.

This means that spectators of "For the Freedom of the World" will not have to be content with the tedious parades, drills and marches which have figured hitherto in "military spectacles" as the only alternative to scenes of battle. Mr. Lowry's production shows all the amazing and fascinating details of actual training in trench warfare through which the members of the new National Army must pass before they can go "over there."

The millions of relatives and friends of the men at the cantonments will be interested in seeing the training through which their dear ones and acquaintances pass, will witness such remarkable sights as a thousand men in a single squad charging up specially constructed inclines of earth and board, bayonetting mimic enemies at the top, leaping down on the other side, racing on over obstacles, leaping barbed wire, bayonetting both erect and crouching figures in "shell holes," and finally "digging in." In addition the new film shows squads practicing trench warfare with genuine as well as dummy hand granades; the "setting up" drills especially designed to train trench muscles; rookie instruction in the manual of arms; methods of defeat or gas-attack; star-shell practice; and a score more of detailed forms of training through which the hero of "For the Freedom of the World" passes before he goes to the front.

"THE WOMAN GOD FORGOT" (Artcraft).

In addition to being a gigantic spectacle, produced upon a scale of magnificence, "The Woman God Forgot" contains many elements of extraordinary interest and presents a number of historical and scientific facts.

Large settings were built, an entire Aztec city having been reproduced showing the pomp and splendor of Montezuma. A pyramid nearly 200 feet high, which constituted the bulwark of defense for the monarch's palace and the temple of the high priest, is seen, and during the thrilling battle which takes place with the Spanish invader, Cortez, and his followers, Aztecs and their foes are hurled from the top of this battlement.

As the daughter of Montezuma, Geraldine Farrar, through love, opens the gates of the city to the invaders, but experiences a change of heart when her father is struck lifeless before her eyes, and springing in the midst of the carnage leads the Aztecs to a combat more spirited than that in "Joan the Woman."

Scene from "The Woman God Forgot" (Artcraft).

The amazement of the natives at sight of the first horses ridden by men is graphically shown, as the Spaniards ride down the Indians.

Impressive sacrificial rites are shown in the temple as Wallace Reid, as Captain Alvarado, is being offered as a human victim to propitiate the war god.

"OVER THERE" ACQUIRED BY SELECT.

Select Picture Corporation has taken over Charles Richman's latest photoplay, "Over There," and is releasing it for immediate distribution through Select Exchanges.

"Over There" is a patriotic photodrama in six reels produced by the Charles Richman Pictures Corporation, with Charles Richman and Anna Q. Nilsson as the stars. The cast, which is a brilliant one, also includes Gertrude Berkeley, who won renown as the mother in "War Brides," and Walter Hiers, who has played the role of jolly fat friend to so many heroes and heroines of screenland.

Scene from "Over There" (Select).

"Over There" is notable for its war scenes, which must take rank with the very best war scenes produced outside of the actual fighting lines. The battle areas in this picture are unusually extensive, and the construction of the trench system was costly. For, instead of the usual few yards of trenches and sandbags, hundreds of feet are covered by a really ramifying system of counter trench work.

These trenches were constructed under the supervision of Lieutenant W. A. O'Hara of the 24th Battalion Canadian Expeditionary Force, who spent seven months in the first line trenches in northern France, and who actively participated in the battles of the Somme from Ypres to Vimy. Lieutenant O'Hara also supervised and ably assisted in the making of the highly effective battle scenes. No picture which has yet been shown to the American public so graphically duplicates the scenic conditions of a battle on the west front as do these battle scenes in "Over There."

"THE SCARLET CAR" (Bluebird).

One of the most widely read of all the books by the late Richard Harding Davis is "The Scarlet Car," the photoplay rights to which have been secured by Bluebird Photoplays, Inc. In preparing the novel for the screen, William Parker has arranged the incidents of the book into a most absorbing and exciting story, filled with tense situations and thrilling action. Production work already has begun under the direction of Joseph De Grasse.

Franklyn Farnum will play the leading role—the carefree son of a newspaper owner in a New England town who, finally realizing what a useless sort of a fellow he is, gets busy and cleans up a supposed murder mystery, and, incidentally, a political row. Al Filson has been engaged especially for an important part in the production, and Edith Johnson will play opposite Mr. Farnum. Others in the cast are Lon Chaney, Sam De Grasse, Jack Francis and Howard Crampton.

"TROUBLE MAKERS," NEXT LEE CHILDREN PICTURE.

The next picture in which Jane and Katherine Lee, William Fox's "Baby Grand" film stars will be seen, has been christened "Trouble Makers," and will be released in the near future.

If ever a photoplay was appropriately titled, this Fox Standard Picture is, according to the reports from the Fox studios, whence come stories of amazing pranks and stunts in which these little film celebrities figured in "Trouble Makers."

There is a strong plot and a virile story in "Trouble Makers," making an excellent background for Jane's and Katherine's comedy. A pleasing romance is unfolded, and a puzzling tragedy mystery cleared up, as the result of a series of pranks perpetrated by the little stars, and its climax carries a punch; but before it is reached a tense story in film has been told. An excellent cast support the Lee children, and the picture, it is predicted, will rank as one of the year's biggest successes. Kenean Buel directed it.

Triangle Production Well Ahead

All Departments of Culver City Plant Working with Maximum Efficiency—Nine Plays Being Filmed.

NINE directors and their companies are at work on new pictures, six plays have been completed and are ready for shipping, and three directors are waiting for new stories at the Triangle Culver City studios, where the fall offensive recently launched is pushing ahead of all former production records. Melodramas, comedy dramas and westerns are on the current production schedule, which includes the work of the most talented scenario authors in the business. Many new players have been added to the already large force at the Culver City studios during the past week and two new directors, Frank Borzage and G. P. Hamilton, have started pictures.

Director Jack Conway has just started work on a modern society drama, "Because of the Woman." The cast includes Belle Bennett, Jack Livingston, Jack Curtis and George Chesebro. Conway's last picture for Triangle was "Doing Her Bit," a patriotic story, in which Ruth Stonehouse was starred.

"The Maternal Spark" is the working title of Director G. P. Hamilton's picture, in which Irene Hunt and Josie Sedgwick have the leading feminine roles. In this picture Triangle will offer something new in the way of a vampire—a vampire with a heart. Other members of the supporting cast include Rowland Lee and Joey Jacobs, the popular child actor. "The Maternal Spark" was adapted for the screen by George du Bois Proctor.

Roy Stewart, Triangle cowboy star, is posing for a new picture, the temporary title of which is "The Learnin' of Jim Benton." The story shows the trials and tribulations of a pretty young school marm in the cow country. Fritzi Ridgeway, who supported George Hernandez in "Up or Down?" has the leading feminine role, and the cast includes such western favorites as Walter Perry, Joseph Bennett, Curley Baldwin, Ed Brady and fifty cowboys. The famous O'Neil cattle ranch, near Oceanside, California, the largest ranch of its kind in the Southwest, and Triangle's ranch studio at Hartville, in the Santa Monica mountains, furnished the locale for the picture.

Director Raymond Wells is making repad progress on his latest picture, "Fanatics," in which J. Barney Sherry has the leading male role. It is a story of frenzied finance and socialism with a strong human interest appeal. Adda Gleason, Olga Grey, William V. Mong, Donald Fullen and Eugene Burr are well-known players in the cast. Director Wells' last picture, "Fighting Back," featuring William Desmond, has been shipped east.

Desmond has about completed his latest vehicle, "Gentility," a sentimental Irish drama, which is being directed by Thomas N. Heffron. In this Desmond enacts the role of a genial village blacksmith, transplanted from the Auld Sod to a mansion in Chicago by the death of his rich uncle. The clumsy yokel's attempt to play "Lord of the Manor" are said to be very humorous. In the end, of course, he essays "pure gold." Desmond is supported by Mary McIvor, Jack Richardson and Jessie Hallett.

"Bearing Her Cross" is the temporary title of the new story begun by Director E. Mason Hopper, in which Margery Wilson will be starred. It is a story of a weak young man driven to bigamy by the constant oppression of his religious and intolerant father. Miss Wilson is supported by the veteran character actor, Walt Whitman. Laura Sears and Darrell Foss are also members of the supporting cast.

Director William Gittens has nearly completed his sea-drama, which features a sensational fight between a mutinous crew and a blackguard captain while the ship burns to the water. A thread of mystery and love runs throughout this picture, the temporary title of which is "Everlasting Mercy." It promises some unusual photography.

Featuring Alma Reubens, Director Walter Edwards has just started work on "The Passion Flower," whose scenes are laid among the peasants of France and Italy and in the Latin quarter of Paris. P. McCaskill, whose travels in Europe and India have made him familiar with foreign customs, is in charge of the settings. Miss Reubens will be supported by Francis McDonald and W. L. (Babe) Lawrence, newcomers to Triangle.

Frank Borzage, latest addition to the Triangle directing force, will begin work this week on a mystery story of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, called "The Seventh of September." Directors Ferris Hartman, Lynn F. Reynolds and Jack Dillon, who has just completed "Indiscreet Corinne," starring Olive Thomas, are waiting for stories.

The Triangle productions now on hand and ready for shipment include "Regenerates," featuring George Hernandez; "Corinne," with Olive Thomas in the leading role; "The Fuel of Life," starring Belle Bennett; "Easy Money," featuring Charles Gunn, and "The Medicine Man," starring Roy Stewart.

"BY THE SEA" (Essanay).

The next Essanay Chaplin release, "By the Sea," is one of the funniest of the early comedies on which the famous comedian built up his reputation. At the time of its original release, it proved one of the most popular of the Chaplin series, and is sure of a warm reception on its return engagement. It has a screen time of 25 minutes and will be released through the General Film Company, Nov. 10.

"SUNSHINE ALLEY" CHAMPIONS DUMB ANIMALS.

"Sunshine Alley," the new Goldwyn photoplay starring Mae Marsh, has the distinction of being probably the first screen champion of the Society of Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. In this play, which has for its setting a little animal and bird store run by an aged lover of living things, there is provided an object lesson in befriending dumb creatures that has no parallel. The visualizing power of the screen, the human sympathy of the story, the force of good acting, and the excellence of the Goldwyn production made by Jack Noble, with Everett Shinn, the famous illustrator, in charge of settings, provides an attraction that is as beautiful as it is useful.

At a time when many of the "purposes" of the screen plays are bound up in problems of sex this new element comes as a welcome relief. Besides it is calculated to do a vast amount of good.

ASSOCIATED THEATERS, INC., ACTIVE.

The board of directors of "Associated Theaters, Inc.," held a three days' session in Minneapolis last week, and elected the following officers to serve sixty-five days until the first general meeting of stockholders, Dec. 17, 1917:

President—H. L. Hartman of the New Palace theater, Mandan, N. Dak.

Vice-President—Wm. S. Smith of the Orpheum and Grand theaters, Menominee, Wis.

Treasurer—Henry P. Greene of the Lake, New Lake and East Lake theaters of Minneapolis, and Hamline theater of St. Paul.

Chairman of the Board of Directors—Chas. W. Gates of the Bijou theater, Aberdeen, S. Dak.

Secretary and General Manager—T. J. Hamlin of Minneapolis.

The Bankers Trust and Savings Bank of Minneapolis was made trustee of the funds and also the depository for the organizing fund. All the moneys already received from exhibitors for stock was turned over to this bank, and the bank is pledged to return 80 per cent. of this money to the individual exhibitors if the organization is not completed with six hundred theaters by February 28, 1918.

It was decided to incorporate under the laws of Minnesota and to strictly comply with the most stringent rules of the Federal Trade Commission and the various state "Blue sky" boards.

NEXT MARY PICKFORD-ARTCRAFT PICTURE, NOVEMBER 5.

The release date of Mary Pickford's latest vehicle, "The Little Princess," has been set for November 5. The story is from the book by Frances Hodgson Burnett, and was adapted to the screen by Frances Marion and directed by Marshall Neilan.

In "The Little Princess," as Sara Crewe, Mary Pickford lives with her father in India and later goes to a girls' fashionable boarding school in London, where she entertains her fellow pupils with Oriental tales, which are shown on the screen. Later, when reverses overtake her, she becomes a scullery maid in the same establishment, subjected to cruelty and indignities by a shrewish and hypocritical matron.

"A BOARDING HOUSE BATTLE" (Three C Comedy).

Action of the sort which should prove particularly attractive to the large number of followers of the sprightly Three C Comedies, released through General Film Company, is to be found in more than usual quantity and quality in the current release, "A Boarding House Battle." Lou Marks, Pearl Shepard and Oom Paul are featured in this one-reel romp. This is the fifth of the series of comedies being produced by the Commonwealth Comedy Company and is by far the best work yet done in these new pictures by the trio of comedy stars.

Helen Gibson in Railroad Drama

Lena Baskette, Neal Hart, Vivian Rich and Other Favorites on Universal Schedule for October 22.

A RAILROAD drama of absorbing interest, titled "The End of the Run," is the Gold Seal release which opens the week's Universal program on October 23. Helen Gibson is the featured player and the story, which was written by T. Shelley Sutton and prepared for the screen by George Hively, is just the right kind to display the star's unusual talent as an exponent of film melodrama. J. D. Davis directed the production, and Val Paul, O. C. Jackson and George Williams are prominent in the cast. The story deals with the crooked operations of Giles Stafford, a brakeman on Jim Durman's train, who makes a hobo divide a quantity of counterfeit money with him for the privilege of riding on the train. He has been rebuffed by Noma Durman, Jim's daughter, but not until after he has found out that Jim, distrusting banking institutions, keeps all his money in a fruit jar. He breaks into Jim's house and, stealing the money from the jar, substitutes counterfeit bills. Jim passes some of the bad money and is consequently under suspicion. Stafford's guilt is discovered by Nona, who sets out on horseback to overtake his train and capture him. And she does it, while the audience gasps.

A Nestor comedy, "A Fire Escape Finish," from the pen of Fred Palmer and directed by Harry Edwards, and which features Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, is released on the same date. It is a riotous story of an elopement, culminating in a wedding on a fire escape while the jealous rival dangles helpless from the ladder.

Universal Animated Weekly, No. 95, is released Wednesday, October 24. That is also the release date of a two-reel L-Ko Comedy, "Fat and Furious," directed by Vin Moore and supervised by J. G. Blystone. Merta Sterling and Al Forbes are the leading fun makers in this uproarious farce which mingles the liveliest kind of comedy with a chapter of thrills which would do credit to a serial melodrama.

Lena Baskette is the star of the feature for Wednesday, October 25. "Little Marian's Triumph" is the title of the play in which she will appear. Written by J. B. Shillingford and Nan Blair, and produced by Marshall Steadman, the story concerns itself with the eventful career of a child with a marked genius for dancing, which at last find expression despite many handicaps. Lena is supported by many experienced players, including Fred Montague, Lydia Yeamans Titus and Walter Belasco.

On the same day William Franey and Gale Henry will romp through a Joker comedy, entitled "The Tightwad," written by Tom Gibson and Allen Curtis. Gale Henry as the dutiful wife gives her penny-pinching spouse an object lesson in loosening up that should be good for many hearty guffaws.

On Friday, October 26, Henry Murdock and Mildred Davis will appear in a Victor comedy of errors known as "What'll We Do With Uncle?" Written by King Vidor and directed by W. W. Beaudin, this production has many telling little bits of human interest, in addition to a number of wildly amusing situations. The 42d issue of the Screen Magazine will make its appearance on the same date.

Max Asher and Gladys Tennyson are the featured players of "A Wise Dummy," the Joker comedy to be released Saturday, October 27. Some striking serial stunts lift this slapstick farce above the usual comic offering. The 24th issue of Current Events, devoted to the latest happenings in the world of work and play is also scheduled for release on that date.

Neal Hart and Vivian Rich will co-star in a two-reel Bison drama called "The Getaway," written by Alice McGowan and Harriet B. Brandner and directed by George Cochrane. A tense western thriller, this tabloid feature has enough action packed into it to insure satisfaction to any wideawake audience.

During the week the second episode of "The Red Ace," Universal's big outdoor mystery serial, will be shown in theaters outside of Greater New York. It will be entitled "The Lure of the Unattainable," and carries Jacques Jaccard's breath-catching story well along on its dramatic way.

FINE CAST CHOSEN FOR ELTINGE PICTURE.

From all accounts "The Clever Mrs. Carfax," Paramount's second picture starring Julian Eltinge, will be even a greater success with the screen public than was his first, "The Countess Charming." The cast includes Daisy Robinson, Noah Beery, Rosita Martini, Jenny Lee, Fred Church, Mrs. Wise and Frank DeShon. Th direction was in the hands of Donald Crisp. The story is by Hector Turnbull, with Gardner Hunting.

"The Clever Mrs. Carfax" is full of mystery, thrills, suspense and fun, and in the course of the picture Julian Eltinge makes about 40 changes of costume from masculine to feminine and back again.

MUTUAL WEEKLY CHANGES ITS RELEASE DATE.

In order that it may reach the public at the earliest possible moment, the release date of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly has been changed from Wednesday to Sunday. This change becomes effective at once, and Mutual Weekly No. 147 will be released on Sunday, October 21. Reel Life, the Gaumont-Mutual screen magazine, will continue to be released on Thursdays, as heretofore.

FIRST PETROVA PICTURE, "DAUGHTER OF DESTINY."

Petrova Picture Company has announced that the name of the first Petrova Picture will be "Daughter of Destiny."

The selection of this long-awaited title was made after a series of tests which, in the opinion of Madame Petrova and Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrova Picture Company, assures its popularity with both exhibitors and the public.

The method by which "Daughter of Destiny" was chosen is unique in the art of selecting motion picture titles. Twenty-five titles were proposed—some by Madame Petrova and her staff, some by the officers of Petrova Picture Company and the remainder by officers of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, through the exchanges of which "Daughter of Destiny" is to be distributed. A list of these titles were then submitted to the members of the Circuit, with the request that each select what he considered the most appealing and attention-getting title. "Daughter of Destiny" was chosen by a large majority—and since its selectors are men who know the box-office value of a good title, Petrova Picture Company believes that another important step has been accomplished to make its pictures not only artistic successes but money-makers for the men who exhibit them.

"Daughter of Destiny" is now completed, and Director George Irving is cutting and titling it. At a private showing arranged by Mr. Collins for Mr. Rothapfel and other officers of the Circuit, Madame Petrova was warmly congratulated, and it was enthusiastically predicted that the picture would fulfil every promise made for it.

HAYAKAWA IN ROLE OF AMERICAN SPY.

Why could not the United States, with the co-operation of her ally, Japan, ship a couple of million men across the Pacific to the Russian front, there surprising and overwhelming the Germans?

That, in a sentence, is the underlying plot of "The Secret Game," which will afford Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese star, the greatest vehicle of his career. It will be a Paramount release of the near future. It is a story of the present international situation, having to do with a possibility that might easily become an actuality, and yet it is not, in the ordinary sense of the term, a "war" picture.

Hayakawa has a role that, while it will fit him perfectly, is quite different from any of his recent characterizations—that of Nara-Nara, the famous Japanese secret service detective. In the beginning the star objected, because he thought the role was to be that of a spy. But when he found that he was to be a detective in the service of the American Government, he altered his mind and was delighted with the opportunity it afforded him.

The story is by Marion Fairfax. William C. DeMille directed the production with his accustomed skill. Cameraman Charles Rosher, it is said, has outdone himself in securing effects that are distinctly novel and at times beautiful.

ONE ON THE SHAVETAIL.

Several of the extra men who are appearing in the munition plant scene in Marguerite Clark's forthcoming Paramount picture, "Bab's Matinee Idol," are attired as American soldiers, minus the insignia, of course, and other distinguishing marks. A near-sighted officer who had scraped through the exams came by the studio recently and espied several of the performers leaning against the wall smoking cigarettes. He came over and was about to reprimand them for not saluting him when he discovered his mistake. What he said further is not recorded.

"THE SAVAGE" (Bluebird).

Bluebird No. 100 has been selected by Managing Director Carl Laemmle to inaugurate the Bluebird season at the Broadway theater, New York. Its title is "The Savage," a vigorous story of the Canadian Northwest, writen by Elliott J. Clawson and previously referred to as "Julio Sandoval." The star is Ruth Clifford and her leading man, Monroe Salisbury, will be featured in her support. The Broadway theater engagement is a pre-release, the scheduled date being November 19.

Rupert Julian directed the production as his third contribution to a series of particularly effective Bluebirds that will be featured on the program. The presence of Monroe Salisbury in Miss Clifford's support is an item of importance to exhibitors, for the reason that Bluebird believes that he will become a real box-office attraction; a "ticket seller" to the fair sex who are sure to make him a "matinee idol."

Miss Clifford and Mr. Salisbury form a rare screen combination. They appear together for the first time in "The Desire of the Moth" (Bluebird for October 22),and their presentation of "The Savage" seems very likely to mean money to the box-office if Salisbury is "played up" in the exhibitors' advertising. Another feature that may be "boosted" to advantage is the beautiful scenery, reflecting the grandeurs of the mountains and foothills near Seven Oaks, Cal., where Director Julian filmed the production. The photography, of the usual Bluebird clearness, has caught the majestic surroundings with remarkable fidelity.

TAYLOR HOLMES IN NEW DRAMA.

Taylor Holmes, formed noted stage comedian, now being featured by Essanay in five-reel comedy dramas, has returned to Chicago after a trip to New York and is at work on his fifth picture, "Uneasy Money," a five-part comedy drama adapted to the screen from the Saturday Evening Post story of that title by Pelham Grenville Wodehouse.

Mr. Holmes takes the part of an English lord in this new effort, and the script affords unusual opportunity for his subtle style of humor.

The picture will be released early in December, following "Two Bit Seats," "The Small Town Guy," Mr. Holmes' latest productions. "Fools for Luck," Mr. Holmes' second picture was released October 8.

"RETREAT OF GERMANS" FOR GENERAL DISTRIBUTION.

The announcement by Pathe that "The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras," the latest of the Official British Government Pictures of the War to be received in this country, will shortly be available for distribution through the various Pathe Exchanges, has created much interest among exhibitors throughout the country. "The Retreat of the Germans," it will be remembered, was booked by the B. F. Keith and allied circuits for a record price of over a quarter of a million. That the "Big Time" vaudeville circuit found these war pictures a very profitable feature of their programs is evidenced by letters sent to Captain Baynes of the Official Government Pictures, Inc., by Martin Beck, managing director of the Orpheum Circuit, and E. F. Albee, vice-president of the B. F. Keith circuit of theaters.

SHOWS OPERATION OF AEROPLANE GUNS.

J. F. Leventhal, with the co-operation of Waldemar Kaempffert, editor of Popular Science Monthly, in a forthcoming Pictograph, illustrates the operation of the aeroplane gun, one of the big factors in the present war.

DAINTY BILLIE IN "A TWO-CYLINDER COURTSHIP."

Billie Rhodes, dainty little Billie of pretty frocks and dainty gowns, gets all smeared up with grease in "A Two-Cylinder Courtship," the one-reel Mutual Strand comedy set for release October 30.

Scene from "A Two-Cylinder Courtship" (Mutual).

Billie makes an alluring mechanician, garbed in overalls, with great gobs of grease from ear to ear. The flivver of ancient vintage which she crawls beneath responds to her tinkering and ambles down the road. Miss Rhodes is starred in a new series of Mutual comedies, released each week. She is supported by Jay Belasco and an able cast.

"A DAUGHTER OF MARYLAND" WITH EDNA GOODRICH.

Edna Goodrich, who has scored a heavy box office sucess in "Reputation" and "Queen X," the first of her series of pictures for Mutual, comes to the screen in "A Daughter of Maryland," the third Mutual on October 29.

"A Daughter of Maryland" was produced under the direction of John B. O'Brien, the well known director, from the story by Samuel Morse. The story was written especially for Miss Goodrich and scenarioized by John F. Poland. Star, director and author have gotten 100 per cent. results.

Miss Goodrich is wonderfully cast. She is superb as the high spirited, independent young southern woman. She carries the role from first reel to last with grace and ease. She puts into the picture those little touches which have distinguished her work on the stage. She has done "A Daughter of Maryland" so well that it will rank with the best of her work on either stage or screen.

Scene from "A Daughter of Maryland" (Mutual).

The story deals with the affairs of Major Treadway, a Marylander of family and estate, and the love affairs of his daughter Beth. Beth is won from hatred to love by the Yankee landscape gardener who has been engaged to convert the gardens of Headland Hall from an uncouth wood into fairyland of shrubs and flowers. The legend of "the black ghost" lends mystery and action to the story and makes it fascinating as well as romantic.

Four November Metros

Important Subjects Feature Misses Wehlen, Stevens and Barrymore and Co-Stars Bushman and Bayne —Also New Comedies.

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION will release four important features in the month of November, with Emmy Wehlen, Emily Stevens, the co-stars Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, and Ethel Barrymore appearing in the order named. These four productions will be among the most elaborate issued by the company this season.
